Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President, to proceed. I assume that I will be charged with trying to talk this bill to death as I have been before. That is not true, I only want to have the facts understood. Again, the Senate agreed upon a duty on bar-iron not less than three-quarters of an inch in diameter, and square iron not more than three-quarters of an inch square of $20 per ton, and upon round iron less than three-quarters of an inch square of $22 per ton the conferees have increased that tax from $20 per ton in the one instance to $22.40 per ton, and in the other from $22 a ton to $24.64 per ton; the original rates were fixed by the Senate with the aid and by the vote of the Senator from Ohio, one of the conferees. We had a right to suppose that he would adhere to his own votes, yet after so voting and advocating the lower rates, saying that his friend from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] was right in imposing these rates, he now turns round in secret conference and imposes upon all the iron rolled, hammered, or otherwise advanced an additional tax of $2.40 a ton upon one class and $2.64 upon the other.

Again, Mr. President, passing on to another clause, light steel rails, of which there is a very large importation, to wit, a class of rails used for street-railways, tramways, narrow-gauge roads, and inclined planes, in short all that class of rails generally used by the smaller and poorer corporations, by the municipal authorities, or by individuals, of which the importation last year was $2,658,997 in value and the revenue $1,414,910, the Senate of the United States imposed a duty of eight-tenths of a cent per pound upon all that class of goods, or $17.92 per ton. I have not had an opportunity of examining what the House did in that regard, if their bill is to be considered. It seems to be worthy of consideration according to the chairman's view whenever the conferees think they find some excuse for their conduct by referring to what the House has done, and claim that the House had no bill when they increase taxes beyond what either House imposed.

Mr. MAXEY. The committee reported that class of bars weighing less than twenty-five pounds to the yard at $21 per ton. On full deliberation and discussion in the Senate it was reduced to $17.92 per ton or eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound. That was reduced by the Senate after a discussion.

Mr. BECK. Under the present law iron bars for inclined planes, as the official statement in my hand shows, the rate is seven-tenths of a cent a pound or 53 per cent. ad valorem. The Tariff Commission proposed seven-tenths of a cent a pound and the Senate imposed a tax of eight-tenths of a cent a pound. This so-called conference committee taxed them above what the Tariff Commission reported, above the present law, above the action of the Senate. They have divided the paragraph into two parts and placed nine-tenths of a cent a pound upon a portion of them, increasing them from $17.92 per ton to $20.16, and upon the balance of them, where they are punched, to 1 cent a pound or $22.40 per ton.

Upon a portion of these goods they make an increase of $2.24 a ton and upon the balance there is an increase of $4.60; and this, though the Senate proposition for taxation upon all this class of articles was higher than the present law and higher than the Tariff Commission report. In this miserable sham conference, after all we have done, on articles that were imported last year to the value of $2,658,977, paying a revenue of $1,414,910, they make an increase of $2.24 a ton on half and of $4.60 upon the other half, without any reason that I can see unless it is to pile up burdens still higher upon every man or corporation that sees fit to build a street railway, a tramway, or anything of the sort. Yet we are asked to set aside the Senate bill and agree to a report full of such monstrosities, which they seek to pass, as though it was an improvement upon what we had done. We are told it makes slight modifications, that there is hardly anything increased, and the yeas and nays were about to be taken as a matter of course, as though it would be an obstruction of public business and would prevent the people from getting the benefit of the invaluable services of this conference if anybody dared to object to it. I suppose I shall be lectured by the distinguished Senators for having the audacity to expose the misdeeds of that august conclave.

That is not all. I have not had a chance to go through the report thoroughly, because we did not have it more than twenty minutes before we were called on to pass upon it at once, time was said to be so precious.

I will pass over a good many of the changes they have made without comment. They have increased the tax on boiler-iron, on line 569, $2.20 a ton. They have increased the tax upon polished, planished, or glanced sheet-iron or sheet-steel $11.20 a ton, although that matter was twice carefully considered; and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] at last read documents to prove that that class of iron ought to be reduced to 2 cents per pound. It was reduced on his recommendation, and yet the conferees have put it up again, taxing it $11.20 a ton more, and inserting a proviso which I have not time to consider carefully, but it means mischief. Let me read it to the Senate. It is a new proviso inserted by them:

Provided, That plate or sheet or taggers iron, by whatever name designated, other than the polished, planished, or glanced herein provided for, which has been pickled or cleaned by acid, or by any other material or process, and which is cold-rolled, shall pay one-quarter cent per pound more duty than the corresponding gauges of common or black sheet or taggers iron.

We struck that proviso out after deliberate consideration in the Senate, or in committee, because it was shown that all that iron had to be rolled, and the imposition of that additional tax was such a wrong that not one of these gentlemen dared to urge its adoption in the Senate; it was stricken out, as the debate will show, on proof by gentlemen on this floor that the proviso ought not to be retained. Yet when they get themselves in secret conclave, and with nobody to contradict or expose them, and their report has to be voted on as a whole, because a portion, however vicious or corrupt, if you please, can not be stricken out without defeating the whole measure, they make a bill to suit themselves and their friends. Knowing that there are so many things in the bill that so many men are interested in, they trust that the Senate can not afford to defeat their report.

Skipping a good many things, I come now to a matter that attracted my attention the moment my eye rested upon it, because it is a subject that the Senate thoroughly understands. The Senator from Ohio, as the Senate will remember, near the close of the discussion brought before us a new amendment to the iron schedule. He presented it on a Saturday morning. I rose to oppose it and said that I did not quite comprehend the full extent and effect of it, but I thought I could find out if I had time allowed me until Monday morning. There were funeral ceremonies to be held at 5 o'clock that day and it went over. I had examined it before it was called up on Monday, and when it was understood that the proposition of the Senator from Ohio was to increase the duties on all steel not otherwise enumerated from the present rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem to 45 per cent. ad valorem; that it sought to change the duties on all the classes of Bessemer steel however made, whether by the pneumatic, Thomas-Gilchrist, basic, Siemens-Martin, or any other process imposing a tax of 45 per cent. upon a certain grade, changing classifications and adding to the duties on them by indirect methods, the Senate refused to accept his amendments. Upon a full, fair, and free discussion in this body and an explanation of the effect of his propositions we defeated him in his efforts to tax steel 45 per cent. and held it at 30. We defeated the proposed increase to 45 per cent. duty upon Bessemer steel and made it 40. We kept him from raising the duty on crucible steel and changing the classification in the way he proposed, greatly to the disgust of the Senator from Ohio. Yet after that defeat, perhaps smarting under it, wanting to take revenge on the country and on the Senate, he goes into this so-called conference committee and has restored in this report every provision that the Senate had voted down after full debate when he sought to impose them upon us. In the amendments that I have exhibited from this conference report he has placed all the manufactures of steel at the points I have indicated. I say he; I speak of the Senator from Ohio, because he is the leader of this movement in courage and audacity and intellect. I know who drove the conference; I see the tracks though he does not sign the report; I know who had iron ore and pig-iron increased. It is a Sherman-Mahone tariff now, as to all the paragraphs in the iron schedule.

Senators will observe that in the report all our action in the Senate as to steel is overthrown and the defeated proposition of the Senator from Ohio is substituted. I never knew a more insolent, not to say insulting, proposition made by one member of a body to the body that has trusted him with power and ordered him to maintain its position. There was no House disagreeing vote to meet or combat the wishes of the Senate, and the rights of the people were simply disregarded and the private wishes and interests of the conferees consulted. Let me read from the report:

All of the above classes of steel not otherwise specially provided for in this act, valued at 4 cents a pound or less, 45 per cent. ad valorem; above 4 cents a pound and not above 7 cents per pound, 2 cents per pound; valued above 7 cents and not above 10 cents per pound, 2½ cents per pound; valued at above 10 cents per pound, 3½ cents per pound.

"Forty-five" is substituted for "40," "4 cents" for "5," "7" for "9"—in short all our work is disregarded. I explained the effects of the proposed amendments on the 20th of February, and can not better show the effect of the report than by reading now what I said then:

Now, the Senator from Ohio proposes upon all steel embraced in this class—"Above 4 cents a pound and not above 7 cents, 2 cents per pound."

Therefore his proposition is to add $22.40 a ton on all that class of steel valued at over 4 and not over 5 cents a pound. That, I expect, embraces a large class of steel used in this country, or why the proposed change in classification? Yet we were told on Friday night that there was to be no increase on the lower grades by the amendment. I have read the lines fixing 1 cent a pound on all these steels made by the Bessemer process as agreed to in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate. The Senator from Ohio has changed the classification. Why, I do not know, except to suit the iron-masters. He has changed it so as to put $22.40 a ton additional upon all that class of Bessemer steel that is valued not above 5 cents and above 4. Why that was done perhaps he can explain.

What next does he do? The Senate bill in the lines that he last proposes to strike out as to crucible cast-steel ingots and these other matters, makes this provision:

"Crucible cast-steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, and slabs, &c., valued at 5 cents per pound or less, 1½ cents per pound."

The Senator from Ohio promises whenever it is valued at over 4 cents to make that crucible steel pay 2 cents per pound, so that on that class of goods he adds $11.20 per ton; and on all that is valued between 4 and 5 cents a pound by a change of classification, $22.40 per ton on the lower grades of Bessemer steel by striking out the lines he first proposed to strike out; and now by the lines he last proposes to strike out and the valuation that he puts and the tax he imposes $11.20 a ton on all crucible steel valued between 4 and 5 cents per pound. That is the next step.

What next does he do? The Senate provided that upon all crucible cast-steel valued at 5 cents and not above 9 cents per pound, the tax should be 2 cents per pound; valued at above 9 cents per pound, 2¼ cents per pound. That is the maximum with only two classifications above 5 cents. What does the Senator from Ohio propose? On steel valued at from 4 to 7 cents a pound, 2 cents a pound; from 7 to 11, 2¼ cents a pound; and from 11 up, 3½ cents a pound.

I have shown that he has put $22.40 a ton by the change of classification on the lower grades of Bessemer steel; that he has put $11.20 a ton on the grades of crucible steel valued between 4 and 5 cents, and he now proposes to change the duty on that valued from 4 to 7 cents to 2 cents a pound, the Senate having placed it from 5 to 9 at 2 cents a pound, he proposes from 7 to 11 to fix the rate at 2¼ cents a pound. In other words, he increases three-fourths of a cent a pound or $16.80 a ton upon all that grade of steel valued at from 7 and not more than 9 cents a pound, and there is where another large importation is made, as you will see if you look at the tables. Sixteen dollars and eighty cents per ton over the Senate bill is proposed upon all steel with from 7 to 9 cents a pound, and then he makes a classification we have not made at all, because from 9 up we made all at 2¼ cents, and he makes it from 7 to 11, 2¼ cents; and from 11 up, 3½ cents. So that upon all steel of all sorts valued at above 9 cents a pound he adds $16.80 per ton.

How many millions that adds to the taxes of this people I do not know. It is all done for the benefit of a very few establishments in Pittsburgh and elsewhere, whose owners confess that they drew this bill, and who are now seeking to urge Senators to defeat it unless they add to its already onerous taxation all they want.

I showed during that debate what would be the effect of an increase on steel from 30 to 45 per cent. I will again read from my speech of that date:

I have looked over it since Saturday, and I will state how I understand this amendment will leave the bill if adopted. The clause as to "steel not specially enumerated or provided for in this act" is to be delayed for a few minutes, but it is part of the amendment. Steel not otherwise provided for under the existing law now pays 30 per cent. ad valorem. Under that the importations for the year 1882 amounted in value to $5,742,512, and the duty paid was $1,723,352. The Senator from Ohio now proposes to increase this tax to 45 per cent.

Though we defeated all his propositions then, he has them in such a shape now that we can not even get a separate vote on them, though he could not insert them after discussion in the Senate. He can do it in secret, though defeated when Senators representing States and tax-payers could meet him face to face in fair debate.

I stated further in February:

If the same value of imports continue, the duty that he proposes to impose would be $2,584,930, or an increase of duties on the same value of goods of $761,578; and of course all the products of this country, which is perhaps six times as much as the imports, or perhaps ten times as much, will be increased in the same ratio. In other words, 50 per cent. is to be added to the duties now imposed by law, by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, upon all steel not otherwise provided for in this act which is consumed in this country, whether made at home or abroad.

Substantially the same presentation was made by the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Texas, and perhaps by other Senators, the Senator from North Carolina, I have no doubt, though I do not recollect that he participated in regard to that item, but he was always ready and able, and I assume he took part in it. I know the Senator from Delaware did; in short, the Senate rejected all the amendments of the Senator from Ohio which he has now put into this conference report. I say it requires an audacity that few men possess to insert into a conference report every defeated amendment after the exposure that was made as to the effect of the increased taxation upon the people, and ask us to accept it or tell the country that we shall be responsible for the defeat of this bill without even venturing a word of explanation or deigning to tell us that a majority of the House conferees even asked to have it done. I hardly think they did.

I shall vote against this report for this among other causes. It is made up against the interest of the people of this country, against the will of both Houses of Congress. I have shown that as to steel rails the taxation imposed is beyond what either House voted; I have shown that as to iron ore that the two Houses had agreed, and yet 50 per cent. more taxation is sought to be imposed and hundreds of thousands of dollars added by this conference committee to the burdens of the people. I propose to vote against it, and my word for it, if this report could be defeated we should tell the House of Representatives, as we truly can, that "we have sent you a better bill in our amendment than this conference report proposes. You had far better vote for the Senate amendments that your leaders would not allow you even a chance to concur with us in, believing that they would frame in secret a worse bill than the Senate had sent; they knew that they would satisfy the pig-iron men and the great manufacturing monopolists of the country better than the action of the Senate would if we reject this conference report as we ought to do because of the outrageous provisions in it," my word for it, the House to-morrow morning will demand a right to vote upon the question of concurring in the amendments originally sent them by the Senate which are now upon their table, and will say to their conferees as I now say to ours, "You have transcended your duty in seeking to impose taxes upon this people beyond what either House had demanded." That House will take up the Senate bill to-morrow morning and in spite of its defects and of the high-protective monopolists, will pass it before high noon to-morrow as an improvement upon this report and a bill infinitely better than this is.

If we force upon the House of Representatives by voting for this conference report a bill that is made worse wherever it has been touched, that is not improved anywhere, and deprive them of the right which they have never yet had of voting upon the amended bill we originally sent them, we are simply joining hands with these monopolists in forcing a worse bill upon the House of Representatives than is now upon their table, that they can vote for in half an hour after we reject this. I intend to be no party to any such coercion upon the House, and submit to no such dictation here as this report attempts.

Why, Mr. President, look for a moment at the sugar schedule. What have they done with it? If I were to take up this report in detail I could scarcely expose one-half of its enormities before Congress expired. The chairman said just now in his blandest way that a slight increase of tax had been imposed on sugar between No. 13 and No. 16; that the refiners wanted more than they had got, but he thought the committee of conference had done reasonably well for them. What do they do? Without touching any other item in the sugar schedule they provide:

All sugar above No. 13 and not above No. 16 Dutch standard, 2.75 cents per pound.

Or $2.75 per one hundred pounds. The Senate had made the duty on that 2.50 cents. The Senate indeed had voted for 2.40 by a vote taken by yeas and nays of nearly 40 to less than 20, according to my recollection. It was first reported before the change at 2.65. The sugar refiners never publicly asked for more than 2.65. They thought 2.50 was too low; they feared the low tariff on foreign sugars would destroy their monopoly. There might be competition from abroad at 2.50 and they begged for 2.65. The Senate voted for 2.40 on a call of the yeas and nays after full debate by an overwhelming majority. Recollect that the sugars between No. 13 and No. 16 Dutch standard are the table sugars of this country, the only sugars in which the mass of consumers have a direct interest. All the other grades go to the refiner. Thirteen to 16 are the sugars people can use in spite of the refiners and without his aid, and that the plain people do use. Two sixty-five one hundredths was all the refiners asked that ever I heard of, and I believe I have now in my pocket a dozen dispatches when they thought I was to be on the conference committee, begging for 2.65. I do not care to read the names of the men, but here they are; Senators can look at them. The conference committee have made it 2.75 cents per pound.

That is simply giving the sugar-refiners the monopoly of the sugar business of the country. If not done on purpose, it was done at the dictation of large sugar-refiners whom I can name. It is the worst outrage in this bill. No man can justify it. You will observe that under the existing law there are hardly any importations of sugar above No. 13. Turn to the schedule again and look at it; but I have looked at that so often that I may as well assume that the Senate understands it. If necessary I will hand the figures to the Reporter.

All the sugar that is imported substantially comes in under No. 13, and this increase from 2½ to 2¾ cents a pound gives to the sugar-refiner an absolute monopoly of the sugar in this country and imposes burdens upon the many who consume sugar all over America of millions upon millions of dollars. This is done exactly in the same spirit that the other high taxes were imposed, to build up great monopolies at the expense both of the revenue and of the consumers of the country.

The refiners desired an increase from 2.50 to 2.65. Of course they would ask for 3; they would ask for anything; but 2.75, an increase of 25 cents on the 100 pounds on that grade of sugar, is nothing more nor less than a proposition in the interest of the absolute monopoly of sugar-refiners. There is not a man on the conference committee who will venture to rise in his place and defend this action in the face of the debates we had, in the face of the votes we took, and he will not dare to say that he either did or would have ventured upon this floor to have proposed to impose a tax on sugar graded from No. 13 to No. 16 at 2.75 cents. The Senator from Vermont himself begged me to make it 2.50, declaring publicly that 2.50 was satisfactory to him after we had voted the tax at 2.40. Many of my friends on this side of the Chamber who had voted for 2.40 with me were quite annoyed when I begged them to yield to the urgent request of the Senator from Vermont, as perhaps we had put it a little too low at 2.40. I remember well that the Senator from Texas was not very much pleased at the change being consented to.

Now, sir, notwithstanding the Senator from Vermont did not venture to ask us to go above 2.50 and no sugar refiner ever pretended that he could decently ask us to go above 2.65, and all the telegrams I received when they thought I was to be a member of the committee said that 2.65 was all they would ask, the Senator from Vermont and his confrères on the committee give them 2.75, making their monopoly absolute, making them masters of the sugar business of America, and putting every sugar consumer absolutely at their mercy; yet the chairman of the conference calls with apparent confidence on the representatives of the people and the States to adopt and sanction that among other outrages. I propose to be as respectful as I can be consistent with truth, but if any milder word than robbery of the people to enrich already gorged monopolists will express my opinion I do not at this moment recall it. The conferees give the refiners one-fourth of a cent a pound on all the sugar consumed in this country by excluding competition. The combination of refiners, of course, charge the people one-quarter of a cent more than they could under our bill. The sugar consumed annually exceeds 2,000,000,000 pounds, worth over $85,000,000. This robbery or rather sneaking larceny of one-quarter of a cent a pound from the people is a gift, in defiance of our often expressed will, of over $5,000,000. That alone ought to condemn this report and the men who seek to force it upon us if all else was right.

I can not follow the details of this miserable fraud further; my voice is gone and I am suffering; but I made a speech on the 25th of January in this presence. I have never been deceived about this bill. I then said I desired to make a record and place it where the people of this country should see it; that in the next presidential campaign, if you please, when the Senator from Ohio perhaps may be the opposing candidate to the Democratic nominees—I do not think the Senator from Vermont has any aspirations—I wanted to have a record made of what was done, as I knew we should at last have a worse bill imposed upon us than either House desired. I knew they would find some way, by hook or crook, in a secret conference where they would give way to each other in the interest of monopoly, and against the tax-payers of the country, to fix up secretly such a report as they have, and that we should be driven to just where we are now. It is said that the Senator from Ohio has not signed the report. That need not deceive anybody; he would not have it beaten for his right arm, even if he did not get all he wanted. On the 23d day of January I said—I desire to put it again upon record, if the Senator from North Carolina will be kind enough to read it for me.

Mr. VANCE read:

This bill, or rather some bill I fear a good deal worse than the bill which passes the Senate, will in all probability pass both Houses before the 4th of March; if so, the facts now placed upon the permanent records of the country will constitute this justification of those of us who vote against it, not only for our votes, but for any future effort we may make to obtain the relief which the country demands, but which I feel assured this Congress does not propose to give.

I have a very faint hope of success in making valuable or important reductions, and if we do I have still less of having them retained in the bill which will become a law. The protectionists are all looking to the all-powerful conference committee for the results they desire. Four men at last will frame the bill, and they will be sure to give the men who rely on legislation to enrich themselves all they can. On all provisions of importance to the monopolists which the Senate has increased or kept in better shape for the protected interests than the House has, the House conferees will concur in the provisions of the Senate amendments, and having done that much to oblige the Senate the Senate conferees will of course reciprocate their kindness by concurring in such increases and adjustments as the House conferees can show that their action has made in the same direction.

Thus the bill will be made more oppressive than either House would make it. I expect, in short, to be called upon to vote, as a whole, without the right to amend, alter, or even protest, for a worse bill than either House passes, and therefore propose to give my reasons for demanding reductions now while we can consider the items in detail. I propose to appeal from Congress to the country, and to make up the record now. Of course one of the three conferees of each House will be a Democrat and in favor of reduction of taxes, but he will not be heeded in the conference and need not even sign the report.

If we fail to vote for any bill, however oppressive and unjust, that the conference committee agree on, we will be denounced as opposing all reduction of taxes; and if it passes in spite of us, no matter how oppressive its provisions may be, and we venture hereafter to seek relief by legislation, we will be loudly denounced by the able and well-paid press of the monopolists as agitators and disturbers of the business of the country. We may as well make up our defense as we go on. We will be told that Congress was pledged by the appointment of the Tariff Commission to accept as a finality the bill passed on its recommendation, and every man and woman in the employ of the protected interests will be threatened with reduction of wages or dismissal from service if they do not join in the hue and cry that will be raised by those who seek to perpetuate their monopolies.

Mr. MAXEY. Suppose we have a conference committee, its majority being gentlemen whose theory is that the tariff should be laid for protection with revenue as an incident, what chance would the tax-payers have?

Mr. BECK. I want the Senator from Texas now to discuss this bill item by item, so that he can show to his people in the permanent records of the country what the facts are.

We may as well look the facts in the face and speak plainly. The ultimate decision is in the hands of the chairman of the Committee on Finance in the Senate and of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, each with their most reliable supporter he can select from his committee to sustain him, in a secret committee of conference, where those four are omnipotent in regard to all questions of difference between the two Houses. Each of the chairmen regards himself as the father of the protective system, and each can establish about equal claims to its paternity.

The Senator from Delaware may be at the tail end of the Senate committee for form's sake, and Mr. CARLISLE, of Kentucky, may be on the House committee; they will both be powerless. The commission they obtained was selected because each member of it was interested in maintaining the highest protection and the greatest privileges for the monopolists he was chosen to advocate; each had to sustain all the others so as to secure his own, and the friends of each made up the schedules they were interested in, so as to obtain all possible; and when they were flung together into a bill, the combined forces of protected wealth and monopoly rushed to Washington and have night and day besieged Senators and Representatives, urging them under all sorts of pretenses, I was about to say by promises, flattery, and threats, to sustain what the commission had done for them.

Mr. BECK. That prediction did not quite come up to what we have before us now. I knew that they would make the worst bill they could whenever the two Houses had disagreed and gave them a decent chance to intervene; but it never entered into my mind that any set of men would have the audacity, when the House had agreed to tax iron ore at 50 cents a ton, and when the Senate had agreed to tax it at 50 cents a ton, and all the effort that could be made could not move either House, or any committee of either, to advance to a higher figure—I did not think that any body of men would have so little regard for themselves, for the opinions of both Houses, and for the rights of the people as to add 50 per cent. additional tax where the two Houses had absolutely agreed and there was nothing to confer about. That was an amount of subserviency to the great interest they seem to love so well, or fear so much, that I was not prepared for, nor was I prepared to believe that any set of men could be found who, when the House had voted the tax on steel rails at $15 a ton and the Senate at $15.68, would dare to come before either body with a proposition to tax steel rails $17 a ton; nor did I think that even the sugar-refiners had power enough over any body of men when the Senate had deliberately, by a majority of two to one upon a call of the yeas and nays, voted that on sugar from No. 13 to No. 16 the rate of tax should be 2.40, and after we had changed it to 2.50 at the request of the chairman of the committee and of the conference, and no refiner had publicly dared to say that he even wanted more than 2.65, these men would secretly fix it at 2.75 and then have the audacity to tell us that the refiners wanted more. We all know how this report was worked up. The Senator from Ohio developed the whole story. On the 18th day of February, on page 31 of the RECORD, will be found the following. The Senator from Ohio said:

A few words now in regard to what I intend to do. I—

We know what "I" meant; that meant the great advocate of the protectionists—

I am entirely dissatisfied with the metal schedule of this bill. I think it is wrong in principle and detail, not harmonious with itself or with anything else in heaven above or in the earth beneath; it is a compound of incongruities; and therefore I desire by meet and proper amendments to try to correct it if I can, and if not to reserve my right to oppose the whole of it, and if necessary the whole tariff clauses of the bill.

* * * * * * *

I have received to-day in regard to this schedule earnest appeals by men of all parties, by men who are known in the Senate and all over the country, to vote against this bill from top to bottom, because they say that as it now stands in the Senate it will utterly destroy great industries of this country unless it is amended in important particulars. To show Senators that I am not speaking for myself alone, but for those whom gentlemen on the other side as well as this ought to respect, I will read one telegram signed by J. H. Wade, Henry B. Payne, and Joseph Perkins, two of whom are prominent Democrats. They say:

"We deem it very important to our iron and steel interest that the Senate bill in its present form do not pass."

Here is another from a gentleman well known, though not so well known probably as those I have named:

"The prospect of the passage of the Senate tariff bill strikes our manufacturing community with consternation."

That is signed by Mr. C. B. Beach. One from Mr. Mathers says:

"I hope you will vote against passage of Senate tariff bill. It is better to let both Senate and House bills fail than to have such a tariff."

I might read from many other telegrams received from persons who are well known, especially in the manufacturing districts of Ohio.

To carry out that threat it was so arranged by disreputable combinations that the House could not even have a chance to vote to concur with the Senate bill, but a bogus conference had to be gotten up, a conference tied down by threats from the other House that in the Senate we were acting unconstitutionally and illegally in all we had done, reserving the right so to decide if the House conferees did not get all they demanded, which a majority of our conferees were only too glad to have a chance to yield. Now the Senator from Ohio has got the iron schedule to suit him; the sugar schedule is arranged to suit others to secure their support. Glass-ware ties on another set; cotton and woolen goods, books and grindstones are nicely adjusted to suit others. The whole is made as bad for the people and as good for the monopolists as even Mr. Mathers or Mr. Wade can ask. If the Senator from Ohio can get his conference report through the Senate and force the other House to vote for it, if they will adopt it, that will suit the protectionists and their friends. The whole struggle now is this: the monopolists are determined that the House shall not be allowed to vote on the Senate bill for fear they may pass it. I seek to vote down the conference report, so that the House can have a chance to vote on the Senate bill. If they adopt our bill, that ends it; if they do not, they can send us to-morrow morning untrammeled conferees, and we can in an hour have another report much better than this—certainly one stripped of the flagrant wrongs perpetrated in this. I agree that the reductions in internal revenue are mainly right, and will secure many votes for this vile report which it would not otherwise get. The conferees know that, and hence gamble on the chances of the internal-revenue relief carrying their other propositions.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the instruction to the conferees of the House was, "If pig-iron goes up, the amendment of the Senate will be constitutional; if pig-iron goes down, it will be unconstitutional." That is the true construction of the resolution.

Mr. BECK. I have not a doubt of it; make this bill so bad for the people and so strongly in the interest of the monopolists that the Senator from Ohio and his followers here and Judge KELLEY and his allies at the other end of the Capitol can vote for it, and there will be no constitutional objection as to our right to amend internal revenue with tariff taxation; but make it a decent bill in the interest of the people, one that substantially reduces present burdens, and every monopolist in the House will spring to his feet and denounce the Senate amendment and the action of the Senate as unconstitutional. That is the game that is being played here now. I hope to make that fact plain to the country. Let me read again from what the Senator from Ohio said:

Sir, I wish if possible to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of making a review of this question. I shall not set a bad example. I simply say that the proposition I offer now is the proposition which has been adopted by the House after two or three weeks' deliberate consideration, after a very wise and careful consideration, and I intend to follow this proposition with other propositions, so as, in substance, to adopt the schedule of the House rather than the schedule of the Senate. Although some of the clauses of the House bill may be not free from objection—

I suppose iron ore was one of them and steel rails another—and ought probably to be modified and changed, and may be modified and changed, either by the Senate or by a committee of conference—

He knew where the place was to accomplish his purposes—

yet I venture to say that the propositions made by the House in regard to metals are far wiser in every respect than the propositions made by the Senate. By the amendments I intend to offer—and I intend to be in order, too—I wish to present again to the Senate the opportunity of giving to this industry fair and reasonable protection.

I followed in my feeble way in a short speech in reply, which I will read:

Whatever else may be said about the Senator from Ohio and the measures he presents, the boldness of his statements and the courage with which he advocates them are certainly admirable; and the audacity with which he denounces the action of the Senate and the action of the committee of which he is a distinguished member, and in violation of all the rules of the Senate, as he well understands, lauds the action of the House of Representatives as wiser and better than the action of the Senate, and tells us defiantly that he will vote against this bill unless its provisions are at his dictation made to conform to the action of the House, certainly is worthy of admiration, at least for the boldness of the position he assumes. He tells us in substance that, unless this bill is amended to suit him now, or put in the shape he desires in conference (and he is of course to be a conferee and expects to manage it there), he will vote against it. He expects to dragoon his party by boldly asserting that he will not vote for the bill unless they obey him and undo all that has been twice done by this body.

I suppose he will succeed in securing all he demands. I like a bold man; I like a man who displays the audacity displayed by the Senator from Ohio, but I have never heard the lash of the party whip crack quite as loud as has been done by the Senator from Ohio to-night. It is the first time that I have heard in either House a bold avowal that the action of the House of Representatives, which the Senator has no right even to mention, is wiser and better than the action of this body. He demands that the Senate shall surrender its own judgment, reverse its own twice-recorded, deliberate action, and agree to the action of the House so that he can go into conference and settle it on their basis. That is the meaning of what he has told the Senate to-night in language not to be mistaken and in a way that is meant to drive his party into obedience to his demands, averring he would rebel against the action of the Senate and would have his way or else nothing should be done; if he is not obeyed the bill should be defeated. He read telegrams from interested men, assuring him that it ought to be defeated. Let him defeat it.

There will be a body of men here or at the other end of the Capitol after the 4th of March who will have a decent regard to interests outside of the great protected monopolies of this country. If he is determined to defeat this bill unless he is allowed to unite with Mr. KELLEY, whom he lauds on this floor as a wiser man than any in the United States Senate, in foisting upon the country just such a bill as they two, in secret conclave as conferees between the two Houses, may seek to fasten upon us, let him do so and take the responsibility.

Let him go before the country with that avowal and we will meet him there. I am glad he has taken that position. I knew he had been working up to it for a week; the air has been full of rumors that the House schedule had to be adopted by us and that the Senator from Ohio would force the Senate to reverse all its action or no bill should pass. I am glad he has taken it up now; I am glad he has avowed his purpose and I am glad he has done it with the courage he has and with the audacity that he has, for I believe in audacity. He is a stalwart on this question; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. President, I have gone over only a few of the most prominent wrongs in this report. I have no doubt there are others quite as bad as any I have been able to point out. As is well known, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] and myself withdrew from the conference under the order of the Senate that we should do so, when we believed from facts developed that the House conferees were not at liberty to act freely and without embarrassment. I think the Senate agreed with us after the House resolution was read denouncing the action of the Senate as unconstitutional and an invasion of their prerogative. Therefore I was not in this conference and had no means of knowing what they had done until the report was presented, less than half an hour ago.

True I had inquired about several items from a gentleman who was in the conference committee this afternoon, but knew nothing in detail until about twenty minutes before this debate began. I secured it while I was yet busy on the deficiency bill in the Committee on Appropriations. I was of course somewhat familiar with the subject, and knew what they would do if they dared. I made the calculations I have laid before the Senate as rapidly as I could under adverse circumstances, suffering, as I am, with a horrid cold, and therefore being, for the first time in twenty years, perhaps longer, in no condition to speak or work. So I was not in condition to learn all about this matter as well as I could if I were better; but I have presented enough, I think, in this disjointed way to show Senators that the whole scope of the action of the conference committee has been in the direction of unlimited protection, clearly in defiance of the will of the Senate; that it is an effort to prevent the House from having an opportunity of voting upon the amended bill that was sent to them by the Senate. They have never yet had an opportunity to say whether they would agree to it or not. They were deprived of that right by the power of the protectionists over their leaders for fear they would agree with us. And now hundreds of thousands of dollars, millions upon millions have been added to the taxation of the country; all has been given that the monopolists whom the Senator from Ohio represents desired; and when he has got now at his back all the sugar refiners, with the monopoly they have absolutely in their own hands beyond what they dared to ask, there will be such a lobby brought to bear upon the other end of the Capitol if we agree to this report that they will have to adopt it.

I will not detain the Senate longer except to say that there is very little in this tariff bill that approaches any true idea of revenue reform or any real relief to the people. Every maxim that was ever laid down by any of the great men who have studied economic questions looking to the welfare of the country and not to the enrichment by legislation of privileged classes, every principle laid down by impartial thinkers and philosophers has been ignored. I hold in my hand some of the principles laid down by Adam Smith, whose work is still looked to as high authority by men who love liberty and fair dealing. They are these:

I. The subjects of every state ought to contribute to the support of the government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue they enjoy under the protection of the state. In the observation or neglect of this maxim consists what is called the equality or inequality of taxation.

II. The tax which each individual is bound to pay ought to be certain and not arbitrary. The time of payment, the manner of payment, the quantity to be paid, ought to be clear and plain to the contributor and every other person.

III. Every tax should be levied at the time or in the manner which is most likely to be convenient to the contributor to pay it.

IV. Every tax ought to be so contrived as to take out and keep out of the pockets of the people as little as possible over and above what it brings into the treasury of the state.

V. The heaviest taxes should be imposed on those commodities the consumption of which is especially prejudicial to the interests of the people.

The principles laid down there are true, yet they are all absolutely subverted by the provisions of this report. The whole struggle seems to have been how to take the most money out of the consumer on the things he needs the most, and put it into the pockets of men who have no right to take his earnings from him. Why should a man who works for his daily bread pay 50 per cent. more for the blanket that covers him or the coarse cloth that he wears than is paid under the specific rates of taxation by Mr. Vanderbilt and Mr. Astor, and the class of men who ought to contribute in proportion to their wealth? It is a cunningly-devised scheme how to reduce revenue by increasing burdens, how to give private men $10 for every dollar put into the Treasury, how to foster monopolies, how to disregard the rights of the mass of the people. The measure these gentlemen advocate so earnestly cares nothing for the people, and gives protection to everything but American labor. Proof was made here, and I have the papers before me to show it, that these monopolists send to Europe, they send to Canada, they send anywhere to import the cheapest labor they can, and drive out the American laborer and his family if they can get foreign labor for 5 cents a day cheaper than the American laborer can afford to work for. He competes with all the paupers of Europe. The capitalist with his machinery alone makes the consumers of this country pay 50 to 75 per cent. more than the goods they get are worth in the markets of the world, in order to enrich himself. Robert J. Walker made a great tariff once that worked well; he laid down these rules and adhered to them:

I. That no more money be collected than is necessary for the wants of the Government when economically administered.

II. That no duty be imposed on any article above the lowest rate which will yield the largest amount of revenue.

III. That below such a rate either a descending scale of discrimination may be made, or for imperative reasons the article may be placed in the free-list.

IV. That the maximum revenue duty be imposed on luxuries.

V. That specific duties be abolished and ad valorem duties substituted in their places where practicable, care being taken to guard against fraudulent invoices and undervaluation and to assess the duty fairly and honestly upon the actual foreign market value.

VI. That the duty be so imposed as to operate as equally as possible throughout every part of the Union and not discriminate either for or against any class or section.

When the Democratic party met in convention in 1876 the plank in its platform that rang the loudest and struck the chords of this country in a way that vibrated from one end of the land to the other was in these words:

Reform is necessary in the sum and mode of Federal taxation to the end that capital may be set free from distrust and labor lightly burdened.

We denounce the present tariff, levied upon 4,000 articles, as a masterpiece of injustice, inequality, and false pretense. It has impoverished many industries to subsidize a few. It prohibits imports that might purchase the products of American labor. It has degraded American commerce from the first to an inferior rank on the high seas. It has cut down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad and depleted the returns of American agriculture—an industry followed by half our people. It costs the people five times more than it produces to the Treasury, obstructs the processes of production and wastes the fruits of labor. It promotes fraud, fosters smuggling, enriches dishonest officials and bankrupts honest merchants. We demand that all custom-house taxation shall be only for revenue.

Every principle in these rules and declarations has been abandoned under a pretense of making this reform tariff. It is worse in many regards than even the bad system we are now living under. It is an increase, if this conference report is adopted, upon many of the manufactures of steel from 30 to 45 per cent., an increase upon the very raw material of which iron is made, the iron ore, of 50 per cent. above the present rate. Upon many of the schedules, upon many of the cotton goods of the country, it is a large increase, as I proved the other day. On some things it is a reduction, some of the methods are improved. They were so bad they could not all be made worse. The Tariff Commission improved some of them; but they are infinitely worse by the conference report than they were when the bill left the Senate.

For these reasons it is, Mr. President, that I, if I vote alone, will vote against this conference report, and I will demand, if I can by so doing, that the bill as it passed the Senate after a full discussion shall be submitted to the House of Representatives, and that the iron-masters and that the cotton and woolen kings of the country shall not by their combinations deprive the people's representatives of the right to say whether they will concur with what the Senate did by trying to force upon them in the shape of a conference report a bill that is worse in every regard and more oppressive by millions of dollars than the propositions that went from this body to the House for concurrence.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, to report it back with sundry amendments. I give notice that I shall try to call it up in the morning directly after we meet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed with the committee amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I have but little to say at this late hour upon the adoption of this report of the committee of conference. As the Senate knows, it must be adopted as a whole; its features, good or bad, must be taken together. It is indeed a "most lame and impotent conclusion" of a winter spent in framing a tariff law, a petty outcome of the Tariff Commission, and an entire session of contemporary debate in both Houses of Congress.

When the bill was voted upon finally in the Senate an arrangement had been made, to which I was a willing party, to have no further debate in order to reach a vote, so that it was impossible to give the reasons for any vote cast on that occasion; and now I would merely say that I voted for the bill as it passed the Senate because I believed it justified in every respect, not only because the bill was in fact an improvement upon the present law, but it was a simplification and it did work a substantial reduction in duties, it did simplify the law; and further than that, I was satisfied the comparison was not to be made simply between the proposed law and the present tariff act, but a fortiori between the proposed law and such a scheme as I feared would result from a committee of conference. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] prophesied most truly and accurately what would be the final action upon the subject, or rather the attempted action upon the subject of this measure, that after it was removed from open discussion in both Houses it would go to a conference committee from which it would emerge in a shape hardly recognizable by any who had taken part in its consideration; and that has been all borne out in the sequel.

Mr. President, there was an improvement under this bill in the free-list; and although the improvement was slight and in some respects doubtful, still it was an improvement, and as compared with the report now before the Senate it was Hyperion to a satyr. The rules of this body and general parliamentary law forbid me to refer to the action of the other House, but I have a right to refer to the action of the committee of conference from which this report came. I consider that there is no precedent for the action of that committee, and I trust it will not now receive the approval of the Senate.

When before, in the history of American legislation, was it known that a resolution to non-concur in Senate amendments to a House bill was made and a committee of conference asked for without having the bill itself before the House? And when ever before was a conference ordered which came into the committee-room with a halter around its neck and the end of the rope in the hands of the chairman of the House conferees? The conference on the part of the House was fettered from the beginning. It never was "full and free" in either the common or the common parliamentary sense.

The only option to the Senate in that conference committee was either to yield everything to the demands of certain potential protected classes of citizens, or failing the granting of these demands to allow the measure under consideration strangled by force of a House resolution adopted in advance for the purpose of fettering and controlling the action of the conference. The resolution of the 27th of February, 1883, compelled the House conferees to enter that chamber of conference with the edict of the House on their necks, declaring the action of the Senate in ingrafting a tariff amendment upon a bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation in conflict with the Constitution and void. The conferees on the part of the House claimed the right to pocket and suppress that resolution, or to waive it temporarily and to hold it in terrorem over the Senate conferees in case they should refuse to enact such a tariff measure as suited the House conferees and the parties at whose dictation they were acting. They were aware of the strong desire on the part of a large majority of this body to effect some tariff reform at this session. They were aware that this body desires to be responsive to the demand of the country for a cessation of agitation, for an end to uncertainty, for some repose, for some stability upon which business can be organized, energy can be expended, and enterprise be made safe for the owners of capital and the labor dependent thereon. They knew that, and they traded upon it by hampering their conferees with a resolution that should turn the action of the Senate into dust and ashes, provided it was not made to conform to the demands of those who had caused that resolution to be passed and who brought it, as I say, like a halter round the neck of the conference.

A conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses! What disagreement has taken place? Wherein had the House disagreed with the Senate? Where was the vote upon which they disagreed? Where is the item upon which they disagreed? Has the House refused to concur in the Senate amendments? Certainly not. No vote has been taken, for none has been permitted. The fact stands before the country that a minority of the House by a subterfuge has prevented the majority of that body from having an opportunity to express their will upon this subject.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives has never voted upon any of the Senate amendments to this bill. The amended bill has never been before the House for agreement or disagreement. The measure that was used by the House conferees in the conference committee as a test of the judgment of the House of Representatives was a House bill that I hold in my hand, that never was acted upon in the House, but was simply the result of their action in Committee of the Whole. It was no conclusive expression of the will of that body, and yet that was adopted as the test of what the House would demand; that is to say in certain cases only, and under such irregularity did that conference proceed and upon it their report has been made. How can you describe such a conference as one upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, when one of the Houses had never voted upon any of these measures, and never upon the same bill or rather upon the amendments now objected to by the House conferees.

But, Mr. President, when before in the parliamentary history of the Senate and the House was it ever attempted, or rather where before was the attempt ever permitted to be successful of a committee of conference to amend a proposition upon which the two Houses were not in disagreement? Yet that was done in the present case almost upon the very forehead of this bill. The item of iron ore had been fixed by repeated votes of the Senate at the rate of 50 cents per ton. The House of Representatives, in the bill which I hold in my hand, acting in Committee of the Whole, had fixed the same rate of 50 cents, and yet when the House conferees, professing to represent the will of the House, and the Senate bill equally representing the will of the Senate, came into conference it was discarded; and what had the exact concurrence of the two Houses was amended by the committee of conference by advancing the duty from 50 to 75 cents per ton. At whose instance was this change made? What disagreeing vote was made the basis of such departure from the recorded sentiment of both Houses?

Now, wholly irrespective of the merits of that amendment, it is utterly unwarranted by parliamentary law and usage and never should be accepted by the Senate. Ex uno disce omnes. There would be no strengthening of this argument by repeating and multiplying similar illustrations, of which this bill is full.

But, sir, look at what is termed the similitude clause of this bill, which provides that—

> If two or more rates of duty should be applicable to any imported article, it shall be classified for duty under the highest of such rates.

Is there any precedent for this in any tariff law of the United States? It is a new departure. It not only is unprecedented, but dangerous, accompanying this tariff law like an evil principle throughout with all its multifarious schedules and items from first to last, but it is fraught with danger and renders it impossible for any man to say, with all the variety and all the novelty of invention of which this age is full, you can not tell, no man can tell what rate of duty shall be assigned to an article, except that, if there are two rates of duties, under either of which it may possibly be assigned, shall always be placed under the highest, no matter what would be the rational construction of the statute.

Mr. President, what becomes of the whole current and the meaning and principle of the decisions of the judicial branch of this subject? In 1881, at the October term, in the case of Vietor vs. Arthur, now the President, and then collector of the port of New York, the Supreme Court declared:

> It is also well settled that when Congress has designated an article by its specific name and imposed a duty on it by such name, general terms in a later act, or other parts of the same act, although sufficiently broad to comprehend such article, are not applicable to it.

But under this new law wherever you can discover a higher duty that by any construction can be declared upon an article, that higher duty shall always be applied according to this new conference law. There are abundant illustrations of this. Turn to page 24 and observe the enormous advance upon earthen-ware, stone and crockery ware; an article not of luxury, an article of necessity in use by the mass of the people, and the poorest of the people, and essential for their comfort and decent living, has been advanced under this report from 50 to 60 per cent. ad valorem, and here you find on the same page two sections of the law imposing two distinct rates of duty upon the same article, and under the rule laid down by the Supreme Court a construction could have been applied that would have given the lower duty to this because it had been specifically described, and not put under the general enumeration; but under this proposed conference law the highest tax must be fixed in every case, and this, I say, is wholly without precedent in any tariff law ever passed by an American Congress.

I call the attention of Senators to this provision, on page 43 of the bill:

Manufactures, articles, or wares not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, composed wholly or in part of iron, steel, copper, lead, nickel, pewter, tin, zinc, gold, silver, platinum, or any other metal, and whether partly or wholly manufactured, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

The Senate fixed the rate at 35 per cent. ad valorem, and it has been advanced to 45 per cent. ad valorem, a difference of nearly 33 per cent., by the committee of conference in disregard of a vote repeated by the Senate after full debate.

Now, cast your eye over the two or three preceding pages and you will see articles composed in part of one metal and in part of another, articles composed partly of wood and partly of metal, all of which, if non-enumerated, would come under that clause; and now what will be the result? An article which might have been taxed 10 or 20 or 25 per cent. must, under this new-fangled and mandatory phrase, have the very highest tax anywhere discoverable in the law imposed upon it.

Mr. President, there was nothing else in this report than this general rule of taxation, which is to run throughout the entire law, which was the invention of the Tariff Commission, which will be found recommended in their report, which was considered by the Committee on Finance and disagreed to by that committee. They refused to place that in the bill reported to the Senate.

The House conferees chose to adopt it, and they have, as usual throughout this bill, forced their demand down the throat of the Senate conferees under compulsion of their House resolution threatening to declare all Senate amendments void and unconstitutional if they were not molded to suit the taste of the House conferees or the interests represented by them.

Now, sir, if there was no other feature in this report than that, I would not vote for it. I say it is sweeping, far-reaching, the effect not calculable, but the result of which, as a general fact, will be enormously to increase duties, because wherever there is a doubt, or wherever there is a construction that would have assigned a lower duty to an article, it is provided by this clause that the very highest duty must be imposed. I say it has wiped out and destroyed the whole force and current of judicial decision upon which the business of the country has rested and which the Supreme Court of the United States has declared to be the settled law of the land.

But beyond that what has been done? Salt, a necessary of life, has been increased 30 per cent.; iron ore has been increased 50 per cent.; steel rails have been increased 15 per cent.; steel in other forms, 10 to 12 per cent.; earthen-ware 20 per cent.; jute butts somewhere from 50 to 75 per cent.—I believe I am right in that statement; certainly jute butts were on the free-list, and $5 per ton has been affixed. It subjects them to a very high ad valorem duty, although I do not know that I can state it accurately. Books in a foreign language, none of which worthy of mention are published in this country, which are needed by the scholars and instructors of the country; which are not an article of manufacture in this country, which were placed by the Senate on the free-list, have been stricken out by this conference and subjected to a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem. Books in the English language have been advanced from 15 to 25 per cent.

But, sir, I did not intend at this time to run through these schedules and show how in almost every case advance has been made and how serious the advance is, but the clause to which I have referred, which adopts a rule of construction that shall place the very highest possible tax upon every important article, is one utterly unprecedented in tariff legislation, and is fraught with results to which I will never give my consent. It is absurd to speak of reduction in the face of such a sweeping provision of advance.

What was the use of providing that the natural mineral waters of Europe, so conducive to the health of our people, waters which can not be found in the United States, should be admitted free, when you tax at an enormous ad valorem duty the bottles or the jugs which contain them? It was the distinct vote of the Senate that the incident of the grant should follow the principal, and that when you granted the right to import and use these waters free of duty you included necessarily all the incidents which accompany the grant, and that the means of their transportation, the bottles and jugs that contain them, should also come in free of duty; but that has been prevented, so that in affixing a heavy duty to the bottle or the jug you have virtually denied the freedom of the importation of these healthful waters.

Mr. President, I can not comment on all the features of this bill. I have referred to many. At page 38 there is an increase of 30 per cent. upon steel. At line 784, on "steel not specially enumerated or provided for in this act" the Senate fixed the duty of 30 per cent. and it is increased to 45 per cent., an increase of 50 per cent. in the taxation, which is accepted by the Senate conferees, and not mentioned when their action was recited here to the Senate by the chairman.

Mr. President, I will not profess that I am greatly surprised or disappointed in the result of the attempt this winter and at this session to procure a reform and a reduction of tariff taxation. I have not underrated nor do I now underrate the power of the organized manufacturers of this country, entrenched behind the forms of law, to defy the attempts to reform that law. I have regarded the formation of the Tariff Commission, for which I voted, I have regarded the attempt to frame this law for which I voted, as mere preliminary skirmishes in the struggle that is to come hereafter and of the ultimate result of which I have not a shadow of doubt. These favored interests are strong. They have grown strong and rich by the inequity and inequality of legislation. They have by means of privileges withheld from other classes of citizens become intrenched in wealth and power and in strength; but there is one thing stronger even than they, and that is the force of an intelligent and aroused public opinion. That is stronger and in the end will prevail. The day is sure to dawn, although this Congress has postponed it; their triumph is to-day, but the triumph of popular right and interest is as sure to come as the sun itself is to rise.

I regret the agitation that accompanies this change. I would wish it to end as speedily as possible. I hold that stability is essential for honest dealing and prosperity; and for that reason I regret all this delay and agitation and uncertainty upon this vast and important subject. I have done the best I could to lessen it; I have done the best I could to promote in this Chamber and out of this Chamber, privately and publicly, the passage of a law of moderate, conservative, just tariff reform, a reduction of the rates and the simplification of the methods both in collection and calculation; and, sir, I have been defeated and disappointed. The people of this country can not be always misled by a press that studiously suppresses or misrepresents; they can not be prevented from ultimately coming at the truth. It will break through the meshes of any net that may be spread to restrain it and that final perception of the truth is what we must await—I do so confidently. I believe that a reform to be safe must be gradual. I can not say that I regret the delay that has taken place. It has turned the mind of the American people to the consideration of the subject. They are comprehending gradually but justly and fairly the rights and principles involved in this question, and I believe them capable of a proper adjustment of the laws of this country, which shall produce equality of rights under the form of taxation.

It is, I say, much to be regretted that this attempt to pass a moderate measure of relief to the country, a reformation of taxation, such as I held the Senate bill to be, has been defeated. I do not stand here taking petty party advantage from it. I am perfectly aware that in the ranks of both parties there are decided differences of opinion upon the subject. I know men of the Republican party who share the views I hold, and I know gentlemen in the Democratic party who differ from me toto cœlo upon the subject of tariff taxation.

There must come an adjustment of this subject, and I am willing to approach it by well-advised, steady, and conservative action. That has been thwarted by the character of the Tariff Commission and the action of the present Congress. The people of this country must know that the powers of legislation have been seized and controlled in favor of private and against public interests, and this report and the result reached so far is the proof of what I now say. The amazing spectacle is now before the American people of the bold, strong hand of private and privileged interests seizing in its grasp the legislative powers of the nation and bending them to their will—the sovereign power of taxation made a mere tributary to private and class interests. I believe this bill and the very questionable methods taken to secure its passage will prove a valuable lesson to the American people, and prove a costly and short-lived triumph to its promoters. Sir, I shall vote against this report, and hope the Senate will not adopt it. I have a well-founded belief that when it is unfettered from the present abnormal rule the House of Representatives will be glad to accept the amendments of the Senate to the bill originally sent to us.

One good result of the defeat of this report of the committee of conference and the refusal to adopt it will be that, for the first time, a majority of the House of Representatives will have an opportunity to record its vote, yea or nay, upon this subject.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to make a report at this time from the conference committee on the bill prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located near Washington city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORMAN in the chair). The Senate is already considering one conference report; and it requires unanimous consent.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope there will be no objection. It will take but a moment. It has been agreed to in the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1821) entitled "An act prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home, located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 10.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 9.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 8, with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 7. That the governor and all other officers of the home shall be selected by the President of the United States, and the treasurer of the home shall be required to give a bond in the penal sum of $20,000 for the faithful performance of his duty."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendment numbered 11, with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 10. That the board of commissioners of the Soldiers' Home shall hereafter consist of the General-in-Chief commanding the Army, the Surgeon-General, the Commissary-General, the Adjutant-General, the Quartermaster-General, the Judge-Advocate-General, and the governor of the home; and the General-in-Chief shall be president of the board, and any four of them shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business."

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 12, with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 12. That the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury in the employment of additional clerical force to be used in adjusting the accounts in the Treasury Department of those funds which under the law belong to the Soldiers' Home."

That the House agree to section 2 with an amendment:

"SEC. 2. That the Inspector-General of the Army shall in person once in each year further inspect the home, its records, accounts, management, discipline, and sanitary condition, and shall report thereon in writing, together with such suggestions as he desires to make."

And agree to the same.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
W. J. SEWELL,
WADE HAMPTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THOMAS J. HENDERSON,
ANSON G. McCOOK,
EDWARD S. BRAGG,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, it is not with the hope of influencing the vote of any Senator on the passage of this conference report that I rise to say a word. I simply desire to assist my brother Senators on this floor in emphasizing the real measure which is now before the country. I desire to express my sympathy with the brethren on the other side of the Chamber in the trying circumstances in which they find themselves and in the difficult rôle which they have undertaken to perform. They have really a trying time of it. They have two masters to serve; and we are told in the sacred writings how difficult that is to do successfully. On one side they have the great capitalists of this country to placate, the chartered monopolies that furnish the sinews of war for campaigns, and to maintain the supremacy of their party. They have them to please. On the other hand they have undertaken to meet a great popular demand of the millions of people who inhabit this country and who are taxed for the benefit of these monopolists. How they are going to act so as to please both passes my comprehension. I do not believe that they can do it. But they set out in the only practicable way, and that is, to avoid the publicity which attends legislation in its ordinary course in this country and to resort to a secret conclave, a Venetian Council of Ten, a kind of political star-chamber, called a conference committee, whose proceedings are hidden, and where the light of publicity could not be poured in upon them.

It was evident to all of those who were versed in our proceedings and have served long in this Chamber that the attainment of a conference committee was the object from the very beginning. The manner in which these bills were started simultaneously in the two Houses, the manner in which the one House stopped its bill and the other House kept on, the manner in which the rules of one House were changed so as to enable this conference to be attained and the conference secured in the manner in which it was—all these things indicated very plainly that there was to be an attempt to meet these trying circumstances in a manner that the public would not have its usual insight into.

I want the country, so far as I can make it known, to understand how this thing has been done. I want the hundreds of thousands and millions of taxed people in this country, who have been trying to bring about a reduction of taxes, to know how this legislation has been conducted. I want them to know that which I know, and which you, Mr. President, know, and which all the Senators in this Chamber know, that at no time in this discussion has there been anything said or anything done looking to the interests of the revenues of this Government. Nor has there been at any time anything done or said, by the dominant party, I mean, of course, looking to the interests of the consumers, looking to the interests of the people who have the taxes to pay, looking to the interests of the poor and of the laboring men. I want that understood. There has been no attempt to reduce taxation, though there has been some attempt to reduce revenue by putting the duties so high that it will yield none. I want the country to know that in the course of our proceedings here for now nearly two months there has been nobody consulted but the capitalists of this country. There has been nothing consulted but the greed and the rapacity of these cormorants, who have fastened themselves upon the American people.

When this bill did get into the committee of conference, I did not have the honor of being a member of that committee and therefore I can not speak of it from personal knowledge, but I understand that the protected capital of this country thronged this city, and the hotels and the corridors and lobbies of the Capitol and besieged the doors of that committee-room, more resembling the scene of an assemblage of tramps and dead-beats around a free-lunch room than anything else that it could be compared to, while dispatches by the hundred came from over the country advising Senators and Representatives—not what would be for the public good, but what they would be satisfied with. I, myself, can bear witness that one clause inserted by the conference committee in the bill is in the precise language of a circular addressed to me—I reckon it came by mistake—by one of the manufacturers in this country. They took precisely his words and gave him just what he asked. They have vastly increased the items in the bill as adjudicated by the solemn sense of the United States Senate. They have, as shown by the Senator from Kentucky, increased those things wherein both Houses of Congress had agreed. They have increased things that nobody on the floor of the Senate had asked to be increased.

What they have done in the way of reducing the duties the Senator from Kentucky showed you, and it would only weary the Senate and weary me to go over the list. He did not nearly exhaust it. I might add a great many items of increase that he omitted, but he showed you wherein the conference committee had increased the burdens of the people and increased the taxation instead of diminishing it. What did they give us for all this increase? They increased the duty, for instance, on salt about 20 per cent. over what the Senate decided it should stand at. They increased it about 20 per cent. over what the Tariff Commission said they would be satisfied with. They restored the present duty in this bill, to wit, 8 cents for salt in bulk and 12 cents for salt in sacks, making the duty on salt as it now stands, ranging from 68 to 80 per cent. On cotton bagging they have increased the duty over and above what the Senate decided it should be about 150 per cent. They have taken jute butts, which was placed on the free-list in order to give the manufacturers of cotton bagging cheap raw material, and they have restored the duty of $5 a ton upon that. The Senate has made the duty on cotton bagging manufactured from the jute butts 20 per cent., and they have raised it now to about 50 per cent., which is 150 per cent. over what the Senate decided on, and is about three times what it should be if the due proportion between the raw material and the manufactured article was maintained. They have raised it on earthen-ware, the common earthen-ware of the poor people of the country, so that the very commonest article will be taxed, if it has a little paint on it, or any kind of ornamentation or Sunday doings, from 20 to 30 per cent. higher than the fine white unpainted china that sits upon the rich man's table. That is what this tariff conference committee has done.

They have raised the duties on women's and children's woolen goods, and they have inserted a new paragraph in the tariff schedule for the express purpose of taking a certain class of goods out of the residuary clause where it came in much cheaper, and they have imposed that duty for the benefit of woolen manufacturers upon all the women and children in this country. They have absolutely gone to the free-list and robbed it of an article used only by the cooks and old women of the country for raising bread when the flour will not raise of itself, and they have taken the yeast-cakes off the free-list and put them on the dutiable list for the benefit of some struggling industry, not for some starving infant that would like to eat the cakes, but they have raised the duty on yeast for some starving, struggling infant industry. They have raised the duty on iron and steel, and they have raised it upon all goods manufactured of them. They have raised it upon knowledge; they have raised it upon the books and the literature of this country from 15 per cent. to 25 per cent.; 40 per cent. have they added to the price of knowledge in this country for our children.

What have they placed upon the free-list to compensate for all this? Mr. President, listen while I recount, while I tell the wondrous story of how the tariff conference committee in secret conclave have relieved the burdens of taxation upon the American people. They have absolutely put "hop-poles" upon the free-list; 150 per cent. increase on the bagging with which the farmer ties his cotton for market, and 40 per cent. increase upon the earthen-ware dish out of which he eats his dinner, 25 per cent. increase on the salt with which he seasons his food, or keeps his stock alive or salts his meat; and an increase in proportion upon woolen goods that clothes his wife and his child; upon the iron goods with which he pulls the plow and on the plow itself which makes his crop; in return for all that he shall absolutely have the privilege of buying his hop-poles free for the vines to climb on. That is everthing they have done upon the free-list.

Mr. President, what kind of a way is this to meet a grave issue? When the people of a great nation, 50,000,000 in number, say that the Treasury is overflowing with money that there is no need for, and that only breeds jobbery and corruption, and they want to preserve the purity of the country and to lower their taxes at the same time; and when the thunders of 1882 reverberated from Maine to the golden sands of the Pacific in tones that no wise politician would mistake, indicating that the people had determined to have this, and the Congress of the United States meets here and in pretended obedience to that demand undertakes to reform this great schedule of taxes, I say what sort of a poor, pitiable, and contemptible showing is this? And does any man suppose that the people of these United States are going to be deceived by it? Is there anybody in this country who can be deluded into the belief that the Republicans who have control of this Congress would have given us a better bill but for the obstruction thrown in their path by the minority? No, Mr. President, you may have all the conference committees in the world, and you may double-lock the doors, and you may prevent even a bird of the air from carrying the matter; you may cloud the question by all the protection newspapers that you can buy, and all the orators that you can hire, and you may obfusticate by all the means known to the demagogues, you can not fool the people of the United States. They will say to the party in power, "You had the power here; you had an opportunity and a fair chance; you knew our will; you knew our demands; you saw the lightning; you heard the thunders; you knew our will, and you obeyed it not;" and the balance of the instruction will follow.

I suppose perhaps there will be a pretense that there was some Democratic obstruction in that conference committee, when there were just barely enough Democrats there to see proceedings, as they say in court. You have had it all your own way, and as I say, the people will say to you, "You knew my will and you did it not, and he who knoweth my will and doeth it not shall be beaten with many stripes," and if I dared to pharaphrase it I would say "Shall be beaten by many votes and by a large majority."

You had a chance to reduce this great schedule of tax; you had the chance to do it without disturbing business; you had the chance to do it without destroying manufactures. The manufacturers had their own way in the Tariff Commission. The whole thing was gotten up for them, and they controlled it; their own men were upon it, and they tramped up and down the United States for many, many months and drunk many, many bottles of excellent champagne to inspire them for their work. They reported, and it may be considered the report of the manufacturers themselves, and yet they were not satisfied with their own report.

You can not fool the people and satisfy the manufacturers. You can not reduce tariff duties and keep them up at the same time. It is an impossibility. You will have to make your choice. You will have to say "we are in favor of the capitalist and opposed to the people," or you will have to abandon the capitalist and do something to reduce taxes upon the people. Whenever you do that, whenever you make that choice and make it openly, then the great work of this generation will be more than half completed.

Mr. President, this is all I have to say. I wished in this way merely to assist in emphasizing, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, the opposition that I have to this whole matter, and to aid in showing the people the true state of things in regard to this tariff legislation. I voted against the bill as it went from the Senate. Of course I can not vote for the report of the conference committee, which is so much worse than the bill as we sent it to them.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely want to say that the understanding of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] in relation to two or more rates of duty applicable to any imported article that the duty shall be classified under the highest of such rates is merely to prevent a mistake that may be made where an article may appear as equally included under one schedule as another. Had we not ascertained at the last moment that there was a mistake in the bill, it would have occurred in the report; an article like borax was included in the free-list and also in the taxable list. Under the rule adopted it will be taxable and not free.

I will add, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] stated that we had raised the duty on cotton-bagging from what it was in the bill as it left the Senate, that we did not even touch it. We have not changed it in the least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I have been paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], but having transferred that pair to my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON], I vote "nay."

Mr. SLATER (when Mr. FERRY's name was called). The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] is paired with my colleague [Mr. GROVER]. The pair between the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] has been transferred.

Mr. BECK (when Mr. HALE'S name was called). I voted "nay." I am paired upon this question and all others with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is necessarily absent. I withdraw my vote. He would have voted "yea," I understand from his colleague.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am generally paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS], but his colleague [Mr. VAN WYCK] tells me, and I know the fact, that he thinks if the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] were here, he would vote "nay." As I should vote nay——

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] notified me of his position on the tariff question, and he would vote "yea," if present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand one thing. I do not go to the Senator from New Hampshire for instruction as to how I shall be governed in my pairs, but I go to the colleague of the Senator with whom I am paired.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have the authority from the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Show it to me and I will not vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order during the roll-call.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think I have a telegram here from the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. You are too officious in regard to pairs here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to vote if he wishes, but debate is not in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I have been paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], but as I am told by his colleague [Mr. BUTLER] that if present he would vote probably the same way with myself, I vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. I am satisfied that my colleague would vote that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky wish to have his vote recorded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have already voted "nay," and I do not go to the Senator from New Hampshire in reference to my pair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The Senator from New Hampshire has been out of order and so has the Senator from Kentucky. The Senator has the right to vote as he pleases.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have voted.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire, in order to relieve the Senator from New Hampshire——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. SAUNDERS] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. That enables the Senator from Kentucky to vote.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] announces that he is paired with the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Pennsylvania voted.

Mr. FRYE. He said he did that on the ground that the Senator from South Carolina, if present, would vote the same way.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TABOR].

Mr. CONGER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FERRY] is paired, as I understand, with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That pair was changed to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. GROVER].

Mr. CONGER. I was not aware of that change.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Kellogg,	Morrill,
Allison,	Frye,	Lapham,	Platt,
Anthony,	Harrison,	Logan,	Plumb,
Blair,	Hawley,	McDill,	Rollins,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hoar,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Davis of Ill.,	Ingalls,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Miller of N. Y.,	Windom.

NAYS—31.

Barrow,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Bayard,	Garland,	Lamar,	Vance,
Brown,	George,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,
Butler,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Call,	Groome,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Harris,	Pugh,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Jackson,	Ransom,	Williams.
Coke,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—13.

Beck,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Tabor.
Camden,	Grover,	Miller of Cal.,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hale,	Mitchell,
Farley,	Hampton,	Saunders,

So the report was concurred in.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to put myself right upon the record. During the roll-call my authority to pair the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] was called in question by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I had informed him and the Senate that I had authority in a telegram to act as umpire in such a case. This was denied and I was taken severely to task for presuming to say what I had said on the floor of the Senate. I do not purpose under any circumstances to usurp any authority in this matter, but in order that there might be no mistake about it I some time since telegraphed to the Senator from Nebraska and I have his reply which I will read. I asked him the simple and square question as to whether I had authority to act in such a case. This is his reply:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 14, 1883.

To Hon. E. H. ROLLINS:

Yes; except in the case of free lumber. I had instructed Senator VAN WYCK to attend to that.

A. SAUNDERS.

He instructed his colleague to attend to his pairs as far as free lumber was concerned, but in all other matters he authorized me to act for him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In explanation of my own conduct in the matter I have to say——

Mr. ROLLINS. Allow me to get through. I trust the Senator from Kentucky will see from this that I have not been officious about the matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I rise to a personal question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Allow me a moment in response to the Senator from New Hampshire. I have the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In response to the Senator from New Hampshire I have to say that that telegram he reads now to make an impression upon the Senate is dated over two weeks ago. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] and I have a general pair, and he and I have voted together in the reduction of the tariff from the beginning, and an examination of the records will show that I have never when I was in the Senate failed to vote. The Senator from Nebraska was here this morning himself, and told me it was perfectly indifferent to him, and I went to his own colleague and transferred my pair on this matter; and I call it officious in the Senator from New Hampshire upon an old telegram dated the 14th of last month to undertake to control my pair on this vote. The telegram is dated before the bill was passed by the Senate; it is dated nearly three weeks ago.

Mr. ROLLINS. That was the——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator now excuses himself for an interference with me in the arrangement I had made with the colleague of the Senator from Nebraska himself. I thought it was officious upon his part, and therefore I resented it, and I do so now.

Mr. ROLLINS. Allow me one word. This simply had reference to the tariff bill which is now under consideration, and it never has been revoked at all.

HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the unfinished business, the bill of my friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], being before the Senate, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting the motion it is desired to have some bills from the House of Representatives printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They may be read the first time, but the first time only.

The bill (H. R. 5543) to confirm certain entries of the public lands was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of the bill.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 338) in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made, was read the first time by its title.

The bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew the motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 34 minutes a. m., Saturday, March 3) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 2, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Rev. H. D. CLARK, of Baltimore.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; in which amendments the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLITS. I move to suspend the rules and take from the Committee of the Whole——

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order prior to the execution of the Pound rule. The Chair recognized the gentleman, understanding that he desired to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLITS. I will make the motion then at a later hour in the day.

Mr. CALKINS. I demand the regular order.

CORRECTION.

Mr. NEAL. I wish to state that I was paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] on the river and harbor bill on yesterday as shown by the RECORD. Had it not been so I should have voted, as I have always done, against the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to say the same thing. I should have voted against the bill had I been present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALKINS. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the proceeding under the Pound rule.

At the time that the hour expired when this rule was last under consideration by the House there was a bill which had been called up by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND] on behalf of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to give notice that immediately after the expiration of this hour under the Pound rule I shall call up the contested-election cases. I give this notice so that members may be aware of the fact.

CONFIRMATION OF PUBLIC LAND ENTRIES.

The SPEAKER. The bill which had been called up by the Committee on the Public Lands under the Pound rule was the bill (H. R. 5543) to confirm certain entries on the public lands. This bill had been read and was printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ANDERSON. Can it be read again?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent. This hour can not be taken up in that manner.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to know what the bill is.

Mr. POUND. Let the title of the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill has been announced. It has been read and is printed in the RECORD of the proceedings of the 26th of February.

Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LACEY. I wish to know in what manner this proceeding will affect the standing of the postmaster's salary bill, which comes over as the unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. It has nothing to do with it.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the bill to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor and will explain the bill.

Mr. POUND. It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that the bill under consideration (H. R. 5543), a bill to confirm certain entries on the public lands, was called up by the Committee on the Public Lands on the 26th instant, was read, and, with the report, was also printed in the RECORD. At that time, and before the consideration of the bill had begun or before objection had been asked to its consideration, the hour had expired and it comes up now in this hour as the unfinished business. I desire to say that it is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Public Lands of this House, and that a similar bill has been reported by the committee of the Senate with this exception, that the proviso is omitted in the Senate bill, and I wish to amend this bill as I have already given notice, by striking out the latter proviso. This bill simply confirms the title to certain lands wholly within my Congressional district. The money has been paid and the entries made in strict accordance with the law. I repeat that these lands were duly entered and paid for under instructions of the General Land Office. They are embraced in lands which were reduced from $2.50 to $1.25 an acre under the law of 1880, and they proceeded under instruction of the General Land Office to make these entries for nearly a year, when it was discovered that under some ruling of the Supreme Court they should have been reoffered. The entries are in due form; there are no contestants; there are no adverse claims, and certainly there can be no objection to the confirmation of these titles.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last proviso of the bill. The Clerk will read the proviso proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. We do not even know the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill was read in full, and was printed in the RECORD.

The Clerk read the proviso proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And provided further, That where lands have been entered since the approval of said act, and a greater price paid therefor than said reduced price, such excess shall be refunded to the purchaser or his legal representatives in the same manner as repayments of excess purchase-money are made in other cases under existing law.

Mr. POUND. I would like to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the Committee on Public Lands thought it well to make this reimbursement. But this amendment was made so as to make the bill conform to the bill of the Senate which does not provide for the reimbursement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think bills of this character should be passed in this way. The exact effect of this measure is not understood. I suppose the original act reducing the price of land from $2.50 to $1.25 per acre passed on the theory that those railroads would not be built; that the grants had virtually lapsed, and that those lands were a portion of the public domain. I suppose that was the theory on which the original act passed. Now, instead of that being the case these very grants are now held to be operative.

Mr. POUND. Will the gentleman permit me to say these are not included in the railroad lands, but are alternate sections which had been offered for sale, were in the market, and which had been subject to private entry for twenty years. They were reduced in price because the sales after years of selections had been stopped entirely. The reduction of price stimulated purchasers of lands and home-seekers, and these lands were actually bought and paid for by innocent purchasers.

Mr. HOLMAN. This only operates on lands which had been in the market prior to 1861. Now, grants were made to certain railroad corporations away back in 1856, five years before the period named in this bill. If I understand the matter correctly the theory of it is this: By the operation of the land-grant system alternate sections were put on the market at $2.50 per acre, and afterward when this law passed, which is referred to here, it was passed on the theory that those lands were forfeited.

Mr. POUND. I beg leave to correct the gentleman. It was not passed on any such theory.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why should the price of such lands have been fixed at $2.50 an acre?

Mr. POUND. Because they were alternate sections within a railroad land grant and had been culled until no further sales at $2.50 per acre could be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what I say.

Mr. POUND. But they did not belong and never have belonged to a railroad company.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all. But that law which reduced the price to $1.25 an acre passed on the theory that the grant was a forfeited grant; that the railroad was not to be built.

Mr. POUND. I again correct the gentleman. The road had been built within this grant. The lands had been opened to private entry until the remainder of the lands could not be sold at $2.50 per acre. Under this reduction, these lands which had been neglected were sold and these entries were made under the instructions of the General Land Office. The Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends the passage of the bill; the Secretary of the Interior recommends it; the Senate recommends it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know everybody recommends any measure which will give the public lands to speculators. That is the universal policy.

Mr. POUND. Let me say this is not in the interest of speculators, but innocent purchasers and bona fide settlers. It is but just, and should pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin say this measure did not apply to all the lands prior to 1861—all of them? Take, for instance, such a grant as that to the Saint Croix and Bayfield Railroad; that magnificent grant which is to inure now to the benefit of a corporation recently organized; a grant made away back in 1856. When Congress refused to revive that grant in 1872, the lands were shown to be worth $20 an acre. They had been withheld from settlement under the policy of the Government with regard to these land grants.

Mr. BUCK. As I understand the matter it is this: The lands were granted in alternate sections, and because they were granted in alternate sections to the railroads the Government raised the price to $2.50 per acre on all the lands.

The SPEAKER. The time under the rule for debate on the bill has expired.

Mr. CONVERSE. If I can be allowed two or three minutes I can explain this.

The SPEAKER. But the debate is closed.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Ohio to make a statement?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I object, unless it is not to come out of the hour.

The SPEAKER. It must come out of the hour.

The amendment of Mr. POUND was agreed to.

The question was taken upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and upon a division there were—ayes 70, noes 7.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. POUND and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 120, noes 21.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist upon a further count.

So (no further count being called for) the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POUND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

POWERS & NEWMAN.

The Committee on Indian Affairs was called.

Mr. SPAULDING. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to call up from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill (S. 826) for the relief of Powers & Newman and D. & B. Powers.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money that may hereafter be appropriated for the use and benefit of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, to Powers & Newman the sum of $900, and to D. & B. Powers the sum of $11,300, which sums shall be in full satisfaction of claims against said Indians for property destroyed.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

The Committees on the Territories, Railways and Canals, Manufactures, and Mines and Mining were called without any response.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was then called.

Mr. HERBERT. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to ask that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4465) providing for a public building in San Antonio, Texas, and that it be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of San Antonio, Texas. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Texas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. HERBERT. I can explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to make an explanation for five minutes in place of the reading of the report.

Mr. HERBERT. This bill makes no appropriation at this time. It provides for a public building at San Antonio, Texas, the cost of which is limited to $100,000.

San Antonio is the largest judicial district in the United States. It contains nearly 100,000 square miles, larger in extent than the State of New York and as large as the whole of New England.

A court was established there in the fall of 1879. Within two years and a half there were eighty-three civil cases and four hundred and fourteen criminal cases brought there; and since the court was established there has been brought in all about six hundred cases. From three hundred to five hundred people are necessarily compelled to attend the terms of that court. There are no sufficient accommodations for the court there. The city of San Antonio is next to the largest, if it is not the largest, city in the State of Texas.

Mr. UPSON. It is the largest.

Mr. HERBERT. I am informed by one of the Representatives from that State that it is the largest city in the State. It is growing with wonderful rapidity. If anywhere in the United States there is a necessity for a public building, certainly San Antonio is the point.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the population?

Mr. HERBERT. It is now about 30,000, and I am informed it is increasing at the rate of at least 5,000 a year.

I hope that under the circumstances there will be no objection to the passage of this bill. The court is now held in the upper story of a building totally unfitted by size of rooms for its accommodation, and there is now no suitable building to be obtained in the city for the purpose. This public building is needed to accommodate not only the court but the post-office and other public offices at San Antonio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? Those who object will rise. [Counting.] There are nine gentlemen rising, and the bill is not before the House.

The Committee on Pacific Railroads and the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River were called without responding.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

The Committee on Education and Labor was called.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor to call up from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1829, to amend an act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the fourth section of the act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, approved July 2, 1862, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all moneys derived from the sale of lands aforesaid by the States to which the lands are apportioned, and from the sales of land-scrip hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States or of the States, or some other safe stocks. Or the same may be invested by the States having no State stocks in any other manner, after the Legislatures of such States shall have assented thereto and engaged that such funds shall yield not less than 5 per cent. upon the amount so invested, and the principal thereof shall forever remain unimpaired: Provided, That the moneys so invested or loaned shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished (except so far as may be provided in section 5 of this act), and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may, respectively, prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life."

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. CARPENTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PATENTS.

The Committee on the Militia was called without responding.

The Committee on Patents was called.

Mr. VANCE. I am instructed by the Committee on Patents to call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 7630) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to patents.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4887 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4887. No person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent hereafter granted be declared invalid by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented in a foreign country, unless the same has been introduced into public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application; but every patent hereafter granted for an invention which has, prior to the filing of the application for said patent, been patented in a foreign country, shall expire seventeen years from the date of the foreign patent, or, if there be more than one, seventeen years from the date of the earliest foreign patent, and in no case shall it remain in force more than seventeen years; but all applications hereafter made for patents for inventions previously patented in a foreign country, upon the invention of the same person, shall be made within two years from and after the date of such foreign patent, or, if there be more than one, from the date of the earliest foreign patent. No patent granted for an invention which had, prior to the grant of such patent, been first patented in a foreign country, and which has not expired at the date of the passage of this act, shall be declared to be invalid by reason of its not being so limited on its face or in its grant as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent, or, if there be more than one, at the same time with the one having the shortest term; but this act shall in no wise renew, revive, prolong, or extend any patent heretofore granted."

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, provided it does not take more than five minutes.

Mr. VANCE. It will not take that long.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred sundry bills to amend section 4887, Revised Statutes, relating to patents, report a substitute for all the bills.

The section provides that all patents first obtained in a foreign country shall be so limited in the United States as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent, or if there be more than one, with the earliest foreign patent. In consequence of this section a patent applied for in the United States, but not granted until it is patented in a foreign country, in some cases only lasts, as in Canada, five years or less. Many patents obtained abroad first, not having yet expired, are declared invalid by reason of not being limited on the face. The bill now reported proposes to allow the patent first obtained abroad to run seventeen years from the date of the foreign patent, or if there be more than one, from the date of the earliest foreign patent. It also seeks to make those patents valid which were first obtained in other countries; but does not extend the life of a patent now in existence nor revive one that has expired, but only affects patents to be issued hereafter. We recommend the passage of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before that question is put, I hope the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] will make an explanation of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has two minutes remaining of the five, if he desires to make an explanation.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Speaker, section 4887 of the Revised Statutes provides that patents first obtained in a foreign country for an invention subsequently patented in this country shall expire as to this country at the expiration of the foreign patent. This is the first point sought to be remedied in the bill. In many cases, an inventor, after having made application for a patent in this country, after having filed his papers in due form, applies for a patent in Canada; and the Canadian patent is issued before the United States patent. In some instances four years have elapsed before the American patent has been granted, and thus the American inventor has had in this country but one year's use of his patent. The present bill seeks to remedy this defect in the law by giving the inventor seventeen years from the date of his foreign patent.

The bill also seeks to remedy the defect in regard to patents not limited on their face, which Judge Nixon has recently decided are invalid, because not so limited. The bill does not extend the life of any patent that has already expired. It takes effect in the future. It has no relation to patents heretofore issued. It does not revive or have any effect whatever upon existing patents except in the particular I have described that it corrects the error in regard to patents not limited on their face.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the bill have the effect of making the life of any American patent longer than it has been heretofore?

Mr. VANCE. Not at all.

The question being put on taking up the bill, seven members objected.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

OWNERS OF THE STEAMER JACKSON.

The Committee on Claims being called,

Mr. BUCHANAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. On behalf of the Committee on Claims——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I addressed the Chair when the Committee on Claims was called.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must settle these matters in their committees. The Chair can not determine them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The bill which I desire to call up is one which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] was instructed by the committee to call up prior to the authority given to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I am recognized, I believe?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recognized to exercise a right not given to him by his committee. If the gentleman has the prior right, the Chair will recognize him; otherwise not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The bill which I wish to call up is one which has already passed this House, and been amended by the Senate. I simply desire the concurrence of the House in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. This is a matter which gentlemen of the committee must settle among themselves.

Mr. HERBERT. My colleague [Mr. OATES] is sick to-day, and unable to be here.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Is this the case which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] was instructed to bring up?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Very well; I concede the right of the gentleman.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table for concurrence in the amendment of the Senate the bill (H. R. 2156) for the relief of certain owners of the steamer Jackson.

The amendment of the Senate, which was read, was to strike out all of said bill and insert the following:

Whereas the United States, on the 18th day of June, 1865, chartered the steamboat Jackson to run on the Chattahoochee River in the service of the United States, and while so employed it was wholly destroyed by fire caused by unavoidable accident; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury, on the application of Aaron Barnett and Daniel Fry for payment to them, as alleged owners of said steamboat of the value of the same, adjudged and decided "that the steamer Jackson was lost by unavoidable accident while in the military service of the United States by contract, and that the owners thereof were entitled to the payment of the value thereof under acts of March 3, 1849, and March 3, 1863;" and

Whereas the value of said steamer was duly ascertained by the Treasury Department to be $36,125, which was paid to the said Barnett and Fry, on the execution of the bond of said Barnett as principal and Louis G. Schiffer and Gabriel H. Schiffer as sureties, in the sum of $26,000, payable to the United States, and "conditioned that if the above-bounden obligors, their heirs, executors, administrators, or any of them, shall and do well and truly pay or cause to be paid unto any person or persons who shall establish a valid claim to any of the five-fourteenths of the steamer Jackson the full amounts as paid by the United States to the said Barnett and Fry, or shall pay or cause to be paid unto the United States, or their assigns, the full amounts paid by the United States on account of said five-fourteenths of the said steamer Jackson, with the legal costs and interest on such sum, without any defalcation or delay, then the said bond to be void," &c.; and

Whereas John R. Ely, John B. Lockey, A. R. Godwin, S. and J. Irwin, Thomas M. White, surviving partner of T. and J. M. White, and Ellison and Hughs, partners or joint owners, claim that they are the owners of said five-fourteenths of said steamer Jackson, in different number of shares, and entitled to their pro rata share of said $36,125, amounting to $12,901.78, and have demanded payment of the same from the United States; and

Whereas Barnett and Fry deny the ownership of said claimants of said five-fourteenths, and also claim that they (Barnett and Fry) have made payments and advances of large sums of money for and on account of repairs and materials for repairs of said steamer Jackson, which they are entitled to have deducted from any sum for which they may be liable on said bond, or on account of said payment to them of the said $12,901.78: Therefore, for the purpose of having the real owners of said five-fourteenths of said steamer Jackson legally ascertained, and to enable the said Barnett and Fry, in the event that said claimants, or any of them, shall establish their right to said five-fourteenths or any part thereof, to show by legal proof what, if any, advances or payments they, or either of them, have made for and on account of any repairs of the said steamer, and legally chargeable against all the owners thereof,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That John R. Ely, John B. Lockey, A. R. Godwin, S. and J. Irwin, partners or joint owners, and Thomas M. White, surviving partner of T. and J. M. White, and Ellison and Hughs, partners or joint owners, be, and they are hereby, authorized within six months, and not thereafter, after the passage of this act, to bring suit in their joint names in the Court of Claims against the United States, and that said Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction of said suit to hear and determine the same for the purposes aforesaid, and to try all issues joined between the parties thereto in relation to the ownership of the five-fourteenths of the said steamer Jackson, and determine the right of the said plaintiffs, or any of them, thereto, and to the said $12,901.78, the value thereof, and also to try and determine all issues in relation to any payments or advances made by Barnett and Fry, or either of them, for and on account of any debt legally created against said steamer Jackson for repairs, material, clerk-hire, or work and labor, for which the said steamer was liable in law or equity; and should the said plaintiffs, or any of them, establish their right to said five-fourteenths, or the said value thereof, or any portion of the same, and should it be shown by legal proof that said Barnett and Fry, or either of them, have made payments or advances for repairs, materials, clerk-hire, or work and labor for which said steamer was chargeable in law or equity, the said court shall render judgment against the United States and in favor of each of said claimants for so much of said $12,901.78 as the proof may show each to be entitled, less the amount the proof may show the said Barnett and Fry, or either of them, have paid or advanced for and on account of said steamer as aforesaid; and the said court shall cause notice in writing to be served in person upon said Aaron Barnett and Daniel Fry, in which shall be stated the commencement of said suit by said plaintiffs, and the cause thereof, and requiring them to appear at said court and establish, if they can, by legal proof, their ownership of said five-fourteenths of said steamer Jackson, and also what payments or advances they, or either of them, have made, for and on account of repairs, material, or work and labor, for which said steamer was liable.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This bill was passed by the House and sent to the Senate and was returned with an amendment which has been read by the Clerk. I now move that that amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BUCHANAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STERLING T. AUSTIN, DECEASED.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I am directed by the Committee on War Claims to call up for consideration at this time the bill (S. 719) for the relief of the representatives of Sterling T. Austin, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claims of the successors in interest and legal representatives of Sterling T. Austin, deceased, late of the parish of Carroll, in the State of Louisiana, for cotton taken by the military and civil authorities of the United States, or by either of them, during the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, in the States of Louisiana and Texas, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, with full jurisdiction and power in the said court to adjust and settle such claims, and to render a judgment in said cause for the net amount realized by the United States from the sale of such cotton as shall appear from the evidence to have been so taken by said authorities; and in such action the said representatives shall be entitled to recover as aforesaid, any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That it be shown to the satisfaction of the court that neither Sterling T. Austin, sr., nor any of his surviving representatives gave any aid or comfort to the late rebellion, but were throughout the war loyal to the Government of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report in the five minutes allowed under the rule.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2706) for the relief of the representatives of Sterling T. Austin, report as follows:

At the breaking out of the war of the rebellion Sterling T. Austin, sr., was the owner of a plantation in Carroll Parish, Louisiana, known as the "Three Bayou Place," situated three or four miles from Bunche's Bend, or Old River, containing 2,380 acres, of which 900 were cultivated. In the spring of 1863 there were on the place the cotton crops of the years 1861 and 1862, respectively, amounting to upward of 1,200 bales, averaging 440 pounds each, 82 mules, 100 head of cattle, 300 hogs, 10,000 bushels of corn, 8 yoke of work cattle, 6 wagons, carpenter and blacksmith tools, plantation tools, library of 300 volumes, family portraits, household and kitchen furniture—claimed to be worth $300,000. In the summer of 1862, Mr. Austin, for sanitary reasons, removed his family, consisting of his wife and three minor children—two daughters and a son—to Georgia, himself remaining in Louisiana. In the spring of 1863, procuring a pass through the Federal lines at Natchez, Mississippi, he went to Georgia for his family. During his absence all the movable property on his plantation, described above in general terms, was, by order of General J. B. McPherson, military commander of that district, seized and carried away by the military forces. The mules, forage, and supplies were applied to the use of the Army, and the cotton shipped north to Memphis, or invoiced over to the authorized officers of the Government by J. E. Jones, formerly lieutenant and quartermaster of the Sixteenth Wisconsin Volunteers, now of Carroll County, Iowa. The levee at Ashton was cut by the Army, and his whole plantation submerged. He came back, after the water had receded, to a scene of desolation and enforced desertion. In consequence of his well-known Union sentiments, and the absence of anything like legal protection, a residence among his old neighbors was both unpleasant and unsafe.

In the autumn of 1863, with his family and his negroes, of which he had a large number, he removed into Texas, remaining in San Antonio till after the close of the war, when he removed to Galveston. While at Galveston, in 1865, he went up the railroad during the summer and bought up scattered lots of cotton, all of which were seized by the agents of the United States Treasury. He then formed a partnership at Galveston, purchased the schooner Mary Lee, and entered the Mexican trade, removing to New Orleans in 1865. The annual overflow of his old plantation meanwhile rendered it untenantable. In 1867 the schooner was wrecked and became a total loss. In this year it appears that Mr. Austin placed his claim against the Government in the hands of Judge Lewis Dent for collection, and he seems to have relied implicitly upon this attorney. After the loss of the schooner Mr. Austin again turned his attention to planting and purchased another plantation in his old parish of Carroll. He became postmaster at Lake Providence, and in 1870 removed his family from New Orleans. Meanwhile the son, Sterling T. Austin, jr., had grown into manhood, been admitted to the bar, became prosecuting attorney and then parish judge. In 1871, according to General Negley's recollection, in 1872 or 1873, according to others, Mr. Austin was in Washington pushing his claim, surprised and indignant at Judge Dent's failure to prosecute it. It is quite certain he was at the capital in each of the years 1873, 1874, and 1875. In May, 1873, he made, with Charles E. Hooey, esq., an attorney of Washington, a contract to prosecute the claim, the original copy of which is among the papers before the committee. There is also another original contract for the same purpose among the papers, dated in February, 1875, signed by Mr. Austin and John A. Grow & Co., then a firm of attorneys or claim agents in Washington. In January, 1874, a petition for relief on account of these seizures was presented to the Congress, but no evidence of any action thereon has been found.

On the 9th day of July, 1879, Sterling T. Austin, sr., while still postmaster at Lake Providence, Louisiana, was shot dead in broad daylight in the open street of that village. The son, Sterling T. Austin, jr., still parish judge, hearing the shot and being informed that his father was the victim, went at once to the rescue and was met and shot down in the same place by the same person. The son lingered a few days and died of his wounds. After the burial of father and son the widow and daughters sought to collect and preserve the business papers of the deceased, but found their offices had been despoiled and all their private business papers had been carried away or destroyed, and have never since been recovered.

The widow and remaining children now ask that they be permitted to prosecute in the Court of Claims of the United States their demands against the United States, and that they be permitted to recover the reasonable value of such property as they can show to the satisfaction of the court was owned by and taken from Sterling T. Austin, sr., by the military or civil authorities of the United States, in the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, and applied to the use of any of the forces of the United States or consigned to any of its authorities for sale or otherwise and not restored to the owner, any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding.

It is believed there never has been an officer or tribunal having jurisdiction to adjudicate the whole of this claim. No part of it seems to come within either of the four classes of claims to which the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims has been limited. As adjudications under the act of 1864 were in express terms confined to claims for quartermaster's stores and for subsistence "furnished" to the Army, it is very questionable, to say the least, whether or not they could have been extended to even the very small portion of this claim which was for stores and supplies "taken" and not "furnished." It seems that the act of March 3, 1871, establishing the Southern Claims Commission, did confer jurisdiction of that part of this claim which is for "stores or supplies taken or furnished" for the use of the Army; this part, however, is small. Under this act, moreover, the period for filing claims never extended beyond the two years between March 3, 1871, and March 3, 1873.

A portion of this claim, it seems, might have been prosecuted under the "captured and abandoned property act" of March 12, 1863. Under this act all claims not presented within two years after the suppression of the rebellion are barred. This bar must have taken effect at or near the time the claim was placed in the hands of Judge Dent. Under the "cotton-claims" act of May 8, 1872, it is certain but a small portion of the demand could have been adjudicated; and under this act six months only are allowed for filing claims. It therefore appears that no officer or tribunal ever had jurisdiction of the entire claim; and the period during which any part of it might have been presented did not exceed two years, and these two years are those immediately following the close of the war. To those who remember the confusion, doubt, distrust, and uncertainty of that period, and consider the distance and unfamiliarity at which Mr. Austin lived from the National Government, the delay will not seem strange. Doubtless if Mr. Austin or his son had survived, or even if their private papers could be examined, better reasons for delay could be furnished. Under all the circumstances, the committee think it would be a great hardship to require further explanation of laches, and believe the claim ought to be carefully and judicially examined.

From the evidence before the committee, the loyalty of the family seems to be well established; yet, in order that this question may not be foreclosed on testimony merely ex parte, your committee recommend that the bill be amended by adding after the last words the following:

"Provided, however, That it be shown to the satisfaction of the court that neither Sterling T. Austin, sr., nor any of his surviving representatives, gave any aid or comfort to the late rebellion, but was throughout the war loyal to the Government of the United States."

With this amendment the committee report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Two members rose.

The SPEAKER. Not a sufficient number; and the bill is before the House for present consideration.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are ten minutes of debate allowed on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Nobody has claimed it, and the bill is now on its passage.

The bill was passed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of business under the Pound rule has expired. The Chair desires to state that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDSON] was absent from his seat when the Committee on the Territories was called, and did not call up the bill which he intended. The Chair asks unanimous consent when the House again proceeds to the consideration of business under the Pound rule the gentleman from South Carolina may be allowed to call up that bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the title of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not informed of the title of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is impossible to give consent without knowing the title of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. It is my intention to call up the bill to establish a civil government for Alaska, which has had eliminated from it everything that was objectionable.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to call up the contested-election case of Buchanan vs. Manning. I understand the gentleman from New York has a conference report which he desires to call up, and for that I will yield.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have not a conference report, but I desire——

Mr. CALKINS. I can not yield for anything else, but insist upon proceeding with the contested-election case.

Mr. HISCOCK. What I desire to do is to call up from the Speaker's table the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, for the purpose of moving non-concurrence therein and asking a committee of conference.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order of business.

Mr. WILLIS. It requires unanimous consent to do that, and I object.

The SPEAKER. If objection be made, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York, to suspend the rules.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move, then, Mr. Speaker, to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and that they be non-concurred in, and a committee of conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the amendments of the Senate will be read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Or the gentleman from New York can make a statement as to what they are.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can tell the gentleman from Indiana they are so numerous I can scarcely undertake to go over them all.

Mr. CALKINS. If the rules are to be suspended that dispenses with the reading of the amendments. If the rules are to be suspended I insist they shall be suspended entirely.

Mr. HISCOCK's motion was agreed to; and the rules were suspended, the Senate amendments non-concurred in, and a conference requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BUCHANAN VS. MANNING.

Mr. CALKINS. I now call up the contested-election case of Buchanan vs. Manning. In that case I do not think there will be any debate, or at least I believe there will be very little. The majority of the committee have signed a report in favor of the sitting member.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I desire to know, and would like to have a decision from the Chair upon the point as to what will be the standing of the bill which was determined upon last night as the unfinished business, the bill with reference to the salaries of postmasters?

Mr. CALKINS. I can not yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to know if I can raise the question of consideration?

Mr. CALKINS. I am making an argument now, and the gentleman has no right to attempt to take me off the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to object, if in order——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana raises a question of high constitutional privilege.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am aware of that, but I desire to know what will be the status of the bill to which I refer. Will it still come over as the unfinished business after the conclusion of the election case which the gentleman from Indiana calls up?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly; it will be the unfinished business, and come up in its proper order.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman from Indiana will yield to me again, I wish to say that the gentleman from New York has a conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill which he wishes to submit at this time.

Mr. CALKINS. Not in the middle of my remarks. I can not yield now for that purpose.

As I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, a majority of the Committee on Elections have reported in favor of the sitting member. The minority of the committee have found in favor of declaring the seat vacant. My friend Colonel THOMPSON, of Iowa, was called home by reason of sickness, and is not present to be heard. I do not know whether he desired to press his views upon the House or not. Of this I am not informed, although he drew the minority report. But I may be allowed to make a brief statement with reference to the case, and I think that will practically close the debate, unless my colleague on the committee, Judge RANNEY, desires to be heard.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the contestant in the case, Mr. Buchanan, filed his notice of contest, specifying the several grounds on which he relies. The majority of the committee, following the precedents of election cases in this House, have found, and hold, that all of the specifications in the notice were too vague, general, and uncertain upon which to found a contest.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman indicate to the Chair what case is proposed to be called up?

Mr. CALKINS. There was so much confusion that the clerks are evidently excusable.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has not been asked to read the resolution accompanying the report.

Mr. CALKINS. That will not be necessary, of course, until the close of the debate, when the House will be called to vote upon the resolution. But I referred, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks, to the case of Buchanan against Manning.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he is proceeding to debate the conclusion to which the committee have arrived before the resolution submitted by the committee is read, a proceeding offering no member of the House an opportunity of raising the question of consideration, which some one may desire to do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized that fact, and has therefore called the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the omission.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think before the gentleman from Indiana assumes to take the floor for an argument upon the case we should have an opportunity of raising the question of consideration if it is desirable.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the contestant have leave to withdraw his papers without prejudice.

Mr. CALKINS. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the reading of that resolution may by unanimous consent be taken as having been called for before my remarks began.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM] be recognized for the purpose of submitting a conference report upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. CALKINS. I can not yield the floor for that purpose. If the gentleman had not interrupted me I would probably have concluded what I had to say by this time. I will be through in a moment.

As I have said, the Committee on Elections have found that all of the allegations of the contestant are too vague, uncertain, and general upon which to found or base a contest, except one which refers to the exclusion of the United States supervisors from the polling-places and different ballot-boxes throughout the district. In drawing the report special reference was had to and the committee especially examined the testimony of the different United States supervisors, and to see how far the allegation was sustained by the proof. On page 10 of the report signed by the majority of the committee all the polling-places at which the United States supervisors were in any way interfered with——

Mr. HISCOCK. Is an argument upon the case in order?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it before the House has agreed to consider the contested-election case?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana presents a question of high constitutional privilege.

Mr. HISCOCK. I raise the question of consideration with a conference report.

The SPEAKER. This is a question of high constitutional privilege.

Mr. HISCOCK. Can not the question of consideration be raised against it?

The SPEAKER. It can; but it has not been done.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do it now.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not yield the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the right to raise the question of consideration. The only question for the Chair to consider is, did he raise it in time?

Mr. CALKINS. I had begun my argument.

Mr. HISCOCK. I did not understand that the resolution reported by the Committee on Elections was before the House for consideration until it was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair caused the resolution to be read.

Mr. HISCOCK. And at the same time I asked that the gentleman from New York be recognized for the conference report.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Kentucky also objected.

Mr. CALKINS. I will yield in a moment for that, and if the gentleman had not interrupted me I would have been through before this time and his report would have been in.

On page 10 of the report signed by the majority of the committee it will be found that the committee have excluded from the count all of the polling-places at which the supervisors of elections were interfered with, and one or two other places at which certain acts took place which the committee thought they could not and ought not to countenance. This, however, leaves the sitting member in his seat by a large majority, six or seven thousand, and without including these polling-places.

Now, I need not go further except to say that certainly the testimony of the supervisors appointed by the contestant himself shows clearly and conclusively that his allegations are unsustained and unsupported. That ought to end the case. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY], and I ask him to give way for the conference report.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KETCHAM. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The conference report was as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, 27, 32, 34, 35, 37, 38, 47, 55, 69, 70, 71, 72, 76, 81, 82, 98, 101, 113, and 114.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 29, 30, 31, 36, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 57, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 65, 66, 67, 68, 73, 74, 75, 77, 79, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 94, 96, 97, 100, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 111, and 112, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert $1,900; on page 4 in line 9 of the bill strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 10 strike out "two clerks" and insert "one clerk;" and in line 11 strike out the word "each;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$61,450;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"And hereafter the commissioners of the District of Columbia are required to visit and investigate the management of all the institutions of charity within the District which may be appropriated for, and shall require an itemized report of receipts and expenditures to be made to them to be transmitted with their annual report to Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And in case a contract can not be made at that rate the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to substitute other illuminating material for the same or less price and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,000," and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed by said amendment insert "eighty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$301,560;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$543,675;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$1,000;" and on page 17, in line 15 of the bill, before the word "dollars," insert "and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "four" and insert the word "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000," and add the following as a new paragraph:

"For new heating apparatus for the John F. Cook school building, $2,500; for the Randall school building, $2,400; for the Miner school building, $3,900; for the Abbott school building, $3,200; in all, $12,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out, insert the following:

"And the time allowed for filing claims in the Court of Claims under an act entitled 'An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes,' approved June 16, 1880, be, and the same is hereby, extended thirty days from and after the approval of this act; and all claims not so presented shall be forever barred."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. H. KETCHAM,
FRANK HISCOCK,
WM. H. FORNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
F. M. COCKRELL,
H. S. DAWES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The accompanying statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the District of Columbia appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the accompanying report:

As agreed upon in conference the bill is not materially changed in its general provisions from what it was as it passed the House; it appropriates in the aggregate $1,699,867.23, being an increase of $32,465 over the amount as it passed the House, and $4,769.19 in excess of the law for the current year, and $22,056.31 less than the estimates for 1884.

J. H. KETCHAM,
FRANK HISCOCK,
WM. H. FORNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. KETCHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as the conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the sundry civil appropriation bill Mr. HISCOCK of New York, Mr. BUTTERWORTH of Ohio, and Mr. BLACKBURN of Kentucky.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CASWELL. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill. I ask that the report and the accompanying statement be read.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after a full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "July" in said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the word "October;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And report to Congress in December next, with the data upon which it is based, a more complete system of gauging the rates of pay for carrying the mails on railroad routes, if practicable, in order to secure the better protection of the interests of the Government and the adjustment of rates of compensation for the service required, and he is authorized to expend not to exceed $10,000 out of the appropriation for the transportation of mails for actual and necessary expenses involved, including such extra compensation as he may deem just and reasonable to officers of the Department for specific service rendered, which sum shall be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Upon amendments numbered 2 and 3 the conference committee are unable to agree.

L. B. CASWELL,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
E. JOHN ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The accompanying statement was read, as follows:

The managers of the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Post-Office appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the report, which is herewith submitted, if adopted:

On amendments numbered 2 and 3 there is no agreement.

On amendments numbered 5 and 6: Provides that the reduction of rate of postage shall go into effect on and after October 1, 1883.

On amendment numbered 11: Makes section 3 of the act read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to make a thorough investigation into the railway mail service of the United States and report to Congress in December next, with the data upon which it is based, a more complete system of gauging the rates of pay for carrying the mails on railroad routes, if practicable, in order to secure the better protection of the interests of the Government, and the adjustment of rates of compensation for the service required; and he is authorized to expend not to exceed $10,000, out of the appropriation for the transportation of mails, for actual and necessary expenses involved, including such extra compensation as he may deem just and reasonable to officers of the Department for specific services rendered; which sum shall be immediately available."

L. B. CASWELL,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
E. JOHN ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DUNN. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin what has been the action of the conference as to the two items in relation to the fund for the special mail facilities and the regulation of the compensation of the bond-subsidy railroads for carrying the mails?

Mr. CASWELL. I propose to give an explanation of the report.

An agreement is reported on all the points on which there were disagreeing votes between the two Houses except that relating to the special mail facilities, $185,000, and the amendment relating to fixing the rate of transportation on railways.

As to these two the committee, or a majority of the committee on the part of the House, I think, could easily have agreed with the committee on the part of the Senate and have yielded to the amendments of the Senate, but they were bound by the action of the House in its recent vote, when they submitted a report that they were unable to agree. They have felt it their duty to refer these questions back to the House. I move that the House agree to the conference report. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON].

Mr. ROBESON. The condition of this report is just this: the conferees on the part of the House and on the part of the Senate agree as to all the questions of difference between the two Houses, except the two questions of the fixing of the rate of compensation for carrying the mails by the land-grant and bonded railways, and the $180,000 item of special facilities. Upon this the Senate insist and do not yield. The House conferees, acting under the instruction of the House by its last vote upon that subject, disagree and report their disagreement to the House. That is about all there is of it.

It is not worth while to discuss the question; it has been thoroughly discussed here over and over again. Every gentleman knows all about it. My own views are thoroughly known, and I do not care to re-express them.

Mr. DUNN. That gives the information I desire.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is a motion to disagree to the conference report in order?

The SPEAKER. That is a motion that would be in order; but the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin is to agree. The first question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 71, noes 48.

So (no further count being called for) the report was agreed to.

Mr. CASWELL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CASWELL. I now desire to inquire what is the status of the bill?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the conference report, there are two of the Senate amendments upon which there is still a disagreement, and they are subject to a further conference.

Mr. ROBESON. Then I move that a new conference be asked.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Would it be in order to move that the House recede from its disagreement to one of the amendments and agree to the same?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. HISCOCK. I submit that the motion better be made to include both amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Very well; then I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the two amendments of the Senate still disagreed to and agree to the same.

Mr. ROBESON. Which motion takes precedence; the motion to insist or the motion to recede?

The SPEAKER. The motion to recede.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts; and upon a division there were—ayes 78, noes 69.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not a quorum, I believe.

The SPEAKER. It is just a quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 37 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the motion be now stated distinctly, so that it can be understood by members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] is, that the House recede from its disagreement to the two amendments of the Senate which were reported as disagreed to by the committee of conference.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. And agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. Recede from its disagreement to those two amendments and agree to the same.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for a division of the question, and ask that a vote be taken upon each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would it not be in order to ask for a division of the vote on the two amendments, so that the one in regard to special facilities can be voted on separately from the one on the railroad question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's inquiry is simply an abstract question. The House has ordered the yeas and nays on receding from both amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the vote be taken on both; let each support the other.

Mr. ANDERSON. Very well, I withdraw my point.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent that the question upon which we are to vote be again stated.

Mr. CASWELL. I can state in a few words what it is. One of the propositions upon which there is still a disagreement between the two Houses is that relating to the appropriation of $185,000 for the fast-mail service; for what is called special mail facilities. The other is the amendment of the Senate in relation to the proposition to limit the rate of compensation for transportation of mails over subsidized railroads to the same rate which is allowed to land-grant railroad companies. Those are the two amendments still pending between the two Houses, and the question is now upon receding from a disagreement of the House to both those amendments.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 117, not voting 49; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, to recede was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. SKINNER with Mr. HEWITT of New York.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. HERNDON.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. DUGRO.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. CULLEN with Mr. UPSON.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary question. Does not the action just taken pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had adopted a resolution for printing 10,000 additional copies of the proceedings of the Yorktown centennial celebration; and a resolution for printing the report of the National Academy of Sciences on sorghum sugar; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the resolution of the House for printing the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States, and the resolution for printing the report of the Smithsonian Institution for 1882.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a joint resolution:

Joint resolution (S. R. 143) authorizing the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer relative to the maps, &c., for the census reports.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 359) to print 5,000 copies of the report of the board on behalf of the United States Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876;

A bill (H. R. 7115) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Thames River, near New London, in the State of Connecticut, and declare it a post-route;

A bill (H. R. 7597) to admit free of duty articles intended for the national mining and industrial exposition to be held at Denver, in the State of Colorado, during the year 1883;

A bill (H. R. 7623) relative to the Southern exposition to be held in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the year 1883; and

A bill (H. R. 7682) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within ten miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Missouri.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the post-office appropriation bill; further insisted on its amendments numbered 2 and 3, disagreed to by the House; asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK.

MISSISSIPPI ELECTION CONTEST—BUCHANAN VS. MANNING.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Elections on the contested-election case of Buchanan vs. Manning, from the second Congressional district of Mississippi.

Mr. CALKINS. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY].

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Speaker, in the case now under consideration there are two reports—one signed by a bare majority of the committee, and the other submitted in behalf of a minority by one member of the minority. As a member of the committee I believe members of the committee were agreed that there was no evidence in this case on which the contestant Buchanan could be declared entitled to the seat. The only question raised was whether the fraud and irregularity attending the election were such as to vitiate the whole election; and on this question the committee divided in opinion.

I have not examined with very great care or minuteness either the majority or the minority report. I do not agree with either; I do not disagree with either. The gentleman who was to present this case to the House on behalf of the minority, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THOMPSON] has gone home on account of sickness. He has submitted a report which in justice to him I desire to publish with my remarks. This report presents fully the case of the contestant.

I feel bound to say, from such examination of the evidence as I have made, that this case discloses a very large amount of fraud and irregularity. I think any one reading the report of the facts could very well come to the conclusion—that is the inclination of my own mind, although I have not studied the case sufficiently to come to a decided conclusion—that the evidence discloses so much fraud and irregularity as to prove a general scheme entered into by one party to defeat the one having a fair majority. Upon this point I do not wish to be understood as stating a definite conclusion; but such seems to be the tendency of the evidence; and such is the finding of the minority report, which I take the liberty of appending to my remarks.

Mr. W. G. THOMPSON, from the Committee on Elections, submitted the following report:

The second Congressional district is composed of the counties of De Soto, Marshall, Tate, Panola, La Fayette, Tallahatchie, Yalobusha, Benton, Tippah, and Union.

The election for member of Congress was held on the 2d day of November, 1880 and the candidates for Congress were Thomas W. Harris (Greenbacker), George M. Buchanan (Republican), and Van H. Manning (Democrat).

The motion of contestant, in which he set out his grounds of contest, and the reply of contestee thereto, are as follows, to wit:

"Notice of contest.

"HOLLY SPRINGS, MISS., November 23, 1880.

"Colonel VAN H. MANNING:

"You will take notice that it is my intention to contest your election as a member of Congress from the second district of Mississippi, as a result of the election held for the election of a member of Congress on Tuesday, November 2, 1880, in said district, and on the following grounds:

"1st. That in a portion of the counties comprising said district such persons were not appointed, neither was such representation given to the different political parties in said counties in the appointments of county commissioners of election as was designed and required by law.

"2d. That in a portion of the counties comprising said district election districts are abolished and other election districts established without complying with and in violation of law.

"3d. That in a portion of the counties comprising said district the registration of voters was not conducted as required by law, thereby depriving a large number of persons (of lawful right) of the privilege of registering and voting.

"4th. That at a large number of voting-places in said district, in the appointment of inspectors of election, such persons were not appointed, nor was such representation given (in making said appointments) to the different political parties, as was designed and required by law.

"5th. That in several of the counties comprising said district a large number of persons lawfully entitled to register were refused registration, and that the registration and transferring of votes was discontinued many days prior to the time contemplated by law, thereby depriving a large number of persons lawfully entitled to register (or transfer) from the right of registering or transferring and voting; and that in a portion of said counties the registration books were for a time removed from the place designated by law for their keeping, thereby depriving a large number of persons (of lawful right) of the privilege of registering (or transferring) and voting.

"6th. That at a large number of voting-places in said district many lawful voters were not permitted to vote, their votes having been tendered and rejected by the inspectors of election; that such unlawful interference and hinderance was permitted and practiced (such as is specially forbidden by law) as to obstruct and confuse the voters in the act of voting, or to deceive and prevent a large number of voters from delivering their ballots at the proper voting-places; that a large number of persons were permitted to vote for you who had no legal right to vote.

"7th. That at many of the voting-places United States supervisors of election were not permitted to exercise the duties of their office, being prevented therefrom by the unlawful interference of other officers of election, or from other sources, in violation of law, and to such an extent as to prevent their ascertaining the result of the election and from performing other duties required of them by law; that no separate lists of the names of voters were kept by the clerks of election, as was required by law; that the polls were not opened at the time required by law; were not kept open continuously from 9 a. m. till 6 p. m., as required by law, and that upon the closing of the polls the counting of the vote and making up of returns was not done at the voting-places, nor at the time required by law.

"8th. That at many of the voting-places ballots were received and counted that were not lawful ballots in form and print; that inspectors of election rejected and refused to count ballots that were lawful after the same had been lawfully deposited in the ballot-boxes; that inspectors of election (with knowledge of the fact at the time) permitted ballots to be voted that were not lawful ballots; that during the hours prescribed by law for voting voters were harassed and disturbed in such a manner as to prevent their voting in a free, fair, untrammeled, and peaceable manner.

"9th. That the names of a large number of legally registered voters were not placed upon the poll-books (by the officers whose duty it was to place said names on said books) used at many of the voting-places, and that in consequence thereof said legally registered voters were not permitted to vote, their votes being refused by the inspectors of elections; said inspectors giving as a reason for such refusal to receive such votes that the names or the parties applying to vote were not on the poll-books.

"10th. That the entire vote polled and counted and returned as a part of said voting-places was unlawfully rejected and thrown out (and not counted) by the county commissioners of election on making up their returns of the total vote of the county.

"11th. That at a portion of the voting-places the ballot-boxes were not opened in public when the polls closed, nor was the vote counted in public, nor at the time required by law to be counted; that in making up the returns a large number of ballots were counted as having been cast for you, when in truth and in fact such ballots were cast for other persons, or were ballots placed in the boxes in a manner not authorized by law.

"12th. That at many of the voting-places a much larger number of votes were returned as having been polled than were actually polled at said voting-places; that at many of the voting-places the poll-books for said places unlawfully contained the names of a large number of voters, which voters had no right to a vote at such voting-places, but resided in other election districts, and that the names of said voters also appeared on the poll-books of the voting-places of election districts to which said voters of right belonged.

"13th. That at many voting-places the election was conducted in many respects in utter disregard of law and the rights of voters; that the registration-books and the poll-books of a portion of the counties and election districts in said district were at divers and sundry times not in the custody and keeping of the proper lawfully constituted officers, but were on divers and sundry occasions in the care and possession of persons not lawfully entitled to such care and possession; that at a portion of the voting-places lawful ballots that were cast for me were not counted for me, but were (unlawfully) counted as having been cast for you, and were so returned by the officers of election; that there were a greater number of legal voters of said district who voted (or who offered to register and vote) and who were unlawfully prevented therefrom, who desired me as their representative in Congress, than there were who desired you as their representative in Congress from said district.

"Very respectfully,

"GEO. M. BUCHANAN."

"Contestee's answer.

"Captain GEO. M. BUCHANAN:

"SIR: I am in receipt of a notice from you dated November 23, 1880, of your intention to contest my election as a member of Congress of the 2d district of Mississippi as a result of the election held on the 2d of November last.

"To said notice I make the following answers, to wit:

"First answer. Protesting against the truth of the allegations in said notice, I object and say that said notice is so insufficient and defective that I need not deny or admit the allegations thereof, for the reasons, to wit, said notice does not specify particularly the grounds upon which you rely, and gives no reason for failing so to do.

"2d. The allegations are only conclusions of law and general averments of wrong-doing in some undefined portions of the district by unnamed election officials of precincts not specified, in unnamed counties, or by persons not named or described, and in places and by means not specified, and in violation of laws and the rights of others not designated.

"3d. Your allegations are so vague and uncertain that I am not informed as to the persons or officials whom you accuse of crime, nor where committed, nor do you aver that such wrong-doings were not instigated by you or that they were known to or acquiesced in by me, or that the result of the election was changed by reason of the matters set forth.

"Second answer. Without waiving any objection to the manifold vital defects of said notice, but reserving all benefit and advantage thereof, I deny each and every ground of contest set forth in said notice, and deny each and every allegation therein contained, and aver that throughout said Congressional district a free and fair election was held in all respects, except that in the county of Marshall and other counties at every precinct divers colored voters who wished to vote for me for member of Congress were deterred and prevented from doing so by reason of the threats of personal violence and other means of intimidation used and employed by other colored people, the neighbors of such voters, (the names of all of whom are unknown to me,) being instigated thereto by those that advocated your election, whereby I received less votes by one thousand or more than I otherwise would, and all such voters by means of such intimidations were induced contrary to their wishes not to vote at all, or to vote for you, and thereby the great majority of votes that I should have received more than you at said election was reduced to the number of about five thousand two hundred and fifty.

"Third answer. I charge and aver that you have made the wholesale charges of all kinds of crimes and irregularities contained in your said notice without specifications of persons or places, not because you had reason to believe that any one of them had been committed to your injury, but with the deliberate purpose to evade the limitation of the statute, and to speculate upon any future discoveries of evidence, and so you have made unlawful, vexatious, and fraudulent use of the notice and process authorized by statute, and the same should be quashed and dismissed.

"Respectfully, yours,

"VAN H. MANNING.

"WASHINGTON, December 20, 1880."

It will be observed that in the beginning the contestee claimed that the notice of contest was insufficient, and has insisted, for that cause, that the case should be dismissed.

In whatever manner any failure of proper notice might affect the right of contestant in this case (for insufficiency of pleading), if upon examination of the facts in the case it appear that the sitting member is not entitled to a seat, it is the duty of the committee to so report.

It appears that the race in this district was strongly contested by three candidates, representatives of the three political parties of the country.

ORGANIZATION OF PARTIES.

We will first notice the evidence bearing on the organization of each of the parties in the district at the time of this election.

We would prefer to eliminate from our report all reference to the organization of voters by colors, but, as this question is fully developed by evidence, we cannot well avoid it.

The contestee in his answer evidently relies upon the support of a large number of colored voters to bear out his right to a seat, and it is in his answer to notice of contest that the division of electors by colors is first referred to in the case.

We have in evidence conflicting statements as to the number of voters in the district.

On page 393 of record the contestee places in evidence a recent State census of Mississippi, and on page 199 is found the United States census for 1880, placed in evidence by the contestant.

Taking the latter, and applying the general rule of one voter to every five inhabitants, there are 19,743 colored voters and 17,155 white voters in the district, showing a majority of colored voters of some 2,600; while the former shows that there are 19,780 white voters and 18,998 colored voters in the district. We have examined the facts and comparisons made in contestant's brief (page 50) in relation to the State census, and are disposed to be governed by the United States census. As to manner and spirit of the canvass, it is the universal testimony that each party was active and zealous in its efforts to obtain a full vote, and that the canvass was conducted with an industry on the part of all three parties seldom developed in election cases. That each party made most extraordinary efforts to bring every possible voter to the polls is shown all through the evidence. And for that reason we do not deem it necessary to refer to it in detail. Nor is the manner in which the voters were organized and came to the polls less fully shown. Especially is it developed in the evidence of witnesses introduced by contestant upon this point.

We are disposed to give more than ordinary weight to the evidence of witnesses who (politically) are not supposed to have any special interest in the result of this controversy. We therefore submit the evidence as follows, which is fully corroborated throughout the testimony. See record, p. 19, q. 9; p. 22, q. 6 and q. 7; p. 26, q. 8; p. 23, q. 3; p. 35, q. 3; p. 40, q. 3; p. 464, q. 16; p. 445, q. 405; p. 474, witness Settle; p. 476, witness Matthews; p. 51, q. 3; p. 210, witness Nunnally; p. 189, q. 1; p. 185, q. 5; p. 193, q. 8; p. 56, q. 10.

"JOHN S. BURTON, being sworn according to law, testifies as follows:

"Question 1. You have been heretofore examined in this case, have you not?

"Answer. I have.

"Q. 2. State what your personal relations are to Mr. George M. Buchanan, the contestant in this case, and what they were during the canvass of 1880; also state your connection with the canvass of that period, and the position that you occupied then to Mr. Buchanan in the canvass.

"A. I am a close friend to Mr. Buchanan. At the commencement of the campaign I agreed to take charge of his Congressional candidacy, in which I employed speakers in the district, and employed speakers out of the district to come in this district, to make speeches for him. And I attended to the organization of clubs and to all campaign matters in which he was interested.

"Q. 3. State, as well as you can, the manner in which the campaign was conducted throughout the district on the part of the Republicans, giving the names or numbers of speakers and number of speeches made, as near as you can. State time of commencement of canvass; also state character of Democratic and Greenback canvass.

A. Our campaign was conducted very actively. The canvass commenced about the 15th of July, 1880. Capt. William Spears, one of the electors of the State at large, accompanied by Captain Buchanan, spoke at the principal county seats in the western part of the district. Our meetings were extensively advertised and largely attended. They spoke in Tallahatchie, Panola, Tate, De Soto, and Benton Counties. About the same time Col. R. W. Flourney, one of the State electors at large, commenced the canvass in the eastern part of the district, speaking at New Albany. The Republican convention was held at Oxford August 15, when Captain Buchanan was nominated. It was a very largely attended convention; every county was represented with but one exception. On or about the first of September the canvass was renewed. Colonel Mister, elector for fifth district, J. T. Settle, elector for second district, and W. F. Frazee, alternate elector for first district, all came into this district and kept up the canvass incessantly until the election. In addition to the prominent speakers mentioned, Hon. James Hill, chairman State executive committee, Col. Thomas Hunt, United States marshal, and Maj. W. H. Gibbs, all of the very best order of Republican speakers, spent some two weeks in canvassing the district; and, in addition, Captain Buchanan made speeches night and day for the entire time, commencing about the 15th of September, and including a day or so before the election. In addition to these speakers there were local speakers constantly engaged in the canvass at the time in prominent precincts in the district, and the canvass was conducted with the same activity and industry on which campaigns were conducted while the Republican party were in power in the State. No effort was spared by myself or Captain Buchanan, or his friends, to see that every vote in the district was brought out. The Democrats did not open their campaign for some weeks after the Republicans commenced, and so far as my observation went their campaign was not conducted with as much as usual activity until toward the close of the canvass. The Greenbackers also made a thorough and active canvass of every part of the district. As near as I can approximate, there were from two hundred and fifty to three hundred Republican speeches made in the district. I estimate this by the number of speeches and the time they occupied."

"W. S. FEATHERSTON, having been duly sworn, testified as follows, to wit:

"Interrogatory 1. How long have you lived in the State of Mississippi and the county of Marshall? What official positions have you held, if any?

"Answer. Forty years in the State of Mississippi and twenty-three in the county of Marshall. I have been a member of the Legislature and a member of Congress in the House of Representatives.

"Int. 2. What is your acquaintance with the people of Marshall County; extensive or otherwise?

"A. My acquaintance with the people of Marshall County has been pretty extensive, and is now.

"Int. 3. What is your profession; to which political party do you belong, and what is your official position in your party, and what was it during the political campaign of 1880?

"A. I am a lawyer by profession. I am a member of the Democratic party. I am now, and was during the campaign of 1880, chairman of the Democratic executive committee of Marshall County.

"Int. 4. What was the character of the political contest of 1880 in this Congressional district; was it one in which little interest was manifested by both Republican and Democratic parties, or otherwise?

"A. It was an interesting campaign, and one in which both the Republican and Democratic and also the Greenback party took considerable interest, especially in Democratic and Republican parties.

Int. 5. What was the character of the Democratic campaign of 1880 in Marshall County, active or otherwise; was, or not, the Democratic party of the county thoroughly organized? Which party made the most active campaign?

A. The Democratic campaign in Marshall County in 1880 was active and enthusiastic. I thought the party was well organized. The Democratic party made the most active campaign. I am certain that it did; and in every neighborhood in the county we had every local committee appointed that we thought was necessary to organize the party thoroughly and to bring out its full vote—such a campaign as we have been in the habit of inaugurating in this county for several years past."

"DR. R. J. LYLES, being duly sworn according to law, testified as follows:

"Question 1. Where do you reside? How long have you resided in Marshall County? State your occupation. Of what party are you a member, and to what extent were you engaged in the interest of your party in campaign of 1880? State to what extent the Greenback party of this county is composed of white or colored people, from which party it drew the most votes at last election (Democratic or Republican party), and to what extent from either.

"(Objected to by the contestee upon the ground that it is not rebutting testimony, but original.)

"Answer. I reside at Watson P. O., Marshall County, Miss.; lived in this county about eleven years; am a physician by occupation. I belong to the National Greenback party. I took part in the canvass, actively canvassing, making speeches in this county. The Greenback party in this county, to my best information, is composed principally of the white people—at least four-fifths of the Greenback party.

"Q. 2. Were you not a close personal friend of Col. T. W. Harris, the Greenback candidate for Congress; and did you or not manage the canvass in this county for him, or did you not do it chiefly?

"(Objected to on same ground as to No. 1.)

"A. I am a close personal friend of said Col. T. W. Harris. I took an active part in his behalf, and managed his interest in the western part of the county, particularly that section where I reside.

"Q. 3. At or about the close of the canvass did anything occur to induce you to advise Colonel Harris, the Greenback candidate, to withdraw from the canvass; and did you or not so advise him? And, if so, state freely and particularly the reasons for so advising him, and from what source you received your information inducing you to give such advice.

"A. Something did occur. A short while before the election, perhaps a week, I had a conversation with Col. Van H. Manning, the candidate of the Democratic party for Congress, in which he assured me the colored voters of the district were solid for Buchanan, the Republican candidate for Congress. He requested me to write to Col. T. W. Harris, the Greenback candidate for Congress, that he (Colonel Harris) was 'gone up,' and to come home. I assured Colonel Manning that if his statement was correct, I would prefer that Harris would withdraw from the canvass. Colonel Manning said that, according to his best knowledge and judgment, his statement was correct. On that assurance, together with my personal knowledge of the fact that the colored voters in my neighborhood were solid for Buchanan, I telegraphed Col. T. W. Harris at Batesville, Miss., that his chances here were compromised; that the colored voters were solid for Buchanan. Colonel Manning brought said telegram to Holly Springs for me. He afterwards assured me that he sent the telegram to Colonel Harris.

"Q. 4. Was it or was it not a fact, at the time that Colonel Manning made the foregoing statement to you, that he had canvassed the entire ten counties comprising this Congressional district, and that the canvass absolutely closed within a few days after said conversation referred to?

"(Same objections as before.)

"A. He stated to me that he had made an entire canvass of the district, and that the statement made to me was founded on his information that he had gained during the canvass. This was but a few days before the election.

"Q. 5. In your reply to question three, do you mean to refer exclusively to the colored race or otherwise?

"A. I mean the colored vote exclusively.

"Q. 6. State to what extent, if you know, the colored vote that voted was cast for Buchanan, or other candidates (as applied to precincts in the western part of the county), at the last election.

"A. From all information I have, it was a solid Republican vote for George M. Buchanan for Congress in the precincts referred to. So far as my personal knowledge goes, it only refers to my own box.

"Q. 7. To what extent is the negro vote in the district referred to Republican?

"A. Pretty unanimous."

"Col. THOS. W. HARRIS, being sworn according to law, testifies as follows:

"Question 1. State where you reside; how long you have there resided; your occupation; how long you have pursued said occupation, and to what extent in the second Congressional district of Mississippi.

"Answer. I reside in Holly Springs, Miss., and have resided there since about the year 1850; I am a lawyer; have been upwards of thirty years, and engaged in the duties of my profession in several of the counties of the second Congressional district since I have lived in Holly Springs; my practice has been general and quite extensive.

"Q. 2. With what political party have you been identified prior to the year 1879? State also what official position you held in said party during the year 1876, and since that time.

"A. I was a member of the State executive committee of the Democratic party in 1877 and 1878; and also chairman of the executive committee of that party for the county of Marshall; and was a member of and acted with the Democratic party until 1879; since which time I have been acting with the National Greenback Labor party.

"Q. 3. Were you a candidate for office at the election November 2, 1880? If so, state for what office; if you made a canvass of the second Congressional district, to what extent; also state the extent of your acquaintance with the politics of the voters of said second Congressional district.

"A. I was the candidate of the National Greenback Labor party for Congress for the second Congressional district at the election in November, 1880, and as such canvassed the district generally; my knowledge of the politics of the voters of said district is such as such a canvass would give, in connection with my long residence in the same, engaged in my profession, and having taken a general interest in politics since I attained my majority.

"Q. 4. What class of persons constitute the three political parties in this district? State the different divisions as near as you can as to color.

"A. A very great majority of the colored voters of the district belong to the Republican party; the white voters are divided generally between the Democratic and Greenback parties; colored voters who act and vote with the Democratic party are in my opinion very few in number; in the election of last year my observation and information led me to believe that out of the thirty-five hundred and eighty-five votes reported to have been cast for the Greenback candidate for Congress in the said district there could not have been more than about one thousand of them colored, most of whom live in Yalabusha County; the white voters who act with the Republican party in said district I don't think are at all numerous.

"Q. 5. Have or have you not, since the election, fully and particularly informed yourself as to the number of votes you received at said election at each of the various counties and precincts in said district?

"A. I have seen statements purporting to be authentic as to the number of votes reported to have been cast for me, and have heard statements from friends upon the same subject.

"Q. 6. Did you witness just preceding the election a conversation between Colonel Manning, candidate for Congress, and Dr. A. M. Lyle on the subject as to how and for whom the colored voters of this district were going to vote? If so, state what was said between them on the subject.

("Objected to on the ground that the question is original and should have been asked, if at all, during the time allowed to take testimony-in-chief.)

"A. In a discussion between Colonel Manning and myself at Watson, in this county, I think the night preceding the day of the election, the question arose as to a report that Dr. Lyle had abandoned me and intended to support Colonel Manning, and that Lyle had sent me a dispatch suggesting my withdrawal from the canvass because the colored vote of the district had concentrated upon Captain Buchanan, the Republican candidate for Congress. Dr. Lyle was present and stated to the audience, in my presence and Colonel Manning's, that he (Lyle) had met with Colonel Manning and was told by him to write or telegraph me that I had better withdraw, as the colored vote was all going for Buchanan; that he (Lyle) replied such was the condition of things in his neighborhood, and that upon the statement made to him by Colonel Manning he had accordingly telegraphed me at Batesville, in Panola County, that the negroes were all going for Buchanan, or words to that effect; that he sent me the dispatch based alone upon what Manning had told him, except as to the condition of things in his own neighborhood; that he did not profess to know what was the condition of affairs beyond his own neighborhood. I never received the foregoing dispatch at Batesville, having left before it was received. The foregoing is substantially what occurred as I remember it.

"Q. 7. What proportion of the white vote of this Congressional district are opposed to the Democratic party, and what proportion of said vote would vote against the candidates of said party at an open, fair election, and upon full assurance that their votes would be counted as cast?

"(Objected to as irrelevant, incompetent, and illegal.)

"A. I can only answer as a matter of opinion. It would depend very much upon the questions involved and what parties were engaged in the contest. I think, however, that one-fourth or one-fifth of the white voters of the district are opposed to the present policy and management of the Democratic party, and would cast their votes against it.

"Re-examined:

"Q. 1. State what proportion of the colored vote in this district voted the Democratic ticket, and what proportion of the white vote voted the Republican ticket, as near as you can, in numbers as to each party, as estimated from your information gained during the canvass. State fully.

"(Objected to on ground that it is original, and not in rebuttal of anything drawn out on cross-examination, and as incompetent.)

"A. I can only give an opinion in answer to this question. From all the information in my possession, my opinion is that there were fully as many, and I think more, white votes cast for the Republican candidate for Congress than there were colored votes for the Democratic candidate. When the extraordinary efforts made by the Republican party had succeeded in reorganizing the colored vote, my opinion is that the work done by that party was pretty thoroughly successful. I know of no county in the district in which the Greenback party succeeded in maintaining its control over the colored vote, except Yalabusha. In addition, I am satisfied that some white Greenbackers had become so much incensed in consequence of the warfare waged against them and their party by the Democratic party that, despairing of the success of their own candidate, they voted for the Republican candidate; and further than this deponent saith not.

"Q. 2. What is the standing of the contestant, George M. Buchanan, in his party and as a citizen?

"A. I think his position in his party is a prominent and controlling one, certainly in his section of the State. As a citizen, he is kind, charitable, generous, and public-spirited, and I know nothing to his detriment except that he belongs to what is known here as the Radical party, and that he became a candidate for Congress in the last election to my detriment. As a candidate for office, I am satisfied that he is considerably stronger than his party, in this county particularly. As a neighbor he is equal to any man.

"X Q. 4. You have been asked as to the standing and character of George M. Buchanan as a politician and as a gentleman. Please state as to the character and standing of Van H. Manning in both respects?

"A. Having been three times nominated by his party as a candidate for Congress, and returned as elected, is a sufficient answer as to the character and standing of Van H. Manning with his party. In all the elements of kindness, generosity, and charity he is the equal of any—infinitely too much so for his own good."

Witness Mahon (p. 106, record):

"Q. 7. Do you know of a newspaper published in Holly Springs known as the Holly Springs 'South'? If so, state the political party that that paper advocates.

"(Question objected to and ruled out.)

"Q. 8. Did you or not read in the Holly Springs 'South,' a Democratic newspaper published in Holly Springs, and published on December 8, 1880, the following language:

"[The South, Holly Springs, Miss., December 8, 1880.]

"BUCHANAN TO CONTEST.

"It seems to be generally believed by our exchanges that Buchanan will contest for Manning's seat. If he ever gets it it will be by an utterly unscrupulous partisan decision by the House of Representatives. Never was there a fairer election in any district of the State than that of this, when Manning was elected. The negroes generally voted for Buchanan. The whites divided between Manning and Harris. Every man of the three parties voted as he pleased, except those who voted for Buchanan, and they went as a flock, under instructions, by which they were easily fooled into voting for him. The ballots were printed in accordance with the law of the State and counted. Buchanan was beaten by not getting votes enough—that is all. He will have to be elected at Washington, if he ever is. It will not be by votes of the people of Mississippi. And when Congress seats Buchanan the second Congressional district of Mississippi will have no representative.

"(Question objected to and ruled out as before, and question not permitted to be answered.)

"Q. State whether or not you know the editor of the Holly Springs 'South,' and his character for political intelligence; if so, state his character for political intelligence?

"A. I know Mr. Tyler when I meet him, and his character for intelligence is good.

"Q. 9. State, if you know, in what party interest that newspaper, the Holly Springs 'South,' acted during the campaign of 1880, and what candidate for Congress it advocated.

"(Objected to by counsel for contestee as being irrelevant, and objection sustained and question not permitted to be answered.)"

For reasons which will hereafter appear apparent, we have briefly referred to the evidence of the voting strength of each of the political parties; the class of voters from which each party was organized, the canvass made by each, and the manner in which each party's vote turned out and came to the polls.

INTIMIDATION OF COLORED VOTERS BY CONTESTANT'S FRIENDS.

We have very carefully examined the evidence relating to the intimidation of colored voters by contestant's friends (as is alleged by contestee, in his reply to notice of contest), and do not find that the evidence discloses a single instance where a colored voter was deprived of voting for contestee by reason of threats or intimidation from any source. The evidence discloses the fact to be that contestee received but few of the votes of colored voters, and that there was by far a larger number of white voters who voted for contestant than there were colored voters who voted for contestee. The vote as returned is stated as follows, upon page 393 of the record:

Harris, Greenbacker	3,585
Buchanan, Republican	9,096
Manning, Democrat	15,255

The evidence shows there to be about 19,700 colored voters and about 17,100 white voters in the district, with some 2,600 more colored voters than whites; that the colored voters are Republicans, with few exceptions, and so voted (or made the effort to vote), as is shown to be the case also with quite a number of white voters; and that the white voters generally were divided (in a measure) between the Democratic and Greenback candidates. Granting that the canvass was equally thorough and active on the part of all parties, and that the voters generally came to the polls, we cannot resist the conclusion that on the day of the election the voting strength of contestee's party was in a minority to the extent of 5,000 to 6,000 voters.

Yet notwithstanding this evident condition of the two parties on the day of the election, we are confronted with a return, heretofore referred to, giving the contestee a majority of some 5,300 voters. Were we to take the State census as evidence in reaching a conclusion on this point, contestee's party would still be in a large minority.

There are only 17,155 white voters in the district. The proof is clear that Harris, the Greenback candidate, received 3,585 votes, of which (not exceeding) 1,000 were colored, leaving him 2,585 white votes.

It is further clearly proven that quite a number of white voters did not go to the polls. (See evidence, Howze, p. 19; Newsom, p. 22.)

It is further proven that contestant received a number of white votes, and yet, according to the returns, the contestee is credited with 15,215 votes, which is manifestly impossible under the circumstances.

On the other hand, the contestant is credited with only 9,996 votes, while there are 19,800 colored voters in the district, who, according to the proof of contestee's own friends, were all solid for contestant, and came to the polls and voted or offered to vote.

This again is a manifest impossibility. This at once throws suspicion on the fairness of the count, and when the whole of the election machinery was in the hands of contestee's friends the burden of showing the fairness of the count should be upon him when a reasonable doubt of fairness has been established by the proof. This brings us to a consideration of the evidence tending to show how this result was brought about (after first examining the election laws of Mississippi bearing on the points in controversy).

"ELECTION LAWS, CODE OF 1880.

"SEC. 105. The books of registration of the electors of the several election districts in each county and the poll-books as heretofore made out shall be delivered by the county board of registration in each county, if not already done, to the clerk of the circuit court of the county, who shall carefully preserve them as records of his office, and the poll-books shall be delivered in time for every election to the commissioners of election, and after the election shall be returned to said clerk.

"The clerk of the circuit court of each county shall register on the registration book of the election district of the residence of such person any one entitled to be registered as an elector, on his appearing before him, and taking and subscribing the oath required by article seven and section three of the constitution of this State, and printed at the top of the pages of the registration books, which subscription of the oath aforesaid shall be by the person writing his name or mark in the proper column of said book."

Section 121 of the Mississippi Code of 1880 is as follows:

"Two months before any general election and any election of Representatives in Congress, and any election of elector of President and Vice-President of the United States, the governor and lieutenant-governor, or president of the senate if the lieutenant-governor is performing the duties of governor, or if there is no lieutenant-governor, and the secretary of state, or a majority of such officers, shall appoint in each county in this State 'commissioners of election,' to consist of three competent and suitable men, who shall not all be of the same political party, if such men of different political parties can conveniently be had in the county, and who, for good cause, may be removed in the same manner as they are appointed. Before acting the said commissioners shall severally take the oath of office prescribed by the constitution and file it in the office of chancery clerk of the county, who shall preserve such oaths. While engaged in their duties the said commissioners shall be conservators of the peace, with all the powers and duties of such, in the county in which they are acting. They shall continue in office for one year unless removed and until successors are appointed."

Section 124 of the Mississippi Code of 1880 is as follows:

"On the last Monday of October preceding a general election, and five days before any other, the commissioners of election shall meet at the office of the clerk of the circuit court of the county, and carefully revise the registration-books of the county and the poll-books of registration of the several precincts, and shall erase therefrom the names of all persons improperly thereon, or who have died, removed, or become disqualified as electors from any cause, and shall register the names of all persons illegally denied. All complaints of a denial of registration may be made to and be heard and decided by the commissioners of elections, who shall cause the books of registration to be corrected, if necessary, so as to show the names of all qualified electors in the county, and such books shall be prima facie evidence of the names and number of the qualified electors of the county.

"SEC. 125. The clerk of the circuit court shall attend such commissioners, if so requested, and shall furnish them the books of registration and the poll-books, and shall render them all needed assistance of which he is capable in the performance of the duties in revising their lists of qualified electors."

Section 133 is as follows:

"Prior to any election the said commissioners of elections shall appoint three persons for each election precinct to be inspectors of the election, who shall not all be of the same political party, if suitable persons of different parties are to be had in the election district, and if any person appointed shall fail to attend and serve, the inspectors present, if any, may designate one to fill his place, and if such commissioners of election shall fail to make such appointment, and in case of failure of all those appointed to attend, any three qualified electors present when the polls shall be opened may act as inspectors."

Section 136 is in the following words:

"All elections by the people of this State shall be by ballot. The poll shall be opened at nine o'clock in the morning and be kept open until six o'clock in the evening, and no longer; and every person entitled to vote shall deliver to one of the inspectors, in the presence of the others, a ticket or scroll of paper on which shall be written or printed the names of the persons for whom he intends to vote, which ticket shall be put in the ballot-box, and at the same time the clerks shall take down on separate lists the name of every person voting; and when the election shall be closed the inspectors shall publicly open the box and number the ballots, at the same time reading aloud the names of the persons voted for, which shall be taken down by said clerks in the presence of the inspectors; and if there should be two or more tickets rolled up together, or if any ticket shall contain the names of more persons for any office than such elector had a right to vote for, such ballot shall not be counted."

In brief, the circuit clerk of each county is the sole registrar of all the voters. The registration-books are records, and are required to be kept in his office. The registrar is required to register voters any day in the year that the voter may choose to apply for registration, and every person desiring to register is required to come to the county seat for that purpose, and must make oath and sign the registration-books.

The State board, consisting of the governor, lieutenant-governor, and secretary of state, appoint three election commissioners for each county, who are to be selected for their competency and suitableness to discharge the duties required of them. They must not all be chosen from the same political party.

These county commissioners are required to meet at the office of the registrar immediately preceding every election and correct the registration and poll books, "so as to show the names of all qualified electors in the county." The registrar is required to assist them in the discharge of the latter duty. These commissioners appoint three inspectors to each voting-place in the county, who must be selected from electors suitable and competent to perform the duties of inspectors (count the vote, make out, certify the returns, &c.), and these inspectors are to be selected from different political parties.

The election commissioners hold in their hands the entire election machinery of their counties; they establish and abolish election precincts at will; they revise the registration and poll books, erasing names therefrom as occasion demands; they sit as a court to decide appeals from the circuit clerk when complaint is made that registration is improperly refused; they appoint all election officers in their counties, including peace officers to preserve order at the voting-places; they receive, compute, and return the whole vote of their counties; and to exercise these great powers and delicate trusts the concurrence of only two of the three commissioners is required. Will it be pretended that men who are utterly illiterate are "competent and suitable" for so important an office, or that their appointment is a compliance with the law in any respect?

Before proceeding to review the acts of the election officers, it is well enough to call attention to a circular issued by General Featherstone at an early day of the canvass. The importance of this circular is in the fact that General Featherston is contestee's own witness, and is a man of national character, having been a Representative in Congress before the war, and now circuit judge in the State of Mississippi. (See his evidence, record, p. 331.)

"X Int. 13. Did you as chairman of the Democratic committee, and by authority of the committee, issue and cause to be published the following call, which I here append as part of this question, marked G. M. B.?

"'MASS CONVENTION.

"'There will be a mass convention of the Democrats of Marshall County at the court-house in Holly Springs, at 11 o'clock a. m., on Saturday, the 24th day of July, 1880, for the purpose of electing delegates to attend a district convention in Water Valley, Miss., on the 11th day of August, 1880, to nominate a candidate for Congress.

"'Let everybody come.

"'Let the enemy know in the beginning that in this campaign the Democracy will win at all hazards.

"'By order of the executive committee.

"'W. S. FEATHERSTON, Chairman.

"'ARTHUR FANT, Secretary.

"'(Indorsed:) G. M. B.'

"A. The executive committee instructed the secretary to prepare and publish a call for the meeting indicated in the card, and the call was prepared and published by the secretary."

The foregoing may very properly be considered the initial step on the part of contestee's friends towards carrying the election in the manner indicated by the circular.

As we have said in another Mississippi case—Lynch vs. Chalmers—decided in this Congress—

"The general doctrine in construing election statutes is, that they are to be construed liberally as to the elector, and strictly as to the officers who have duties to perform under them. A statute directing certain things to be done by election officers ought to be followed by them with a high degree of strictness, but duties to be performed by the electors, as declared by statute, are directions merely."

We do not propose to discuss the great and vital importance of an impartial registration of voters where it is made a condition precedent to the exercise of the elective franchise, as is the case under the constitution and laws of Mississippi.

APPOINTMENT OF ELECTION OFFICERS.

The evidence is very full that both the Republicans and Greenbackers of the counties challenged made every effort by petition and otherwise to secure the appointment of such (reasonable) number of both county commissioners and also precinct inspectors as they were fairly entitled to under the law, and it is no less clear that their wishes were almost entirely disregarded, especially in counties having large Republican majorities prima facie. We submit the following brief of evidence on this point:

"DE SOTO COUNTY.

"J. F. Pratt, on page 24, testifies that 'the county board of election commissioners was composed of two well-known Democrats and one colored man, neither of whom were identified with the Republican party—the colored man can neither write nor read writing—and that the Republican county committee endeavored to secure the appointment of Newson, a well-known and competent Republican, as commissioner, and failed.'

"See also testimony of Nelson, on page 37, showing 'that an ignorant colored man was appointed commissioner over protest of Republicans of the county,' and testimony of Anthony Mathews, the commissioner appointed, on page 28, showing that he could not write or read writing, and knew nothing of the correctness of the returns, except what was told him by the other commissioners.

"LA FAYETTE COUNTY.

"B. P. Scrugga, an intelligent white Republican, was recommended for commissioner by his party friends, and a negro, 'Thomas Jefferson, who has very limited education, if any, was appointed' (see page 51). Testimony of Jefferson, the colored man appointed commissioner, page 71, shows that no Republican recommended his appointment, and that he was appointed on recommendation of the chancery clerk, county treasurer, and other prominent Democrats; and that he was not consulted by his co-commissioners in the appointment of election officers; and his evidence will show his utter unfitness for the position. The testimony of Beauland, page 311, shows that he and one R. S. McGowan were the two Democratic commissioners; and the testimony of E. Nunnally, page 211, shows the unscrupulous character of McGowan, that he said to witness that he would 'stuff ballot-boxes to beat the Republicans,' and this witness testifies that he would not believe McGowan on oath.

"TALLAHATCHIE COUNTY.

"The testimony of T. W. Turner, pages 186-7, shows that no regard was paid to the wishes of Republicans in appointing commissioners; that two Democrats and one incompetent colored man were appointed. The Republicans desired the appointment of Littlewort, whose character for intelligence will be shown by his evidence on pages 194-5. The want of educational qualifications for the position of commissioner is shown by the evidence of the colored commissioner himself, on pages 195-6, which discloses the fact that he could not read the manuscript of his evidence then being given.

"TATE COUNTY.

"In this county, as will be seen in the evidence of Wright, on pages 172 to 174, two of the commissioners appointed were Democrats, and the other a Greenbacker, and that when Jones, the Greenback commissioner, failed to secure the appointment of the election officers he proposed, left the board, saying he would have nothing more to do with it, and that only four of the election officers for the county recommended by the Republicans were appointed, and only two of them served. (See testimony of Shands, page 402.)

"MARSHALL COUNTY.

"In this county, as will be shown by the evidence of McCorkle, on pages 123 to 125, two Democrats and one competent colored Republican were appointed commissioners, and that the Republican commissioner resigned on account of the disregard of his rights as a commissioner by his colleagues, in abolishing election precincts, and in transferring others without his presence or consent, and in signing his name to notices of the same, thus leaving the election to be managed by the two Democratic commissioners; and on pages 336 to 339, in the testimony of Mr. Wallace, one of the Democratic commissioners, and a brother-in-law of the Democratic candidate for Congress, it is shown that some time in October, after serving as commissioner nearly the entire canvass, and after the work of abolishing and transferring election precincts had been accomplished, Mr. Wallace also resigned his office out of considerations of delicacy, and his successor was afterwards appointed, but it does not appear that any successor was appointed to the Republican commissionership."

The manner in which these county commissioners performed their duty in appointing the inspectors of election, especially in counties that were manifestly largely Republican, is very fairly stated by contestant's counsel as follows:

"As will be seen from the evidence of Johnson, page 231, the Greenbackers were not recognized as a party, and there was no pretense of appointing their men as election officers; and the one inspector pretendedly accorded to the Republicans was not always appointed, and when appointed was almost universally so utterly incompetent as to render the appointment worse than a mockery. Take for illustration the county of De Soto, where there are several thousand voters, sixteen voting-places, and as a consequence ninety-nine election officers; and of these one inspector appears to have been a Greenbacker (see page 244), and of the others not more than sixteen belonging to the parties opposing the party of contestee, and fourteen of them testify that they cannot read or write. Incredible as this statement may appear, it will be fully verified by the evidence on pages 10, 12, 13, 15, 28, 32, 43, 45, 46, and 47, this being the testimony of the officers themselves. That suitable Republicans and Greenbackers could be had in the election districts, and that efforts were made in writing and in person by representatives of both the opposing parties to have these suitable and competent men appointed, will be fully shown on pages 25, 27, and 231. That the appointment of intelligent Democrats, even when recommended by Republicans, was refused, will be seen in the evidence of Scruggs at the top of page 52.

"Not to dwell tediously upon it, the two counties of La Fayette and Marshall have about the same number of election officers, belonging to the different parties in about the same proportion, and eleven of these in each county testify that they cannot either read or write. (See pages 57, 60, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 72, 73, 74, 92, 95, 108, 109, 114, 116, 117, 119, 121, 125.) That suitable persons of the opposition parties could be found in the election districts of these counties, and that earnest efforts were made to secure their appointment, see pages 51, 105, and 203. For other appointments of election officers of the same character in other counties, read pages 170, 185, 190, 193, 178, 187, and 174. In the five counties of Marshall, La Fayette, Tate, De Soto, and Tallahatchie, out of the small number of election officers appointed from the opposition parties, over forty of them could not read or write, and the three or four of them who claimed to be able to read print, upon being tested, were found to be deficient in that. As specimens of these officers thus arbitrarily appointed, read the testimony of Cezar Pegues, on page 69, where he testifies that he is 'about sixty-five years of age. One of my eyes is entirely out; the other I cannot see good out of, and I cannot read or write'; and of Seaborn Clark, on page 114, where he says, 'I can neither read or write; I cannot hear good out of one ear at all; I got a pin stuck in the drum of my ear.'"

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.

The evidence shows that in the four counties of Marshall, De Soto, Panola, and Tallahatchie (all confessedly largely Republican counties), the county commissioners did assemble at the registrar's office some ten days prior to the election, but manifestly not for the purpose of correcting the books "so as to show the names of all the qualified electors of the county," as is the plain language of the statute, but they met there and deliberately stopped the registration of voters in the counties mentioned, and, not satisfied with this, went deliberately to work (for what cause it is not stated) and erased from the poll and registration books the names of nearly 1,000 Republican voters, who had previously registered, many of whom swear that they had been voting for years at the precincts where they offered to vote at this election, and the fact that their names had been erased from the books was not developed until they came to the polls to vote. This is shown to be the case at some forty precincts in the district. (See pages record 19, 23, 24, 27, 30, 52, 76, 80, 123, 167, 196, as to closing of registration.)

For evidence of Republicans' names being erased from registration and poll-books, and not being permitted to vote in consequence thereof, see record, page 83, Q. 21; pp. 112, 91, 97, 94, 108, 119, 109, 111, 117, 60, 100, 28, 19, 31, 34, 12, 13, 35, 44, 25, 40, 41, 168, 157, 178, 438, 439, 440, 447, 448, 450, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 462, 463, 464.

Record, p. 24, Q. 5: Witness "Pratt" says, State board appointed an ignorant colored man to represent the Republicans "who is totally ignorant," and not identified with the party, as one of the county election commissioners.

Record, p. 28, Q. 2 and 3: This commissioner says he cannot write or read writing, and knew nothing of the compiling of the returns save what the Democratic members of the board told him.

Record, p. 20, Q. 15: "Howze," Greenbacker, proves that "Johnson," one of the Democratic commissioners, forged a poll-book and caused it to be substituted for holding the election at Depot Box, instead of the poll-book belonging to that precinct (at Hernando).

Record, p. 29, Q. 2: "Dr. W. M. Johnson" says that this election commissioner admitted to him that he did make the book.

Record, p. 233, Q. 25: This commissioner says he has no information (except hearsay) as to whether or not he and others are under indictment in the Federal court for the infraction of election laws.

Record, p. 458, Q. 6 and 7: "Howze" says he was present in court, and that this commissioner was present, when his case was continued till July term, 1880.

Record, p. 457, Q. 3: Election commissioners abolish Plumb Point precinct.

Record, p. 21, Q. 19; p. 23, Q. 8; p. 24, Q. 7; p. 27, Q. 6: Ten days prior to the election, the registrar refuses to register any more voters, and the books are closed against them for the season. "Nelson" says voters were coming in every day and refused registration.

Record, p. 21, Q. 19: "Howze" says (estimates) that he saw as many as 150 Republicans during that time who told him that they had applied for registration and were refused.

Record, p. 23, Q. 8: "Newsom" says, the closing of the registration at that time was a source of general complaint among Republicans from all over the country, who came for that purpose. That there are a large number of voters who generally neglect to register till just prior to election. Witness heard no Democrat complain.

MARSHALL COUNTY.

Record, Q. 3 and 4, p. 336: State board appoints "Wallace," Manning's brother-in-law, as one of the county commissioners.

Record, Q. 4 and 5, p. 338: "Wallace" is shown to have been in the habit of officiating at elections. Claims to have acted but for a short time, but on being pressed (p. 338, last question) admits that he was such all the campaign.

Record, Q. 7 to 10, p. 123: "McCorkle," Republican commissioner, shows that Wallace and Hardin, the two Democratic commissioners, held a meeting without advising him of it and forged his name to a circular, under which they abolished two precincts, and changed the location of two others, which was done without his knowledge or consent.

Record, Q. 1 and 2, p. 125: McCorkle shows that he was never out of Holly Springs more than one day at a time at that period. (See circular referred to, p. 124.)

Record, p. 76, Q. 7; p. 80, Q. 5: The county registrar closes the registration-books ten days before the election and no voters are permitted to register after that time.

Record, p. 123, Q. 4 and 5: "McCorkle," county commissioner, says that they were always crowded with applications for registration papers during the last few days prior to elections that 500 or 600 voters generally applied for registration within that period.

Record, p. 80, Q. 7: "Cunningham," on Wednesday before election, says he took down the names of about one hundred who were refused registration, many of whom he accompanied to the registrar for that purpose (that he staid at the court-house all day for that purpose), at request of Buchanan.

LA FAYETTE COUNTY.

Record, p. 51, Q. 4: "Scruggs" says State board appointed ignorant man as Republican representative on board county commissioners over protest of Republicans.

Record, p. 71; Re-examination Q. 1, 2, and 3: Republican commissioner shows that he was appointed at solicitation of Democrats only and that no Republican recommended him.

Record, p. 211, Q. 9: Shows McGowan to be a man utterly devoid of character. McGowan was one of the Democratic commissioners of that county.

Record, p. 60, Q. 1, 2, 3, and 4: McGowan presided as associate notary (deputy chancery clerk) in taking this testimony, where his own acts was directly the subject of investigation.

Record, p. 210: "Nunnally" says he would not believe "McGowan" on oath.

Record, p. 70, Q. 2, 3, 4 and 5: "Jefferson," Republican commissioner, says the Democratic commission appointed the inspectors without consulting him, and refused to appoint any one recommended by Republicans. Registration of Republicans avoided by taking registration-books to Democratic meetings and other places. Code Miss., Secs. 11 and 12, requires registration-books to be kept at office of circuit clerk and requires all electors desiring to register to come to the court-house (clerk's office). The books are part of the records of his office, and are made in a statutory form, one for each district in the county, and all persons registering are required to sign this book.

Record, p. 52, Q. 6: "Scruggs" says registration-books were taken to Democratic speaking at Stoner's Mill the day that the Republicans had speaking at Oxford.

Record, p. 307, Q. 10: Contestee's witness "Andrews" says books were taken to Abbeville, College Hill, Alexander's Store, and Free Springs, on more than one occasion.

TALLAHATCHIE COUNTY.

Record, p. 187, Q. 5, 6, and 7: "Turner" says State board appoints an ignorant man as the Republican representative as county commissioner over protest of Republicans.

Record, pp. 196 and 197; re-examination, Q. 1, cross-examination, Q. 1: "Downy," the Republican commissioner, shows his utter ignorance, and that he cannot read writing.

Record, pp. 421 and 422, cross-examination: "Sanders" shows that "McAfee," one of the Democratic commissioners, while acting as such in 1879 sent the wrong poll-books to several precincts by the Democratic candidates, and in consequence thereof they held no election at these precincts.

NOTE.—No Republican vote was cast in this county for President or Congressman in 1876, by reason of wholesale destruction of Republican tickets:

Record, p. 414: "London," cross-examination, Q. 1 and 2, on this subject.

Record, p. 421, Q. 2: "Sanders," county registrar, closes the registration of voters five days before the election.

PANOLA COUNTY.

Record, p. 167, Q. 4: "Brown," commissioner, says registrar turned over the registration books to commissioners, for revision, ten days before the election, and (Q. 6) says the registrar did no more registering after that time. See Q. 1, cross-examination: Says the commissioners did some registering during that time, but they were only revising registration. X Q. 6: Election laws, section 124, only authorize commissioners to register persons on appeal (where the registrar has refused them registration).

Record, p. 142, Q. 11: "Pipkin" says books were turned over to commissioners ten days before the election, and (p. 143, Q. 12) the board were transferring names during that time; that registrar helped them register one day.

Record, p. 157, Q. 3, 4, and 5: "Small" says Brown and Ruffin, the election commissioners, acted as inspectors, and held the election at Sardis precinct; that neither of them were sworn as inspectors; that Ruffin was a voter at another precinct. (This is not denied by any witness.)

TATE COUNTY.

Record, p. 173, Q. 3: Republicans have no representative on board of election commissioners, but "Jones," Greenbacker, is appointed.

Registration closed as against Republicans.

Record, p. 398, Q. 1 and 2, cross-examination: Contestee's witness Clifton says he sent registration-books to country precincts by one "Medders," who is editor of the Democratic paper. This was just prior to the election.

Record, p. 401, Q. 2 and 3: "Medders" accompanies "Shands," Democratic "elector," to his appointments all over the county the week preceding the election, thus closing out all persons applying at the registrar's office for registration, where the law required the books to be kept and registration to be done, and where the law required all persons to come who desired to register, from all parts of the county.

It is in evidence that "Johnson," one of the Democratic election commissioners for "De Soto" County was convicted at the last term of the Federal court held at Oxford, Miss., and fined $500 for fraudulently erasing the names of voters from the registration and poll books of that county (at this election) (see transcript court record filed in case); that all three of the election commissioners for (Panola) county were indicted and plead guilty at the December term, 1880, of the same Federal court, to the charge of refusing to register voters at this election (see transcript court record filed in case); that the two Democratic election commissioners for "Marshall County" were indicted and plead guilty at the December term of the same court (1880) to the charge of fraudulently erasing names of voters from the poll-books of that county. (See printed record, page 6.)

That C. S. Bowen, an election inspector, was tried and convicted at the same term of this court for ejecting a United States supervisor from the polls in Marshall County; and

That Seaborn Clark and N. Mims, inspectors of election, plead guilty to charge of ejecting United States supervisor from the poll in Marshall County at the same term of court. (See printed record, page 6.)

That "Maxwell," the registrar for "De Soto County," is now under indictment in the same court for registering voters by proxy and for denying registration to one class of voters. (See record transcript filed.)

We here give the evidence of G. C. Chandler, the district attorney for the northern district of Mississippi, showing what seems to your committee a prevailing sentiment (in the second Mississippi district and adjoining districts) as to the right of parties to interfere with poll-books, election officers, and ballot-boxes. The record filed with the committee shows that a part of these election officers were permitted to plead guilty "nolo contendere." We can well imagine why a humane judge should be so considerate as to permit such a plea to be entered in view of a Mississippi statute affixing the penalty of disfranchisement for offenses of this kind.

The record, pages 382 and 387, shows that the parties from "Marshall" County were defended by volunteer and able counsel, who testify that they defended these men without fee or reward, because they saw they thought they were being persecuted. It is shown that three law firms of the city of Holly Springs tendered their services in the defense of these cases.

Page 5:

"G. C. CHANDLER, being sworn according to law, testifies as follows:

"Question 1. Where do you reside, and how long have you resided in the State of Mississippi?

"Answer. I reside at Corinth, Miss., and I have resided constantly in the State the last forty-five years.

"Q. 2. What official position do you now hold under the laws of the United States?

"A. I am United States attorney for the northern district of Mississippi.

"Q. 3. In your official capacity as district attorney of the United States for the court of the northern district of Mississippi, if to your knowledge there were any indictments found by the grand jury at the December term, 1880, of said court for violations of the election laws of the United States, state how many, for what particular offense, in what counties, and disposition (if any) was made of such cases, together with the names of parties indicted. State fully and particularly.

"A. For want of money, and on account of the failure to co-operate with the court on the part of some persons who should have felt an interest in enforcing the law, there was only a very partial investigation of the last Congressional election; but so far as the investigation was carried it showed almost every conceivable crime against the purity of the election. A number of indictments were returned by the grand jury, and I hand you the following account of those where arrests have been made; the others are for the present private.

"Q. 4. State, if you know, from your information as district attorney, whether or not there were other violations of the election laws of the United States, and laws of the State of Mississippi, in said district, committed at the election in November, 1880; and if yea, state why the grand jury failed to institute further proceedings. State fully and particularly your knowledge on the subject.

"A. The grand jury did not return all the indictments the evidence before them warranted. They examined witnesses only from eight or nine counties, and they were adjourned when the funds to pay witnesses and jurors were exhausted. In many counties the election was conducted fairly, and in others all election laws, State and Federal, were violated. Men of one class were registered illegally, and of another class refused registration. Under the State statute that authorized the revision of the poll-books the names of many legal voters were crossed from the poll-books, and intimidation and obstructing of voters, expelling United States supervisors, false counting, and ballot-box stuffing were all shown by the evidence before the grand jury to have been committed.

Having stated the general principles that govern our opinion, we now proceed to give the number of votes cast at the various precincts where frauds are shown to have been committed, and where the election officers were either so corruptly or illegally appointed, or where their acts while holding the election causes such suspicion in our minds as to destroy confidence in the returns. The number of votes there found to be tainted with fraud is so great as to justify the conclusion that the election in this case must be set aside. (For returns see record, pages 391 and 392.)

In making the foregoing statement we have not included the vote of many precincts where good grounds exist for their rejection, and where the election might be declared void upon the evidence, as at Law's Hill, Oak Grove, Bainsville, Evans's School-House, in Marshall County; Springdale, Sanders's Store, Free Springs, and Dallas precincts, in La Fayette County; Stewart's, Reynolds's, and Ingram's Mill, in De Soto County; Rosa Mill and Brooklyn, in Tallahatchie County. The evidence of witnesses in relation to these precincts shows such irregularities as, when considered in connection with the evidence generally, leads to the belief that there was unfairness intended, if not openly practiced.

Were we to adopt the rule laid down in Donnelly vs. Washburn we would reject them all.

We have selected the precincts (where the figures are given) because at every one of them some transparent fraud is directly proven, or the conduct of the election officers has been such as to so becloud them with suspicion that they are, in our judgment (when considered in connection with the conduct of this whole election), unworthy to be considered as election returns.

YALOBUSHA COUNTY.

As to the condition of affairs that prevailed in this county, we here submit the evidence of A. T. Wimberly, chairman of the Greenback State executive committee. The returns from this county (page 392) gives contestant only 81 votes, while contestee has 1,120 votes, while the census (p. 293) shows there to be some 1,540 colored voters in the county. It does not seem, from this evidence, that those who deemed it necessary to carry the election "at all hazards" were either respecters of persons or political parties, or were at all choice in their methods of bringing about the result, and we can easily conceive how timid colored voters would shrink from contact with such a state of war, and either stay away from the polls or seek refuge in the protection afforded by the Greenbackers and vote their ticket, if necessary to that end.

"A. T. WIMBERLY, being legally sworn, testified:

"Question 1. Where do you now reside; where on the 2d November, 1880; how long have you resided where you now reside, and what are your politics?

"Answer. On 2d November, 1880, I resided in Coffeeville, Yalobusha County, Miss., and have resided there since 1868. I am a Greenbacker in politics, and have lived in this district all my life.

"Q. 2. What official position do you hold in your party in Mississippi, and what in the political canvass of 1880, and what is the extent of your acquaintance with the Greenback organization in this second Congressional district?

"A. I am chairman of the Greenback State executive committee, and was in 1880. From my correspondence as such chairman, and my association with the party in convention and otherwise, I am very well acquainted with my party organization in the district.

"Q. 3. What part did you take in the interests of T. W. Harris, your Greenback candidate for Congress, in 1880?

"A. I not only canvassed Yalobusha County in his behalf, but also La Fayette, and personally spent my time in the canvass of those counties and by correspondence with Greenbackers all over the district during the canvass; worked in his behalf. I spent my time, my money, and run the risk of losing my life in that canvass for him.

*The vote of this county is not returned by precincts.

"Q. 4. What sort of canvass did the Greenbackers make as to vigor and aggressiveness in this the second Congressional district in the Congressional election of 1880?

"A. From my personal observation and correspondence in the district, I think they could not have made a more thorough canvass than they did. They directed their time and energy and what little money they had for the success of their candidates. T. W. Harris, our candidate for Congress, made a thorough canvass of the entire district.

"Q. 5. What was the character of your canvass in person for peaceableness and quietness? If any violence was done toward you or the members of your party, state fully and particularly all you may know on this point.

"A. The canvass was anything else but a peaceable one, from the beginning to the end. At every political meeting held in Yalobusha County, where there was a joint discussion between the Greenbackers and Democrats, the Democrats never failed to go armed not only on their own persons, but there was a committee of boys appointed to carry arms in saddle-bags, to be used should it be necessary. That forced us to carry ours to defend ourselves with, and we were not inclined to be bulldozed and run off the track by the Democratic mob. In Coffeeville, some time in the month of July or August, the Democrats advertised to have a ratification meeting. We were invited by one of their committee to have a joint discussion. We accepted the invitation, and after we had sent out runners for our crowd to come to the speaking on the following Saturday, the chairman of the Democratic committee, late Friday evening, about sunset, notified me, as a member of our committee, that they would not permit any discussion on the following Saturday, when it was too late for our committee to give notice to our people. On Saturday morning, after the crowd had gathered in on both sides, I went to the chairman of the Democratic committee and said to him that as there was a misunderstanding, or rather a refusal on their part to grant a division of time, we would have a speaking of our own, but that as it was their appointment we would let them take choice between the grove and the court-house as to where they should hold their meeting. He notified me that they would hold their meeting in the grove. I at once started a little negro boy up the street ringing a bell to notify the Greenbackers that we would hold our meeting in the court-house. Two or three Democrats stopped him and forbid him ringing the bell. Just after our meeting adjourned I discovered the Democratic crowd from the grove making way up the street leading to the court-house using very insulting language against the Greenbackers. We passed them, and when we dispersed at the depot five or six of the Democrats commenced firing on Mr. Pierson, a Greenbacker, and other Greenbackers, swearing that if they couldn't beat us voting they would kill us. This shooting resulted in the wounding of Mr. Pierson and some half dozen others, both Greenbackers and Democrats. On the following Monday a mob of some 300 Democrats came to Coffeeville and sent a committee to me a second time to say that unless I renounced my political principles I would be a dead man before midnight. I did not comply with their demand, nor did they put their threat into execution.

"Q. 6. State the character for intelligence of the Greenback white voters of the district.

"A. They are of the very best material of the merchants and farmers of the district; also lawyers and doctors.

"Q. 7. What is the Greenback white vote of Yalobusha County? State as near as you can estimate.

"A. The Greenback white vote of Yalobusha County is between 500 and 700 voters.

"Q. 8. From what counties did Colonel Harris, candidate for Congress, chiefly receive his vote from among the colored voters given at that election?

"A. Colonel Harris received what colored votes he did receive at last election from among the colored voters in Yalobusha and Panola Counties.

"Cross-examined:

"X Q. 1. Did not nearly all of the colored people of Yalobusha County vote for T. W. Harris, November 2, 1880, for Congressman?

"A. Between five and seven hundred voted for him.

"X Q. 2. Did he not receive a considerable colored vote in Panola County?

"A. From the returns and all the information I have, he did.

"X Q. 3. Did you not have a fair election and a fair count in Yalobusha County?

"A. So far as I know we did; we made them give it to us.

"X Q. 4. Do you know T. J. Settle, of Panola County; and is he not a prominent and leading Republican politician, and is he not of the colored race?

"A. Yes, sir.

"X Q. 5. Are you not chancery clerk of Yalobusha County?

"A. I am.

"A. T. WIMBERLY."

Your committee would hesitate to reject the vote of any one county upon the evidence of a single witness, but the exceptionally high character of the witness, and the most extraordinary state of affairs, shown to have existed by his proof, and as is shown by his returns on page 329, strongly incline us to the opinion that it should be rejected.

FAILURE OF CLERKS OF ELECTION TO KEEP LISTS OF VOTERS.

The willful refusal of the clerks of election to make two lists of the voters by name, as they voted (and as is required by section 136, Miss. Laws), after having been shown the law by supervisors (Evidence, pp. 38, 40, 42, 63, 110, 135, 159, 163, 165, 166, 170, and 374), is a very suspicious circumstance in connection with this election. It is through these lists that stuffing ballot-boxes can be easily detected; or if persons are permitted to vote who are not entitled to vote, it will appear by these lists; and your committee does not forget that in the case of Lynch vs. Chalmers the evidence shows that at some of the precincts in the 6th Mississippi district the county canvassing board rejected the returns and refused to count the vote because the clerks had failed to return the lists of voters with the ballot-boxes.

CHANGE OF POLLING-PLACES.

There is evidence tending to establish the fact that some of the voting-places were changed just prior to the election, and that much confusion was thereby caused among the voters. Many of them were not aware of the change, and in some instances they did not know where the new polling-places were established. Just how far this affected the result of the election we are unable to tell from the evidence. We can, however, readily imagine how a resort to changing the polling-places just before an election in a county would cause such confusion and unfairness as would defeat the popular expression of the will of the people through the ballot-box. (P. 123, Q. 7 to 10; p. 457, Q. 3 to 5; p. 231, X-Q. 12.)

The report made by the chairman of this committee in the case under consideration uses the following language:

"ILLITERATE ELECTION OFFICERS.

"There is no doubt in our minds, from the evidence in this case, that many of the Republican precinct inspectors were appointed as such because they could neither read nor write. This is, in our judgment, a clear abuse of the law, and without the supervisors law, which enables the opposing party to have men of their own selection to guard the polls as supervisors, we would be strongly inclined to apply a corrective for this manifest abuse of power.

"With tickets exactly similar in all respects, or as nearly so as they can be printed, and on the same kind of paper, it would not be a hard task for election officers, if they were so disposed, to cheat an illiterate man, who could neither read nor write, both in the vote and in the count. All good people ought to discountenance and cry down evil practices of this kind. We indulge the hope that it will not be repeated in the future."

We concur with the chairman in his opinion of the abuse, but we differ from him in believing that the presence of the United States supervisors in any way palliated the offense, or took away the necessity for the application of the proper correction, and while we join in his hope "that it will not be repeated in future," we think the best method of securing the fulfillment of that hope is to take from the conspirators the fruits of their ungodly work, and we cannot agree with him in the statement of the report as follows:

"DONNELLY-WASHBURN CASE.

"We are not willing to go as far in this case as the majority of the committee did in the Forty-sixth Congress in the case of Donnelly vs. Washburn. It was there held—

"'The very fact that in these seven precincts Mr. Donnelly had been deprived by the city council of Minneapolis of all representation among the officers conducting the election is, in itself, a very strong proof of conspiracy and fraud.'"

We concur in opinion with the majority in this case upon this point, because in the case before us there is so much additional evidence of like character, shown at some forty precincts, to justify the opinion that a conspiracy existed.

In Donnelly vs. Washburn, Forty-sixth Congress, report No. 1791, page 25, the committee reject the vote of a whole county because the vote of the county was canvassed by the county auditor, one justice of the peace, and judge of probate, while the law required the vote to be canvassed by the county auditor and two justices of the peace.

Held, that the probate judge being ineligible under the law, the vote must be rejected.

Authorities cited: Howard vs. Cooper, Thirty-sixth Congress; Jackson vs. Wayne (Clark & Hall's Reports, p. 41); Easton vs. Scott, p. 272; Sloan vs. Rawls, cases 1871 to 1876, p. 144; Delano vs. Morgan, 2 Bartlett, p. 171; Howard vs. Cooper, cases 1864 to 1865, p. 282; Morgan vs. Delano. In Donnelly vs. Washburn the committee say:

"It must be remembered that in the cases cited, as decided by former Congresses, the votes of townships were cast out, because the boards of election, judges, or the clerks thereof, were not constituted according to law. This being the law as to mere present officers, how much more strongly does the principle apply to the case of a canvassing board of a county where the votes (not of one precinct alone) but of all the precincts of the county are involved. * * * How important, then, does it become that the county board of canvassers shall be constituted in strict conformity with law, and that no usurpers shall be permitted to intrude into and control its deliberations."

We only refer to the foregoing cases to show the action of former Congresses, and not for the purpose of deciding this case on rule laid down.

We think the evidence in this case so clearly establishes a conspiracy to defraud the electors of that district of their votes, and through which, as the proof shows, very many thousands were so defrauded, that we are entirely safe in basing our conclusions upon this ground alone. In addition to the figures we have already presented by precincts, there can be no doubt from the evidence that the registration was designedly stopped by contestee's friends, and for the purpose of preventing the friends of contestant from registering just prior to the election, and that thousands of contestant's friends were thereby deprived from registering, and the proof also shows that hundreds of (Republican) voters who had previously registered were not permitted to vote because their names had been arbitrarily or fraudulently erased from the poll-books of their respective precincts by the commissioners of elections, which fact was not discovered until these voters came to the polls to vote.

In brief submitted by counsel for contestee it is argued in justification of the numerous adjournments and carrying away of the ballot-boxes, that such conduct was authorized by the following clause in the law of Mississippi, revised code 1880, section 126:

"If an adjournment shall take place after the opening of the polls, and before all the votes shall be counted, the box shall be securely closed and locked, so as to prevent the admission of anything into it during the term of adjournment, and the box shall be kept by one of the inspectors, and the key by another; and the inspector having the box shall carefully keep it, and neither unlock it nor open it himself, nor permit it to be done, nor permit any person to have access to it during the time of such adjournment."

It is very evident to the minds of your committee that the lawmakers of Mississippi intended that when the election opened at nine o'clock it should be kept open until six o'clock in the evening, and that the vote should be immediately counted and returns made, as is plainly set out in the language of the statute, section 136, embraced in this report. We can easily imagine a necessity for the adjournment of an election in case of riot, storm, or other abnormal conditions, which would be justified by section 126, but not otherwise.

VOTE OF THE DISTRICT AT FORMER ELECTIONS.

There is but little evidence on this point. All the records filed with the committee tend to show that the second district is a Republican district; they show that General Grant carried the counties comprising this district by a majority of 2,625 votes in the Presidential election of 1872.

That in 1873 the regular Republican candidate for governor carried the counties comprising this district by a majority of 1,570.

That in 1873 the CONTESTANT in this case carried the county of Marshall by a majority of 1,304, while returns filed in this contest from this county give a majority for contestee.

It is developed by the proof in this case that a great majority of the votes cast for Harris, the Greenback candidate for Congress at this election, were cast by white voters who, in the years 1872, 1873, and 1874, belonged to the Democratic party, and we are unable to conceive how (under ordinary circumstances) it was possible for the district to be Democratic in the last (Presidential) election, and we can only account for it by the methods so clearly proven and heretofore set out.

We hold it to be true that when public officers are shown to be corrupt men their acts as officers are not entitled to the same presumption of fairness extended to officers of unimpeached character, and to show the character of many of the Democratic county commissioners of election and the ignorance of the Republican commissioners we have given extensive quotations from the evidence.

Having pointed to the proof of, and which we consider the strongest possible circumstantial evidence of, a conspiracy to stuff the ballot-boxes in this district, we now call attention to the conduct of the officers holding the election itself, and we submit herewith a brief summary of the testimony, with references to the pages of the record where it is to be found, showing frauds as barefaced as ever disgraced the election of any State.

From the open and defiant firing of cannon into Republican voters at Oxford to drive timid voters from the polls, the bullying of gray-haired men who were United States supervisors, as at Horn Lake, by youthful desperadoes with five shooters, down to the substitution of ballots as they were put into the box, as at Byhalia, and the fraudulent tally-list, as at Holly Springs, every possible scheme and device by which ballots can be stolen or falsely counted is found to have been practiced.

Section 136, Code of Mississippi, 1880, is in the following words:

"All elections by the people of this State shall be by ballot. The poll shall be opened at nine o'clock in the morning, and be kept open until six o'clock in the evening, and no longer; and every person entitled to vote shall deliver to one of the inspectors, in the presence of the others, a ticket or scroll of paper, on which shall be written or printed the names of the persons for whom he intends to vote, which ticket shall be put in the ballot-box, and at the same time the clerks shall take down on separate lists the name of every person voting; and when the election shall be closed, the inspector shall publicly open the box and number the ballots, at the same time reading aloud the names of the persons voted for, which shall be taken down by said clerks in the presence of the inspectors, and if there should be two or more tickets rolled up together, or if any ticket shall contain the names of more persons for any office than such elector had a right to vote for, such ballot shall not be counted."

The law clearly required that when the election begins in the morning the work shall go continuously on until the votes are all counted, and the returns made out and signed.

BRIEF OF EVIDENCE BY PRECINCTS.

MARSHALL COUNTY.

Chulahoma precinct.

"Cunningham," page 79: Was appointed United States supervisor, and was not permitted to act, and compelled to leave the room; remained outside and kept tally of Republican votes, they voting open tickets. Three hundred and thirty-six Republicans offered to vote, of whom 35 were rejected because their names were not on the poll-book. Witness knew most all of them personally, and they lived in that voting precinct. Witness kept number of white voters, there being one hundred and sixty.

Polls adjourned one hour for dinner, leaving the box in the room—no one in charge. Also adjourned when polls closed for supper, leaving no one with the box. Vote counted in secret. Witness was raised in that neighborhood. (See diagram, page 82.) Returns on page 391 show Democratic vote 241; Republican vote 271.

"Wilkins," p. 118: Corroborates above, as far as he goes.

"Clark," p. 114: Corroborates above, as far as he goes.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Hancock," p. 369: Was invited in to witness the count after fifty tallies had been counted. Did not see anything wrong after that time.

"Mimes," p. 339, and "McKee," p. 343, saw nothing wrong at the polling and count of votes, and say election was fair.

Byhalia precinct.

"Hardy," supervisor, p. 97: Was supervisor; when vote was being polled detected Inspector Flow exchanging ticket.

When vote was being counted detected same officer several times taking tickets out of the box, and putting in other tickets. Twenty-nine persons were refused a vote, nearly all Republicans, most of whom witness personally knew as living in that precinct. Witness files list of these, page 98. Republicans spoken of voted open tickets. Polls adjourned for supper.

Contestee's witness.—"Watson," p. 370: Supervisor; did not discover anything wrong.

West Holly Springs.

"Benton," p. 75: Was United States supervisor. Polls were opened and voting continued till 6 p. m. Witness then desired the vote counted, but inspectors refused, and adjourned for supper. Democratic inspector, McKinney, went out and came back, stating that he had consulted Colonel Manning (contestee) and General Featherston (chairman Democratic executive committee), and upon their advice they adjourned for supper. After supper the count was proceeded with, the door being locked, and no one admitted save the election officers. Ballots were all passed to witness, which he counted carefully, and also kept tally of same. Witness's tally-list showed that there were 50 more votes cast for Buchanan than the clerks had put on their tally-list, and called attention to the fact, but they failed to take any measures to correct it. Republican inspector refused to sign the returns. There were 40 or 50 colored Republicans refused a vote, chiefly because their names were not on poll-book. No white man was so refused on any account. These men claim to have been duly registered. Witness knew most of them as citizens of that election district.

"Guyton," Republican inspector, p. 121: Corroborates foregoing witness as far as he goes, and was importuned and threatened to sign the returns, but never did sign them. Republican inspector at this precinct could neither read nor write.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Walters," p. 357: Says witness Benton did call the attention of election officers to the discrepancy mentioned in his testimony.

"McKinney": Democratic inspector referred to in witness Burton's testimony is examined, and does not deny that Manning and Featherston advised them that they could adjourn for supper, but saw nothing wrong.

"McGowan," p. 352: Thinks the election was entirely fair.

"Williamson," p. 356: Concurs in the opinion of witness McGowan.

East Holly Springs.

"Wilkinson," p. 91: Was supervisor. Kept tally-list of all persons voting that day; tally-list was tampered with just as polls closed. Two of election officers were brothers-in-law to contestee, one of whom had been one of the county election commissioners till a short time before; door was locked and public excluded when vote was counted; no one permitted present except election officers. About 30 persons, mostly colored (most of whom were known to witness as belonging to that election district), were refused a vote; all claimed to have been registered, but names were not on poll-book. There were sixty more ballots counted out of the box than there were persons voting; witness watched polling and counting of votes "as close as hawk ever watched a chicken." See diagram, p. 94; Republican inspector at this precinct could neither read nor write.

"Harris," p. 222: As to high character of witness Wilkinson.

Contestee's witnesses.—J. R. Wallace, p. 335; M. F. Wallace, p. 336; McGowan, p. 350; McCarroll, p. 344: Two of the foregoing officers at this precinct were brothers-in-law to the contestee. None of these witnesses discovered anything wrong, and say the election was fair.

Wall Hill precinct.

"Jameson," supervisor, p. 94: "No list of voters was kept;" adjourned three-quarters of an hour for dinner; 27 colored Republicans applied to and could not vote, names not being on poll-book; witness knew some 15 of them; Republican inspector could not read and write.

Contestee introduces no witnesses as to this precinct.

Lane's Hill precinct.

"Austin," p. 126: Twelve persons were refused vote because names were not on poll-book. All colored but two. Witness knew that some of them resided in that election district.

"McGhee," p. 108: About the same as the above. Republican inspector could not read and write.

No witnesses for contestee at this box.

Oak Grove precinct.

"Wells," p. 109: Five Republicans (voters of this district) refused vote because their names were not on poll-book. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Mount Pleasant precinct.

"Mull," p. 109: Was supervisor. Was tax-collector that district for ten years. Clerks refused to keep list of voters, after witness showed them the law requiring it to be kept. Some fifteen whites were permitted to vote whom witness did not know. Fourteen blacks and three whites were not permitted to vote; they were registered voters, but names did not appear on the poll-book.

"Albright," p. 119: Witness was inspector, and came to Holly Springs after box and poll-book; box was delivered to him, but no poll-book was in it; poll-book was brought to precinct morning of election by one Walker, a prominent Democratic politician of that precinct; 17 persons were refused a vote; Republican inspector could not read and write.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Bassett," p. 375; "Howse," p. 373; "House," p. 372: Thought the election was fair.

Early Grove.

"Briggs," p. 111: Supervisor; seven Republicans refused vote; names not on book.

Contestee no witness at this box.

Waterford precinct.

"Lacey," p. 112: Was supervisor; twenty-nine persons refused a vote; names not on poll-book; witness knew them all as residents of that election district; some nine of them went to Holly Springs and procured certificates of their having been registered from the county registrar, and came back and presented them to the officers of election, but were not then permitted to vote.

"McKenney," p. 125: Adjourned for dinner and box left in room; no one with it; Republican inspector could not read and write.

Contestee has no witness at this precinct.

Hudsonville precinct.

"Boxley," p. 115: Inspector. When polls closed all persons were ordered out of room save election officers; Gray and Selby, intelligent Republicans, asked permission to remain, but were ordered out, and the vote counted in secret. It will be observed that this inspector was the only person opposed to Democrats who was permitted to be there, and he could neither read nor write.

Contestee's witnesses:—"Gibbons," p. 348; "Mahon," p. 388: Discovered nothing wrong at this precinct, and say election was fair.

Evans's School-House precinct.

"Pegues," p. 116: Some five Republicans were refused a vote who claimed to be registered; their names not on poll-book; was a general turn-out; Republican inspector could neither read nor write.

Contestee no witnesses at this box.

Bainesville precinct.

"Carrington," p. 117: Fourteen Republicans and two Democrats were refused a vote; names not on poll-book; all claim to be registered, many of whom witnesses knew as citizens of that election district; Republican inspector could neither read nor write.

No witnesses for contestee.

DE SOTO COUNTY.

Horn Lake precinct.

"Davis," p. 31: Supervisor. Polls opened one-quarter before 10 o'clock. Adjourned from one-quarter before 1 till 2 o'clock. After closing of polls box was taken by "Brooks," Democratic inspector. Witness "don't know where to." Brooks remarking, "By God, this belongs to me to-night." "It was dark and rainy." Witness went to the residence of one Holliday, and in about three quarters of an hour saw Brooks and Dodge, Democratic inspectors, come in with the box. When box was opened all the tickets on top appeared to be Democratic tickets except five. There was much confusion, officers and bystanders preventing witness from seeing the box. Two Greenback tickets thrown out and not counted. About 35 Republicans were refused a vote because their names were not on the poll-book. From time-wasting questions, closing polls at noon, and other delays, between 75 and 100 Republicans went home without voting. There were also 32 Republicans waiting to vote when polls closed, and did not get to vote. Witness was cursed and abused, and threatened with pistol by one Douglass during count of vote. There was a large turn-out of voters.

"Turner," p. 33: Inspector. Corroborates much of "Davis's" testimony; says box was not sealed when Brooks took charge of it. Witness could not read or write.

"McCain," p. 464: Says adjourned about one hour. Corroborates last witness.

Contestee's witnesses for this precinct are "Bowie," p. 248; "Clinton," p. 249; "Foster," p. 256; "Shaw," p. 259; "Halbert," p. 276; "Wooldridge," p. 280. These witnesses contradict contestant's witness (Davis), and testify that they saw nothing wrong at the election or count.

Hernando Court-House.

"Dockery," p. 28: Republican inspector. Could neither read nor write. Knows nothing of result of election save what others told him. Polls adjourned for dinner, and one hour for supper. During adjournment box was placed in room, and no one with it. Witness wanted to stay with box, but officers insisted that no one should remain. Box was not sealed. A number of voters of long standing at the box did not get to vote, names not being on the poll-book. Large turnout of Republicans.

"Pratt," p. 25, Q. 9: A large number of Republicans could not vote at the box because their names were not on book. They were voters of long standing at the box. A large turn-out.

"Bell," p. 29, Qs. 5 and 6: Distributed Republican tickets at the box; thinks thirty-five or forty Republicans were refused a vote; names not on the poll-book. Q. 4: Was a general turn-out of voters. Republican inspector could neither read nor write.

Contestee's only witness at the box, "Dockery," p. 287, corroborates much of above statement.

Olive Branch precinct.

"Hayne," p. 35: Was inspector. Between sixty and seventy Republicans were refused a vote because their names were not on the poll-book; also, quite a number of others left, saying, "It was no use trying to vote, as so many had been refused." Was a general and full turn-out.

"Haynie" (Greenbacker), p. 34: Was supervisor; says there were 56 Republicans who applied and were refused a vote, their names not being on the book.

"Wood," p. 445, Qs. 4-5-6: Was president of the Republican club. Republicans more interested than they had been for five or six years. Saw Republicans refused a vote all day. Witness was refused there, and voted there ever since he was free, but could not vote; name not on book this election.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Pleasants," p. 267; "Blecker," p. 264: Does not contradict evidence of contestant's witnesses.

Oak Grove.

"Clay," p. 25: Supervisor; polls adjourned one hour for dinner. When polls closed, Nall, Democratic inspector, took the box to his house, 1½ miles off, being accompanied by one Kirkland. When witness found box it was in possession of one Weiswaer, none of whom were election inspectors, in a room with the door locked. They refused on first application to let witness in room, but finally let him in. The vote was not counted till about ten o'clock. Seventeen Republicans did not get to vote; names not on book. General turn-out of voters.

"Harris," p. 45: Inspector; same testimony, and adds, the vote was counted in private. A number of Republicans did not get to vote. General turn-out. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Jones," p. 274; "Kirkland," p. 246: Admit the box was not sealed, but a piece of paper tacked over the hole. That Clay, supervisor, objected to taking box to Nall's house; but neither of them thinks that there was any unfairness in the election.

Hernando Depot precinct.

"Howze," p. 20, Qs. 13 to 16: Supervisor; polls opened 20 minutes before 10 o'clock. Poll-book used was a forgery, made by Johnson, Democratic commissioner; 28 colored Republicans were refused a vote, names not on books. Vote not counted in public. Officers only permitted to be present.

"Newson," p. 230, Q. 9; "Boone," p. 36, Q. 3: Same.

"Watson," p. 440: Could not vote; marked dead on poll-book.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Johnson," p. 253; "Payne," p. 283: Think election fair.

Reynolds's Store.

"Jones" (Greenbacker), p. 35: Knows every voter in the district; turn-out of voters larger than usual; kept list of 9 Republicans not permitted to vote; adjourned one hour for dinner; has full and particular list of every man who voted Democratic ticket, and only 38 so voted; but returns show 57 Democratic voters.

"Durham," inspector, p. 43: Eleven persons refused a vote; witness did not get to vote, names not being on poll-book; witness never saw or signed any returns; Republican inspector could not read nor write.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Boyce," p. 238; "Myers," p. 288: Says, X Q. 11, that Durham, Republican, signed returns by making his mark, and X Q. 12, "I saw all the officers sign the returns," while Durham testifies he never did sign them.

Lauderdale precinct.

"Boggan," Greenbacker, p. 36: Supervisor. Polls were closed one hour for dinner. Box not sealed, and left in room with no one present, and same was done at adjournment for supper. General vote turned out.

"Williams," p. 46: Same testimony, and that some voters' names could not be found on book; was a full turn-out of Republican voters. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Laughter," p. 234: Corroborates above (substantially). Knows of no colored men voting Democratic ticket at his box, and that none but officers of election were present at count of vote.

Pleasant Hill precinct.

"Todd," Greenbacker, p. 37: Supervisor. Was appointed supervisor, but did not serve on account of threats and exhibition of brass knucks. Democratic friends advised him to leave; was busy all day distributing tickets.

"Dockery," p. 44: Says there were at least 75 colored voters who tendered Republican tickets, and were not allowed to vote, their names not being on the poll-book.

"Laughlin," p. 455: Was president of Republican club. Knew the Republican voters who were refused a vote; could not see the box, nor votes put in box; might have seen them "if I had had a ladder about six feet high." Witness was there all day; shows that Dr. Gray permitted only one man to vote by making affidavit, and refused balance. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Dr. Gray," p. 268: Admits that many Republicans did not get to vote; knows of two colored men voting Democratic tickets, but thinks the election was fair.

Stewart's precinct.

"Albritton," p. 39: Supervisor. No list of voters was kept; about ten persons did not get to vote—names not on books—and ten other Republicans who did not say (whether or not) they had duly registered and were not permitted to vote. No white man was refused a vote.

"Scott," p. 12: Republican inspector; could not read or write, and does not know anything about the result.

No witnesses examined by contestee for this box.

Love's Station precinct.

"East," p. 40: Greenback supervisor. Adjourned one hour for dinner. Box carried to Love's residence, some distance from polling place; he did not go with it; no list of voters was kept. Fifteen persons (mostly colored) refused to vote; names not on book.

"Thomas," p. 13: Does not know whether returns were correct or not.

"East," p. 432, X Q. 13: Thinks keyhole to box was not sealed at adjournment for dinner.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Henderson," p. 263: Corroborates Witness East to some extent, and does not think the box was tampered with.

Nesbitt's Station.

"Bullard," p. 40: Thirty-four persons, including one white man, did not get to vote, names not being on poll-book. There was a general turn-out.

"Robinson," p. 43: Adjourned one hour for dinner and two hours for supper. Box at dinner was placed in care of one Bullard, not an officer of election. Box at supper was given in charge to Bullard and taken to dwelling for supper. Twenty-five or thirty Republicans who did not get to vote, names not being on poll-book. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Bullard," p. 295: Was not an officer of election. Box left in his charge at dinner for about an hour. Only knew of three colored men who did not go out to vote. Adjourned two hours for supper, when he took box, unsealed, to Marron's residence; left box in room, no one with it (in room adjoining dining-room), while eating supper. Witness helped the officers to count the vote.

Louisberg precinct.

"Bailey," Greenbacker, p. 41: Supervisor. Polls opened about 20 minutes after 9 o'clock; adjourned one hour for dinner and one hour for supper. Witness objected to these adjournments, but was overruled. About 12 persons could not vote because their names were not on poll-book.

"Clifton," Greenbacker, p. 42: No list of voters was kept. Was a pretty full turn-out of voters. Adjourned for about an hour at noon and also an hour at supper.

"Clayton," p. 47: Corroborates above witness, and adds: At noon adjourned. Box was taken to the residence of one Lauderdale, and at supper by Democratic Supervisor Bailey to Louis's residence. Was good turnout of Republicans. Only officers of elections were admitted at the count of the vote.

Contestee's witness.—"S. S. Dickey," p. 236: Republican inspector could not write or read.

Eudora precinct.

"Buchanan," p. 46: Polls were adjourned one hour for dinner, and box was abandoned in room near polling place, none of the officers remaining with it; adjourned for supper, officers taking box with them, and counted vote near where the election was held. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Contestee's witness.—"Harral," p. 248: Corroborates above witness generally, but thinks election was fair.

Ingram's Mills.

"Morton," Democratic inspector, p. 41: No list of voters kept; adjourned one hour at noon, and also at close of poll; box being left at adjournment in keeping of one of the clerks and one supervisor. None of the election officers were Republican.

Contestee's witness.—"Morton," p. 283; "Kerby," p. 243.

Lake Cormorant precinct.

"McDowell," p. 10: Adjourned for supper, and box was taken to Wither's residence, about a mile off, and vote there counted.

"Butler," p. 11: Got to Wither's house before six o'clock: got our suppers and then counted the vote. There were some names, Republicans, on the poll-book marked moved from the district, but they were allowed to vote; Republican inspector could not read or write.

Cockrum precinct.

"Gray," p. 15: Adjourned for dinner one hour; adjourned for supper an hour; box during these adjournments was taken to residence of one Baker, and there left in bed-room with no one in charge of it. No person was allowed to witness the count except election officers. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Contestee introduced no witnesses from this box.

LA FAYETTE COUNTY.

College Hill Precinct.

"Stockard:" supervisor. No list of voters kept. Adjourned for one hour when polls closed, which was opposed by witness. The ballot-box during the time was left in the room where the election was held and no one was left with it. The door was locked by one Quarles (not an election officer), who took the key. There were two doors to the election-room (of store-house). The candle was left burning when they left the room. Quarles came back and requested witness to go back into the election-room with him, which he did, and Quarles blew the light out as they came out. In about ten minutes witness observed another light burning in the election-room, which burned but a short time. There was a large turnout of Republican voters—is a large Republican box. The witness could not see in room where box was during adjournment. The key-hole to box was not sealed during this adjournment. Nine or ten persons were refused a vote; names not on the poll-book (one white man among them).

"Buford," p. 65: Corroborates the above as far as he goes. The Republican inspector could not read or write.

Contestee's witness.—"Matthews," p. 316; "Luckie," p. 318: All say the election was fairly conducted.

North Oxford precinct.

The Republican inspector could not read or write.

"Lolt," p. 57: There was a large turn-out of Republicans. The cannon shooting bursted the plastering over our heads, and it fell on witness, cutting his face. The election was in consequence temporarily suspended, and the Republican supervisor was greatly alarmed.

Witnesses Scraggs, p. 51, and Fitzhugh, p. 55, as to the terrible effect of cannon shooting into voters; also Nunnally, p. 210, who met crowds of voters going home.

Contestee's witness.—"Butler," p. 303.

South Oxford precinct.

"Kenneday," p. 59: There was an adjournment for about a half hour at the close of polls, and the box was placed in chancery clerk's office.

"Hamblet," supervisor, p. 60: Adjourned at 6 o'clock for an hour, and the box was put in the vault in chancery clerk's office, and Brown, chancery clerk, had key to office. About 30 persons were refused a vote, their names not being on books. They were mostly Republicans. Witness protested against adjournment. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Taylor's Depot precinct.

"Tyson," p. 66, Republican inspector: Adjourned for one hour at dinner, and along in the evening adjourned again for an hour, then opened the polls again for 30 or 40 minutes, when polls were closed, it being then 6 o'clock. The box remained in possession of witness during the adjournment; vote was counted with closed doors, and no one was allowed to be present except the election officers.

The Republican inspector could not read or write.

Springdale precinct.

"Weathersby," p. 67: Adjourned one hour for dinner, when Shipp, Democratic inspector, took box to his house. The Republican inspector could not read or write. Contestee introduced no witness.

ABBEVILLE.

"Porter," supervisor, p. 100: Kept tally of Republican vote; witness also kept list of 36 Republicans who were not permitted to vote, names not being on poll-book; also, 3 whites. The night was dark and rainy. Adjourned for supper at 6 o'clock; the box, being locked and sealed, was left in the room where election was held, in charge of no one. There were two rooms and one window to the house. Witness says Republicans polled 207 votes; could distinguish Republican tickets from Democratic tickets; box was locked but not sealed when they returned to count the votes; Crosby, Democratic inspector, admitted he had been in there; there was a general turn-out of the Republican vote.

"McDuff," inspector, p. 69: Says they were counting vote when he returned, and that box was left as stated by witness.

Porter, Republican inspector, could not read or write.

Contestee's witnesses.—"Porter," p. 320; "McGowan," p. 321; "Houston," p. 322; "Graham," p. 323: Corroborate above, and add there were 307 Republican votes cast and only 145 Democratic. Returns, p. 391, show 216 Democratic, and only 135 Republican, votes returned.

"Stoners," p. 324; "Burkley," p. 325: None of contestee's witnesses discovered anything wrong. McGowan thinks everything was "fair and square," and he is the witness who told witness personally that he "would stuff a ballot box if necessary to seat Republicans."

Sander's Store precinct.

"Cezar Pegnes," p. 69: Republican inspector. Witness is nearly blind. Polls adjourned one hour for dinner. Mentions other competent and suitable Republicans being there who were intelligent. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Free Springs precinct.

"Caldwell," p. 72: Polls adjourned one hour for dinner. Democratic inspector taking box to residence of one "Houston," and witness took poll-books. Neither party turned out full vote. Republican inspector could not read or write.

Dallas precinct.

"Watt," p. 74: Polls adjourned one hour for dinner. Democratic inspector taking box to residence of one Langford. Box was not sealed. Vote was counted with closed doors. Republican inspector could not read or write.

PANOLA COUNTY.

Sardis precinct.

"Small," p. 157: Was supervisor. The two county election commissioners held the election and are not sworn (this is nowhere contradicted). Adjourned one hour or more for supper, over protest of supervisor. Box is placed in vault of clerk's office, and who has the key is not stated. There were nineteen more tickets in the box than there were persons who voted, as shown by list kept by clerks

"Hibernia" precinct.

"Greene," p. 191, supervisor: Witness remained until 5½ o'clock; 69 votes had been counted up to that time; all Republicans. Mr. Ray, Democratic inspector, held the election.

"Downey," p 195: Shows that box was thrown out and not counted by county commissioners, and that Ray took out all books and box to hold election.

Contestee's witness.—"McAfee," p. 418: Testifies that blank forms for making returns were sent out in all the boxes.

Ross's Mill Precinct.

"King," p. 191, inspector: Polls adjourned one hour for dinner, and box was taken by Democratic officers to Ross's residence. Witness did not go with it. Contestee introduced not any witnesses at this box.

A part of the committee find that the evidence does not satisfy their minds that a conspiracy exiated for the purpose of defeating contestant; but to the minds of the majority this proposition is quite certainly established, and as proof of this we briefly call attention to a few facts shown by the evidence. By the census of 1880 (see record, p. 199) it is shown that the six counties of Marshall, De Soto, Panola, La Fayette, Tallahatchie, and Tate contained a population in the aggregate as follows:

Colored	79,204
White	52,744

Taking the rule that one in five are voters, we have—

Colored voters	15,840
White voters	10,544
Colored majority	5,296

And it is shown beyond a doubt that five of these counties had and have large Republican majorities, and only one (La Fayette) which has a small Democratic majority; yet in these counties we find that the Republican majority is, prima facie, 5,296.

The evidence shows very conclusively that there are at least as many white Republicans in these counties as there are black Democrats. The returns from these counties and others composing the district (record, page 392) show that Harris, the Greenback candidate, received 3,585 votes, and that most of these were cast by white voters, and no part of these votes were cast in either of these six counties except in the county of Panola, where he received about 400 votes. The white votes received by him in these six counties are as follows (record, page 392):

De Soto County	83
La Fayette County	301
Marshall County	313
Tallahatchie County	17
Tate County	299
Panola County	487
Total	1,500
Colored majority as stated in these six counties being	5,296
Deduct colored vote in Panola County	400
	4,896
Add white vote for Harris in these six counties	1,500
	6,396

By this it appears that contestee was in the minority in these six counties, 6,396; yet in the face of this the returns (see record, page 393) give the contestee a majority of 2,153 votes. This state of affairs cannot but create suspicion, and engender a belief that the Mississippi plan succeeded.

And your committee would state that the above is based on the evidence of contestee (record, page 215) and the witness Wimberly (page 470 of record, question 1 on cross-examination).

It would extend this report to an unprecedented length to give in detail all the evidence tending strongly to prove a conspiracy to do just what was done, to wit, to count in the contestee at all hazards. But we briefly state that the evidence shows that in over fifty places the ballot-boxes were taken away, and out of the view of the supervisor, either at noon or after the polls were closed, and carried to private residences and locked in rooms and left unguarded, and the supervisors not even allowed to remain with them. All this against the earnest protest of the supervisors. All of these things were in direct and flagrant violation of law; and the evidence shows that in several instances the vote was counted in secret, and not in public as the law requires. And we quote the language of our honorable chairman in his report: "The election was conducted without regard to fairness or common decency." In this the majority sincerely concur. That all kinds of illegal and fraudulent practices were resorted to by the friends of the contestee in these six counties, knowing that a full vote and fair count would, as he himself stated to the witness Harris, be almost solid against; and in fact the votes were so cast, but not so counted or returned.

It is evident contestee and his friends had the power if they had the votes to carry the election honestly, and if honestly convinced that they had a majority of the votes, they certainly would never have resorted to the shameful frauds they did to count contestant out in these counties known to have large Republican majorities. Why did they, as the evidence shows they did, close the registration of voters ten days before the election in these counties of De Soto, Panola, and Marshall, each with very large Republican majorities, and five days before the election in the Republican county of Tallahatchie; and why, in violation of law, close the registration of voters in the counties of La Fayette and Tate from a week to ten days before the election by sending the books away from the clerk's office to be carried around through the counties to Democratic meetings, so that Republicans could not register when they came to the office for that purpose, and then were refused afterwards because, as they were informed, the time for so doing had passed?

Why did the governor and State board select men in these counties as commissioners to act in behalf of the Republicans who could neither read nor write (and the evidence shows that this class of men were selected in forty-two precincts in these counties), and refused to select any man designated by the Republicans, and also refused to appoint a Greenbacker for the false and groundless reason that there was no such political organization, when the evidence shows that there was a well organized Greenback party in each of these counties, and numbered amongst its adherents as intelligent men as could be found in the State? But why at the same time did this same board select as commissioners for the counties named, to act for La Fayette, and Tallahatchie, men who have been indicted and convicted of the crimes committed at this election, and as stated in the evidence taken in this contest? And we can but conclude that these things were done in pursuance of a conspiracy to unite in a common purpose to cheat and defraud the contestant out of his election.

To all that the evidence discloses there is but one answer, and that is, that there was a conspiracy to do these things, and that the purpose was accomplished by a universal disregard of all laws, and a high-handed and reckless debauching of the and supervisors. Thirteen Republicans, registered voters, who could not vote, names not on poll-book. Neal and Russin, two Democrats living at another precinct, are allowed to vote.

Witness and Republican inspector protest against box being removed, but are overruled. No list of voters was kept. Parties could not vote on account of adjournment. Election was held at saloon of one Baily. Rough words were used because witness and Republican inspector insisted that box should not be removed. Vote was counted in a different house from where the election was held.

ballot-boxes, and a treacherous and inhuman trampling down of the rights of the citizen who dared to vote his honest convictions, if those convictions led him to vote any other ticket except the Democratic ticket. And the evidence shows that these outrages are not the result of prejudice to color, but only because of the disposition on the part of the Democrats of that district to carry their election against all opposition, and by any means that will accomplish that object.

SUMMING UP.

First. The appointment of illiterate officers of election is such a manifest disregard of duty and violation of statute law as to render void the whole appointment of election officers. One of the essential duties of county commissioners and precinct inspectors is to sign and certify the returns, and their duty cannot be performed by a person who cannot read and write. Where three persons are named in a statute as necessary to perform an official duty all must be appointed and all must act, though a majority may control (see Ballard vs. Davis, 2 George's Miss. Reports; also authorities heretofore cited). Hence, the appointment of illiterate inspectors and commissioners of election would vitiate the whole appointment and destroy the election.

Second. But we do not wish to rest our report on so technical a ground, and hence we hold that the appointment of illiterate inspectors and commissioners takes away from the return of the election officers that presumption of truth which otherwise it would have, and a party claiming a seat on the return of such officers must show the utmost good faith in the election.

Third. In the case before us: 1st, the action of the governor and State board, their refusal to allow the opposition party to name any of the election commissioners; 2d, the same action on the part of the county commissioners, in appointing the precinct inspectors; 3d, the appointment of corrupt and illiterate officers; 4th, the systematic adjournments of the election without sufficient cause; 5th, the premature closing of the registration books, and refusal to register Republican voters, the erasing of names of Republican voters already registered, and the forgery of poll-books; 6th, the failure to openly count the vote at the closing of the polls; 7th, the changing of polling-places; 8th, the abandonment of ballot-boxes during adjournment, and their carrying off to private houses during adjournment; the interference with and exclusion of United States supervisors; 9th, the fact that these practices were in counties having large Republican majorities are conclusive evidence of a conspiracy to defraud.

This being a conspiracy to defraud, there being proof of fraud at a number of precincts, and the illiterate inspectors leaving the door open to unlimited fraud, and there being no proof by contestee of good faith in the election, it must be set aside.

Among all the cases passed upon or now under consideration by your committee, we do not find such a condition of affairs as is presented in this case.

One of the principal arguments urged in behalf of contestees in other cases from the South is, that the Republican party in that section is largely composed of illiterate colored voters, and that the ascendency to power of such a class would be not only offensive but oppressive; and that therefore the frauds committed were either justifiable or excusable for the protection of the intelligent and property-holding classes of society; and such argument has been used with great force.

In this district, however, while it appears that the colored voters are almost universally Republicans, there is no insignificant portion of the party made up of white voters, men of wealth and intelligence. And those who constitute the Greenback party of the district (they polling about 3,600 votes at this election) are chiefly white voters, lawyers, physicians, and owners of large landed estates, many of whom, as the proof shows, were formerly leaders and held controlling positions in the Democratic party of the district. Yet it is shown that the hostility towards the Greenbakers on the part of the Democratic party is just as bitter as against the Republicans of the district, and that they are pursued with the same vindictiveness; and their complaints that they are practically disfranchised are just as loud as are the complaints of Republicans.

In reaching a decision in this case we have not been compelled to rely on the evidence of the partisan friends of contestee or contestant alone, but largely upon the testimony of the Greenbackers, who are men of intelligence and high standing, as appears by their evidence.

In conclusion, while we are morally certain, from the general tenor of the evidence before us, that the contestant was grossly defrauded in the election, and while we have no doubt but that he could have proved a clear title to a seat in Congress, we are compelled to say that he has not made out that proof by proper legal evidence. We know the labor, expense, and experience required to disclose frauds carefully concealed, but we do not feel justified in departing from the rules of evidence so far as to seat the contestant. We are, however, fully satisfied that there was no legal election in the second district of Mississippi, and that the contestee should not longer be permitted to retain a seat which is covered over with fraud. Therefore, we recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That George M. Buchanan is not entitled to a seat in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Resolved, That Van H. Manning is not entitled to a seat in the Forty-seventh Congress from the second Congressional district of Mississippi.

WM. G. THOMPSON.

Mr. CALKINS. I also ask to print the report of the majority as a part of my remarks, and then I propose to demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the majority report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

Mr. CALKINS, from the Committee on Elections, submitted the following report:

A majority of your committee, to whom was referred the above entitled contested election case of the second Congressional district of Mississippi, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report:

There were three candidates voted for at the November election, 1880, in this district. The returned vote from the various counties composing the district was as follows: Manning, 15,255; Buchanan, 9,996; Harris, 3,585.

The district is composed of Union, Tippah, Benton, Marshall, La Fayette, Yalobusha, Panola, De Soto, Tate, and Tallahatchie Counties.

This contest was begun by the contestant, George M. Buchanan, against the sitting member, Van H. Manning, and in his notice of contest he alleges the following grounds:

"1st. That in a portion of the counties comprising said district such persons were not appointed, neither was such representation given to the different political parties in said counties, in the appointment of county commissioners of election, as was designed and required by law.

"2d. That in a portion of the counties comprising said district, election districts were abolished and other election districts established, without complying with and in violation of law.

"3d. That in a portion of the counties comprising said district the registration of voters was not conducted as required by law, thereby depriving a large number of persons (of lawful right) of the privilege of registering and voting.

"4th. That at a large number of voting places in said district, in the appointment of inspectors of election, such persons were not appointed, nor was such representation given (in making said appointments) to the different political parties as was designed and required by law.

"5th. That in several of the counties comprising said district a large number of persons lawfully entitled to register were refused registration, and that the registration and transferring of voters was discontinued many days prior to the time contemplated by law, thereby depriving a large number of persons, lawfully entitled to register (or to transfer), from the right of registering, and transferring and voting; and that in a portion of said counties the registration books were for a time removed from the place designated by law for their keeping, thereby depriving a large number of persons (of lawful right) of the privilege of registering (or transferring) and voting.

"6th. That at a large number of voting places in said district many lawful voters were not permitted to vote, their votes having been tendered and rejected by the inspectors of election; that such unlawful interference and hinderance was permitted and practiced (such as is specially forbidden by law) as to obstruct and confuse the voters in the act of voting, or to deceive and prevent a large number of voters from delivering their ballots at the proper voting places; that a large number of persons were permitted to vote for you who had no legal right to vote.

"7th. That at many of the voting places United States supervisors of election were not permitted to exercise the duties of their office, being prevented therefrom by the unlawful interference of other officers of election, or from other sources, in violation of law, and to such an extent as to prevent their ascertaining the result of the election and from performing other duties required of them by law; that no separate lists of the names of voters were kept by the clerks of election as was required by law; that the polls were not opened at the time required by law, were not kept open continuously from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. as required by law, and that upon the closing of the polls the counting of the vote and making up of returns was not done at the voting places, nor at the time required by law.

"8th. That at many of the voting places ballots were received and counted that were not lawful ballots in form and print; that inspectors of election rejected and refused to count ballots that were lawful after the same had been lawfully deposited in the ballot-boxes; that inspectors of election (with knowledge of the fact at the time) permitted ballots to be voted that were not lawful ballots; that during the hours prescribed by law for voting voters were harassed and disturbed in such manner as to prevent their voting in a free, fair, untrammeled, and peaceable manner.

"9th. That the names of a large number of legally registered voters were not placed upon the poll-books (by the officers whose duty it was to place said names on said books) used at many of the voting-places, and that in consequence thereof said legally registered voters were not permitted to vote, their votes being refused by the inspectors of election; said inspectors giving as a reason for such refusal to receive such votes that the names of the parties applying to vote were not on the poll-books.

"10th. That the entire vote polled and counted and returned, at a part of said voting places, was unlawfully rejected and thrown out (and not counted) by the county commissioners of election on making up their returns of the total vote of the county.

"11th. That at a portion of the voting places the ballot-boxes were not opened in public when the polls closed, nor was the vote counted in public, nor at the time required by law to be counted; that in making up the returns a large number of ballots were counted as having been cast for you, when in truth and in fact such ballots were cast for other persons, or were ballots placed in the boxes in a manner not authorized by law.

"12th. That at many of the voting places a much larger number of votes were returned as having been polled than were actually polled at said voting places; that at many of the voting places the poll-books for said places unlawfully contained the names of a large number of voters, which voters had no right to a vote at such voting places, but resided in other election districts, and that the names of said voters also appeared on the poll-books of the voting-places of election districts to which said voters of right belonged.

"13th. That at many voting places the election was conducted in many respects in utter disregard of law and the rights of voters; that the registration-books and the poll-books of a portion of the counties and election districts, in said district, were at divers and sundry times not in the custody and keeping of the proper lawfully constituted officers, but were on divers and sundry occasions in the care and possession of persons not lawfully entitled to such care and possession; that at a portion of the voting places lawful ballots that were cast for me were not counted for me, but were (unlawfully) counted as having been cast for you, and were so returned by the officers of election; that there were a greater number of legal voters of said district who voted (or who offered to register and vote), and who were unlawfully prevented therefrom, who desired me as their Representative in Congress, than there were who wanted you as their Representative in Congress from said district."

To this notice of contest the sitting member files exceptions and answer as follows, to wit:

"To said notice I make the following answer, to wit:

"First answer. 1st. Protesting against the truth of the allegations in said notice, I object and say that said notice is so insufficient and defective that I need not deny or admit the allegation therefor, for the reasons, to wit, said notice does not specify particularly the grounds upon which you rely and gives no reasons for failing to do so.

"2d. The allegations are only conclusions of law and general averment of wrong doing in some undefined portions of the district, by unnamed election officials of precincts not specified in unnamed counties, or by persons not named or described, and in places and by means not specified, and in violation of laws and the rights of others not designated.

"3d. Your allegations are so vague and uncertain that I am not informed as to the persons or officials whom you accuse of crimes, nor where committed, nor do you aver that such wrong doings were not instigated by you, or that they were known to or acquiesced in by me, or that the result of the election was changed by reason of the matter set forth.

"Second answer. 1st. Without waiving any objection to the manifold and vital defects of said notice, but reserving all benefit and advantage thereof, I deny each and every ground of contest set forth in said notice, and deny each and every allegation therein contained, and aver that throughout said Congressional district a free and fair election was held in all respects, except that in the county of Marshall, and in other counties, at every precinct divers colored voters who wished to vote for me for member of Congress were deterred and prevented from doing so by reason of the threats of personal violence and other means of intimidation used and employed by other colored people, the neighbors of such voters, the names of all of whom are unknown to me, being instigated thereto by those who advocated your election, whereby I received less votes by one thousand or more than I otherwise would, and all such voters by means of such intimidation were induced contrary to their wishes not to vote at all or vote for you, and thereby the great majority of votes that I should have received more than you, at said election, was reduced to the number of about five thousand two hundred and fifty.

"Third answer. I charge and aver that you have made the wholesale charges of all kinds of crime and irregularities, contained in your said notice, without specifications of persons or places, not because you had reason to believe that any one of them had been committed to your injury, but with the deliberate purpose to evade the limitation of the statute and to speculate upon any future discoveries of evidence, and so you have made unlawful, vexatious, and fraudulent use of the notice and process authorized by statute, and the same should be quashed and dismissed."

It will be noticed that the sufficiency of the contestant's allegations in his notice of contest were challenged by the contestee in the beginning, and have not been waived; on the contrary, the contestee has insisted that the allegations in the notice of contest were entirely insufficient, and that the same ought to be dismissed for that reason.

It becomes necessary, in the first place, to pass upon the sufficiency of the contestant's notice. The first specification relative to the representation of the different political parties on the board of county commissioners of election calls in question the acts of the governor of the State in his appointment of the commissioners of election.

The machinery of elections by the Mississippi code is placed in the hands of the governor. He appoints the county commissioners of election, who in turn appoint the precinct election officers. The precinct officers make return of the vote cast in the different precincts to the county board, who in turn make their report to the secretary of state.

By section —— of the Mississippi election law the different political parties are to have representation on said board. It ought to be carried out in good faith, and the different political parties ought to be represented on the election board. It is a duty incumbent upon the executive to see that this provision of law is carried out. It has been found in many of the States of the Union that a provision in the election laws similar to this is a safeguard against frauds and ballot-box stuffing.

The second ground alleged by the contestant is that certain election districts were abolished and others established without complying with and in violation of the law.

This allegation is clearly insufficient, as being too vague and general. It would have been an easy matter to have named the precincts, and pointed out how the acts complained of tended to prevent a fair election.

The third allegation is that in a portion of the counties comprising the Congressional district the registration of voters was not conducted as required by law; that large numbers of them were deprived of the privilege of registration.

This allegation is likewise uncertain and vague, and wholly insufficient.

The fourth allegation is a repetition of the first, except that it applies to the precincts or voting places, and not to the counties, and need not be further noticed.

The allegation in the fifth ground of contest is that in several of the counties comprising the district persons entitled to register were refused registration; that the registration was discontinued prior to the time contemplated by law; and that in some of the counties the books were removed from the place designated by law during the registration; that in consequence thereof persons were deprived of the right to register.

This allegation is too general. The particular places and the acts complained of should have been specifically set out. The same may be said with reference to the sixth allegation in the notice of contest.

The eighth ground of contest challenges the form and print of the tickets, but it is not pointed out specifically in what the illegality consisted. And the ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth grounds of contest are open to the same objections.

The seventh ground of contest alleges that at many of the voting places United States supervisors of election were not permitted to exercise the duties of their office, and were prevented therefrom by unlawful interference by the other officers of election (we presume, State officers). This charge is general, and it does not specify any particular voting place in the district where these acts occurred; but, perhaps, if any such unlawful interference is shown to have existed at any of the voting places, the committee would be justified in considering the allegation amended so as to make it conform to the proof, unless it were shown that thereby an injustice, because of the insufficiency, had accrued to the contestee.

This disposes of each of the allegations of contest, and with the single exception stated, under the uniform rulings of this committee and the House, the notice of contest would be held clearly insufficient. See Duffy vs. Mason, Forty-sixth Congress, and cases there cited.

We prefer, however, not to rest our decision of this case upon the sufficiency of the pleadings, for if the testimony taken in the case develops the fact that the sitting member was not elected, it would be our duty to so report, although the contestant might not be entitled to his seat, having failed to comply with the law with respect to the sufficiency of his notice.

If it be shown that there was an unlawful interference with the United States supervisors of election whereby they were prevented from discharging duties which are committed to their hands by the law of Congress, it would undoubtedly be our duty to set aside the election at such precincts. The law of Congress in respect to Congressional elections must be obeyed by the people, and nothing will tend so much to bring this government into disgrace as to allow its will to be nullified and its officers overawed and prevented from performing their duty. One of the most sacred duties which this House owes to the people is to see to it that its laws are enforced and obeyed. The supervisors of election are the eyes of this House. Through them it can scrutinize every general election. Fraud of all kinds can be detected, and ballot-box stuffing can be stamped out.

This government is founded upon the will of the majority. A majority is one more than half. When this is ascertained it is just as binding as if maintained by a larger preponderating popular expression, and for the purpose of maintaining the right of the majority to rule, the supervisors' law ought to be obeyed and enforced with scrupulous care. We now proceed to examine the supervisors of election appointed in this Congressional district.

DE SOTO COUNTY.

W. J. Butler was examined as a witness and testifies that he was a United States supervisor of elections for Lake Cormorant voting-place in said county. His testimony is found at pages 11 and 12 of the record. We have examined his testimony and find no charge of fraud, intimidation, or ballot-box stuffing.

Charles Scott, one of the inspectors at that precinct, testifies that everything was peaceful and quiet on the day of election. (Page 13 of the record.)

L. C. Clay, United States supervisor of Oak Grove precinct, De Soto County, testifies to but one fact which is material, and that is, that there were seventeen colored men and one white man refused the right of voting because they were not registered. (See page 26 of the record.)

Felix Davis, another supervisor of election for Horne Lake precinct, De Soto County, testifies to but one material fact, which is that one James Brooks, a Democratic inspector, took the ballot-box, after the ballots were closed, away with him and had it three-quarters of an hour out of the sight of the supervisor, when it turned up at Mr. Holliday's residence, some distance from the balloting place, and after supper proceeded to count the ballots; that the tickets on top of the box when opened all seemed to be Democratic tickets. During the counting, considerable confusion ensued in consequence of suspicious acts on the part of the Democratic inspectors, and while the box was opened a good many bystanders gathered around it and prevented its being scrutinized by this officer. They then proceeded to count the tickets, five at a time; at the close of the counting it appeared that there were 205 Democratic tickets, 130 Republican, and no Greenback. Witness testifies that during the counting he saw two Greenback tickets, which were taken from the box by a Democratic inspector and again put back in the box, but were not counted. He also testifies that there were 35 or 36 persons who offered to vote and were refused because they were not registered, and that there were about 75 or 100 Republicans left the polling-place without voting because of the tardiness with which the officers discharged their duty, and the vexatious manner in which the time was wasted in asking questions and the like. He also testifies that he was abused by one H. M. Douglass, one of the officers of election, for being a radical, and threats were made against him. That there were four or five men continually around the box during the count; that they were swearing and exhibited their pistols in a threatening manner. (See pages 31 and 32 of the record.)

Silas Turner, one of the inspectors, in a measure corroborates the testimony of Mr. Davis. (See page 33 of the record.)

C. M. Haynie, supervisor for Olive Branch precinct, De Soto County, testifies that 62 Republican voters were refused the right to vote because they were not registered, and that three Democrats and three Greenbackers were likewise denied the right to vote for the same reason at that precinct. (See record, page 34.)

J. S. B. Boone, United States supervisor at Depot box, testifies that there were 30 voters at that precinct deprived of the right of voting because they were not registered. (See record, page 36.)

E. A. Albritton, United States supervisor at Stewart's voting place, De Soto County, testifies that there were 15 persons refused the right to vote at that precinct because of non-registration; about three-fourths were colored, one fourth white; that the ballot-box was taken at dinner time out of his sight to Mr. Love's house, 250 yards away from the voting place. (See record, page 40.)

B. F. Bailey, United States supervisor for Louisburg precinct, De Soto County, testified that the board adjourned at noon for an hour, and about an hour after the polls closed. He objected to the adjournment, but they overruled him; that there were 12 persons refused the right to vote because they were not registered; that he is a Greenbacker in politics. (See record, page 42.)

LA FAYETTE COUNTY.

C. E. Porter, United States supervisor at Abbeville precinct, testifies that 36 persons were refused the right to vote; they were all Republicans. (See record, page 100.)

B. P. Scruggs testifies that he was United States deputy marshal on the 2d of November, 1880; that he lives in Oxford, State of Mississippi; that he was present at the election held there on that day; that within twenty steps from the entrance of the court-house, where the voting was being carried on, Mr. Keyes, a prominent Democrat of that place, and a member of the board of aldermen, was in charge of a cannon which was being fired, and that the witness protested against the firing of it; that he was told by Mr. Keyes that he had orders to fire it; that it was none of his business who gave him such orders; that they continued to fire the cannon until late in the afternoon; that the cannon was a regular six-pound field-piece. Witness also testifies that the Republicans were prevented from celebrating the victory gained by them because they were told by two prominent Democrats, Mr. Crawford and Mr. Skipwith, in the presence of Mr. Baker, chairman of the Democratic county central committee, that "they might have the right to do so, but they did not have the might," and to prevent a bloody collision they abandoned it. (See record, pages 51, 52, 53, 54, 55.)

MARSHALL COUNTY.

Robert Cunningham, supervisor of election for Chulahoma precinct, testifies that the inspectors of election refused to let him act as United States supervisor at that poll, and excluded him from the box. (See record, pages 80 to 91, inclusive.)

John S. Benton testifies that he was acting United States supervisor of election at Holly Springs box; that he canvassed and kept a complete list of the voters as they voted, and that it did not agree within 50 with the list kept by the clerks of election, his count giving to Buchanan 119 majority, while the count of the clerk of election gave to Buchanan but 69 majority. (See record, pages 75-79.)

Mr. E. J. Wilkerson testifies that he was United States supervisor of election at East Holly Springs box; that about 6 o'clock he stepped out of the hall for a moment where the voting was being done, and when he returned he found that 10 or 15 ballots had been added to his list that he was keeping by some one; that there were 60 more ballots counted out of the box than there were persons on his tally-list; that the door was locked and no one was permitted to be present during the count, and he was not permitted to be in the room; that there were about 30 persons refused the right to vote because they were not registered; that he did not see anything wrong during the voting, and is not able to account for the discrepancy; that he watched the election as close as a hawk ever watched a chicken. (See record, pages 91 to 93.)

Benjamin J. Jameson was United States supervisor of election at Wall Hill precinct. He testifies that there were 27 voters refused the right to vote because they were not registered. (See record, pages 94-95.)

Charles B. Hardy, United States supervisor of election at Byhalia precinct, testifies that there were 29 persons refused the right to vote, 27 of whom were colored persons; were refused for the reason that their names were not on the poll-book. He knew personally 23 of them; they were Republicans. He testifies further that one Mr. Flow, who was a Democratic inspector, was guilty of stuffing the ballot-box by refusing to put a ballot into the box offered by one man, taking one out of his pocket and substituting it for it, and in various other ways tampering with the ballots. (See his testimony on pages 94 to 99, inclusive.)

Thomas Mull, who was United States supervisor of election at Mount Pleasant precinct, Marshall County, testifies that there were 17 persons who offered to vote whose votes were refused—14 blacks and 3 whites. (See record, page 109.)

Thomas F. Briggs, United States supervisor of election at Early Grove precinct, testifies that there were seven who offered to vote and were refused because their names could not be found on the poll-book; they were colored men and Republicans who claimed to have registered. He is a Greenbacker in politics. (See record, page 111.)

J. A. Austin, United States supervisor of election at Lane's Hill precinct, Marshall county, tastifies that there were 12 persons refused the right to vote; that they were all black but two. Mr. Austin was a Greenbacker. (See record, page 126.)

PANOLA COUNTY.

John Fowler, United States supervisor of election at Benson's Hill, testifies that the election was fairly held. (See record, page 139.)

W. W. Perkins, United States supervisor of election at Batesville precinct, testifies that the voting was free, fair, and undisturbed; that the counting was fair and correct. (See record, page 140.)

D. F. Floyd, United States supervisor of election at Pleasant Grove precinct, testifies that the election was fairly held. (See record, page 145.)

P. Lanier, United States supervisor of election at Pleasant Mount precinct, Panola County, testifies that the election was conducted fairly. (See record, page 151.)

J. A. Small, United States supervisor of election at Sardis precinct, Panola County, testifies that there were 13 persons who were refused the right to vote on account of their not having registered. These were all Republicans. (See record, page 157.)

W. A. Jones, United States supervisor of elections at Como precinct, Panola County, testifies that there were 23 refused the right to vote because their names were not registered. Most of these said they were Republicans. (See record, page 158.)

P. H. Lanier, United States supervisor of elections at Pleasant Mount precinct, Panola County, testifies that there were 51 Republican tickets, 17 Democratic tickets, and two Greenback tickets thrown out on the ground that they were defaced so that they could be distinguished from the others. Some of them were torn on the end, some on the side; some were blotted; some had little white specks on them, some little black specks. They were put into a small box and nailed up, and put into a ballot-box; the ballot-box was sealed, and both boxes sent to the court-house. (See record, page 170.)

G. P. Carrington, United States supervisor of elections at Senetobia precinct, testifies that the election was fairly conducted. (See record, page 176.)

TATE COUNTY.

R. P. Powell, United States supervisor of elections at Cold Water precinct, testifies that there were about 21 persons who were refused the right to vote because their names did not appear on the poll-book. About 16 of them were Republicans, and he thinks two were Greenbackers. (See record, page 177.)

W. C. Briggs, United States supervisor of elections at Looxahoma precinct, Tate County, testifies that the election was fairly conducted. (See record, page 179.)

TALLAHATCHIE COUNTY.

R. J. Littlewort, United States supervisor of elections at New Hope precinct, testifies that the election was fairly conducted. (See record, pages 194–195.)

We have given an epitome of the testimony of the United States supervisors of elections. These men were appointed at the request of the prominent Republicans and Greenbackers of the district. It is fair to presume that all of the active frauds committed in the district would come under their notice, and that they would be able in their testimony to expose all crimes committed. The labor imposed upon the committee may have caused it to overlook a few of the other active frauds complained of; but it is believed that the foregoing summary embraces all that is important to be noticed. It is evident from the testimony that some of the precincts before alluded to must be thrown out. Those that we decide to throw out will be found at another place in this report.

CONSPIRACY.

It has been strenuously contended that there is some evidence uncontradicted and which tends to establish a conspiracy among the Democrats of the district, which resulted in the returning of the vote as heretofore given for Manning, and the suppression of the true vote given for the contestant and Mr. Harris, the Greenback candidate. This is founded upon the fact that the colored vote in the district exceeded the white vote, and that it was solidly Republican, and that it was cast, or ought to have been cast, for Mr. Buchanan; that the white vote was divided between the sitting member and the Greenback candidate, Mr. Harris. To establish this, the census tables have been resorted to, and other evidence has been introduced tending to show that there was a general turn-out of Republicans at the election, while there was much indifference on the part of Democratic voters.

The case of Spencer vs. Morey, decided in Forty-fourth Congress, Miscellaneous Cases, vol. V, p. 438, adverted to by contestant in his brief, cannot be regarded by us as an authority in this or any other case. So far as we have been able to study it, it stands alone in the line of contested-election cases. We do not believe that proof of one corrupted vote going into a ballot-box is like "a drop of poison in a bowl of water, which contaminates the whole of it, and cannot be separated from that which remains pure."

The duty of the House is to separate the honest from the dishonest vote; to purge all ballot-boxes of illegal votes; to administer a rebuke to the voters of any precinct who permit the voice of the people to be stifled or suppressed; and to enable the House to do this a contestant should produce testimony of specific acts in order to show the wrong which he complains of. It cannot be done by general, vague, and uncertain allegations and charges. There is some proof introduced to establish these various points, but it is very general, and consists largely of the opinion of witnesses, and is not of such a character that the committee feel justified in finding that a general conspiracy against the ballot-box was practiced. It seems to your committee, that, if any such practice prevailed, the United States supervisors appointed for the purpose of preventing such frauds could and would have given information whereby they could have been specifically proven.

Your committee have not hesitated to recommend to the House the throwing out of all the boxes where frauds, intimidation, or ballot-box stuffing have been proven, but it would be unsafe to assume from the testimony in this case that other frauds had been committed by the election officers not specifically shown or proven in any tangible or definite manner.

ILLITERATE ELECTION OFFICERS.

There is no doubt in our minds, from the evidence in this case, that many of the Republican precinct inspectors were appointed as such because they could neither read nor write. This is, in our judgment, a clear abuse of the law, and without the supervisors' law, which enables the opposing party to have men of their own selection to guard the polls as supervisors, we would be strongly inclined to apply a corrective for this manifest abuse of power.

With tickets exactly similar in all respects, or as nearly so as they can be printed, and on the same kind of paper, it would not be a hard task for election officers, if they were so disposed, to cheat an illiterate man who could neither read nor write both in the vote and in the count. All good people ought to discountenance and cry down evil practices of this kind. We indulge the hope that it will not be repeated in the future.

REGISTRATION LAW.

It appears in the evidence that very many electors in the various counties of this district were deprived of the right of voting because they were not registered. The registry law of Mississippi provides the manner in which registration shall be made. An unlawful refusal on the part of the registration officers to register a qualified elector is a good ground for contest; but, in order to make it available, the proof should clearly show the name of the elector who offered to register; that he was a duly qualified voter, and the reason why the officer refused to register him, and, under the statutes of the United State, if he offered to perform all that was necessary to be done by him to register, and was refused, and afterwards presented himself at the proper voting-place and offered to vote and again offered to perform everything required of him under the law, and his vote was still refused, it would be the duty of this House to see to it that he is not deprived of his right to participate in the choice of his officers.

Unfortunately in this case the proof falls far short of that which is required to enable the House to apply the proper remedy. That there were many instances in which the officers of registration arbitrarily refused to do their duty is apparent. That many electors were deprived of their right to vote in consequence of this action is also apparent; but in going through the testimony in this case, the number thus refused registration, and refused the right to vote, if added to contestant's vote, would not elect him. Neither is it shown sufficiently for whom the non-registered voters would have voted had they been allowed that right.

CHANGE OF POLLING-PLACES.

There is some evidence tending to establish the fact that many of the voting places were changed just prior to the election, and that much confusion was thereby caused among the voters. Many of them were not aware of the change, and in some instances they did not know where the new polling-places were established. Just how far this affected the result of the election we are unable to tell from the evidence. We can, however, readily imagine how a resort to changing the polling-places just before an election in a county would cause such confusion and unfairness as would defeat the popular expression of the will of the people through the ballot-box. The evidence in this case fails to establish the existence of such a state of affairs that we feel justified in interfering with the election for this cause.

REJECTED POLLS.

	Manning.	Buchanan.
De Soto County.
Horn Lake precinct	205	130
Pleasant Hill precinct	169	75
Oak Grove precinct	131	98
Marshall County.
Chulahoma precinct	241	271
East Holly Springs precinct	292	220
Byhalia precinct	218	289
La Fayette County.
North Oxford precinct { Box No. 1	403	223
North Oxford precinct { Box No. 2	335	149
	1,994	1,455

The above precincts are rejected because of specific acts of fraud, violence, and intimidation having been proven.

At North Oxford precinct the contestee's party friends, on the day of election, fired a cannon in close proximity to the polls, and kept it up at intervals for quite a while. At Byhalia precinct the ballot-box was stuffed. At the other precincts there were irregularities of various kinds, chief among which was the exclusion of the United States supervisor from the polls and the counting of the votes.

DONNELLY–WASHBURN CASE.

We are not willing to go as far in this case as the majority of the committee did in the Forty-sixth Congress in the case of Donnelly vs. Washburn. It was there held—

"The very fact that in these seven precincts Mr. Donnelly had been deprived by the city council of Minneapolis of all representation among the officers conducting the election is, in itself, a very strong proof of conspiracy and fraud."

We may remark that there is abundance of testimony in this case showing that nearly one-half of the polls in some of the counties were under the exclusive control of the party friends of the contestee; and it is stoutly maintained by the contestant that the refusal to register qualified Republican voters, and that the appointment of incompetent Republican election precinct officers at other polling places, and various other acts and omissions on the part of the partisan friends of the contestee, taken in connection with the fact that at many of the precincts only Democrats were appointed election officers, afford a strong reason why the rule laid down in the Washburn-Donnelly case should apply in this.

The appointment of managers of election, in fairness and common decency, should be made from opposite political parties. A refusal to do so in the face of a statute directing it to be done may in some instances be evidence of fraud, and it might form an important link in the chain of circumstances tending to establish a conspiracy.

We are not satisfied that the evidence in this case establishes such a conspiracy.

A word of explanation. When the Committee on Elections decided this case in committee there were several members absent, as the record of the committee will show. When the report was signed a majority of the committee agreed to the minority report.

We therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the contestant have leave to withdraw his papers without prejudice.

We concur in the conclusion reached by this report.

W. H. CALKINS.
GEO. C. HAZELTON.
JNO. T. WAIT.
S. H. MILLER.
F. E. BELTZHOOVER.
G. ATHERTON.
S. W. MOULTON.
L. H. DAVIS.

Mr. MOULTON. I desire to make a request.

Mr. CALKINS. I will withdraw the previous question for the present.

Mr. MOULTON. I will not occupy the attention of the House, but in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] I ask leave to print some views which I have here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the minority views of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MOULTON] will be printed in the RECORD.

The minority views are as follows:

The notice of contest comprises thirteen charges of illegality or irregularity, each and all of so general and vague a character as not to comply with the statute nor enable the respondent to know what particular grounds are relied upon for the contest. No voter or official is named in the notice. No precinct, town, or county is specified, and no numbers are given, but merely general charges are made, such as "in a portion of the county there was not a proper representation given to the different political parties;" that "in a portion of the counties election districts were established or abolished without complying with the law;" that "in a portion of the counties the registration of voters was not conducted as required by law," or "in a large number of voting places in the district many lawful voters were not permitted to vote." These and similar vague and uncertain charges constitute the notice of contest.

An election contest without notice should be treated as an absolute nullify. (McCrary's Law of Elections, sec. 341.) The form of the notice and its essentials are the proper subjects of legislation under the Constitution, and are as binding upon the House in judging of an election contest as laws in regard to practice are upon the courts. This does not, of course, interfere with the right of the House to institute independent inquiry upon its own resolution, but relates solely to a statutory contest, such as this case is.

The statute provides that the notice must particularly set forth the grounds of complaint. Under this statute notices so vague or general have been uniformly held insufficient to maintain a contest upon. See Duffy and Mason, Forty-sixth Congress; Wright and Fuller, 1 Bartlett, 152.

The reason and necessity for a notice that will give the respondent full and precise information and enable him to meet the charge are the same that require particularity in pleading, whether civil or criminal, concerning which the rules are well known. A decision that the notice in question is sufficient would be to hold that we are at liberty to disregard the statute and allow the contestant to withhold the information that would enable the respondent to know upon what ground the contest is based. It would be a rule to promote contests unfairly by allowing vague and broad assertions to supersede particular grounds.

Unless the House is willing to overrule the statute and its prior decisions, it must hold that there is no sufficient notice of contest in this case.

We have, however, looked carefully into the evidence, whether taken according to the statute or not, and conclude there is nothing to impeach the validity of the election of the sitting member by a majority of 5,000 or upward.

The district comprises ten counties in Northern Mississippi, containing a population, according to the census of 1880, of about 184,000. In six of the counties it seems that a majority of the voters are white. In four counties a majority are colored. In three of the counties (Benton, Marshall, and Panola) the votes received by Manning and Buchanan were nearly the same. In the county (Yalabusha) Harris, the Greenback candidate, received more votes than Manning—nearly all the votes being divided between them. In the other six counties Manning received majorities ranging from 300 to 900 in each. Altogether Manning received 15,255; Buchanan received 9,996; Harris received 3,585.

The statutes of Mississippi provide that the governor and State officials shall appoint for each county three commissioners of election, not all of whom shall be of the same party; and they shall appoint judges of election, not all of the same party.

The evidence shows this was done, but the objection is made that in some instances these appointments of Republican judges of election were not according to the dictates of the local partisan committees.

As the law requires the appointments to be made in the discretion of the officials, we see no irregularity in their declining to be governed by partisan suggestions.

Perhaps the most urgent of these objections were made as to appointments of judges in Marshall, Tate, Tallahatchie, and La Fayette Counties. In these counties it is urged that some of the judges could not read and write. This would seem to be a necessity if colored voters are to be represented by the elder and most substantial of that class. This is testified to not only by white men, but by colored witnesses as well, called by Buchanan. (See pp. 13, 14, 16, and 311.)

In La Fayette County those appointments were really made upon the suggestion of the colored Republican commissioner (pages 70, 71, 311). In Tallahatchie County the objection was that some Greenbackers were appointed instead of Republicans (pages 173, 174).

In Marshall County the Republican commissioner seems to have resigned his office to escape censure from the local committee of his party (page 123). These complaints, according to the evidence, are therefore not of violated law, but objections that the county officials, irrespective of party, disregarded the dictates of local committees.

Objection is also made that many persons offering to vote were not allowed to do so because their names did not appear on the registry list. To have allowed such people to vote would have been contrary to law.

The law provides that all persons claiming the right to vote must register.

These registry books must be ready some time before election, and on the last Monday in October, before any general election, there is a meeting of the county commissioners and circuit clerk to rectify the registry—to hear any complaints and add or take from the poll-lists, according as the law and facts require. (See Code of Mississippi, sections 124, 125.)

There is no evidence to show this was not fairly done, but much that it was. See, for example, the testimony of Johnson, commissioner for De Soto County (page 229); Beanland, for La Fayette County (page 311); McAfee and Lawedey, for Tallahatchie County (pages 416, 421); and Clifton, clerk of Tate County (page 398).

As there is no evidence of a refusal to register any legal voter, and as no one duly registered was refused a vote, the complaint that unregistered voters were not allowed to vote is a complaint that the law was obeyed. Judges of election could do no different even had they reason to suppose that thereby they refused the vote of those entitled to vote had their names been registered. (See Edmonds vs. Banbury, 28 Iowa Rep., 267.)

If, as assumed in one part of contestant's argument, many colored voters are too ignorant to be a judge of election, it is quite possible they are too ignorant or indifferent to attend to registration.

It is remarkable in a case where so much assertion is made of votes refused that no voter is called as a witness and no name ever is given of a voter who was unlawfully denied registry or who, having registered, was refused a vote. Yet at every precinct in the district was a Republican supervisor appointed by a Republican United States judge, as suggested by Buchanan and friends, and in all the precincts was a Republican judge, with a few exceptional cases where Greenbackers were appointed. Nearly all these persons testify and nearly all concur that so far as they saw the election was fair and the count honest. In the very few cases where doubt is raised by the testimony of some witness it is put to rest by other evidence that carries conviction. For example, one witness, Felix Davis, thought there was some irregularity at the precinct of Horn Lake (pp. 31, 32).

But not only is he not supported by the Republican supervisor (p. 33), but a relative pronounces Davis an unreliable monomaniac in political matters (p. 248), and several witnesses contradict his testimony. See testimony of Clinton (pp. 249, 253), Foster (p. 256), Shaw (p. 259), Halbert (p. 276), Wooldridge (p. 281).

At several precincts, as Oak Grove and Pleasant Hill, it seems a number of persons were not allowed to vote because they were not registered, but none of them came forward to say they were entitled to be registered, or were refused registry, or for whom they wished to vote; nor are their names given.

At North Oxford four men, two white and two colored, who had charge of a field-piece belonging to the Democratic club, fired it on the green near the voting place. This seems to have been done on other election days, and a number of witnesses testify that all regarded it as noisy play. One witness thinks it frightened away some voters, but Lott, the Republican supervisor, says he only heard such a rumor, but that so far as he knows there was a full, free, fair vote and an honest count (p. 57). This is corroborated by so many witnesses (see pp. 313 to 319) we can not doubt its truth.

At East Holly Springs it seems that Sigman was appointed judge upon recommendation of the Republican committee (p. 106), but he declined to serve, and a colored Republican succeeded him. Wilkerson, the Greenback supervisor at that precinct, thought a mistake was made in the tally-list in counting, but four witnesses show that he frequently absented himself during the count, and five testify that the count was correct. (See pages 337, 338, 344, 350, 351, 355, 363, 364.)

At Chulahoma the Republican supervisor, not being a voter, was disqualified to act as such, but was allowed to watch all the proceedings. By him a fair poll is shown, but he thought there was a mistake in the tally of about thirty votes. But Clark, the Republican inspector, testifies that he called in a Republican justice of the peace to witness the count, and that it was honest, and there was no dispute about it (page 114). Hancock, the justice, corroborates it (page 369), as well as Nims, the Democratic judge. To discredit this evidence would seem impossible, even for partisan purposes.

At Byhalia, Hardy (brother-in-law to Buchanan) thought he saw one or two tickets changed by a judge. His brother, a Republican, and judge at that precinct, was not called to corroborate the story, and Watson, one of the judges, positively denies it, and says he was present and watched all the time (pages 370, 371). Hardy admits that the man he accuses bears an excellent reputation. We think there was no unfairness at that poll. We see no reason to exclude the precincts we have named, yet they are the ones where irregularities or fraud are supposed to be proven, if anywhere. We think it is shown nowhere. Counsel for Buchanan, who is United States attorney for Northern Mississippi, and witness for contestant, testifies to several indictments procured against officials for violations of election laws. Bowen was found guilty for ejecting a supervisor, and fined a nominal sum. Johnson was acquitted of charge against him, and then some others were induced to submit to a plea of nolo contendere and a fine of $1 to $10 each, as less expensive even than an acquittal. The United States district attorney and judge agreed to allow this, as defendants refused to plead guilty (see Strickland's evidence, pages 347, 348), which is substantially admitted by Chandler (attorney and witness for contestant, pages 8, 9), and corroborated by the record evidence. The most that can be urged in such case is that there were possible technical mistakes, or irregularities, but no criminal intent. If this be not so, the attorney for the United States, as well as judge, committed grave crimes. It is more probable the attorney strained the law to make a seeming point for his client.

Much in the argument for contestant has assumed that all colored voters are of one party. It is mere assumption and contrary to strong proof. A score or more of white witnesses testify to the contrary. Several colored voters testify to the same. Near Holly Springs, where all the candidates reside and are well known to the colored people, the latter seem to be well divided in politics. Nelson Hunt, a colored farmer residing upon his own farm, aged 64 years, and a resident of that county for forty-six years, says his acquaintance with colored people in the county is general, and that colored Democrats are numerous; that he knew thirty-two colored men in West Holly Springs, outside of the limits of the town, who voted for Manning, and upon being asked gave the names of many of them (pages 361–363). A half dozen other colored farmers give similar testimony (see pages 368–369, 377–378, 380).

In Yalabusha County, where Harris and Manning each had over 1,200 votes, Buchanan was repudiated almost unanimously by both black and white, receiving only 71 votes in the county.

It is therefore demonstrated by the witnesses, and of all shades of politics and color on both sides, that a very large proportion of the white voters and very many colored ones preferred Colonel Manning to Buchanan as their Representative in Congress, and there is no reason to doubt that he was fairly elected by a large majority, as certified by the State officials; and to deny his right to a seat in Congress would be not to protect the right of suffrage, but to grossly abuse it under the pretense of judging. We therefore recommend the following resolution, namely:

Resolved, That Van H. Manning was duly elected to the Forty-seventh Congress from the second Mississippi district.

Mr. CALKINS. I now demand the previous question on the resolution of the Committee on Elections, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the contestant have leave to withdraw his papers without prejudice.

The previous question was ordered, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—SESSINGHAUS VS. FROST.

Mr. CALKINS. I now call up the contested-election case of Sessinghaus vs. Frost.

Mr. BINGHAM. I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The gentleman has not the floor for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take care of that. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Resolved, That R. Graham Frost was not elected as a Representative to the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States from the third Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to occupy a seat in this House as such.

2. Resolved, That Gustavus Sessinghaus was duly elected as a Representative from the third Congressional district of Missouri to the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States, and is entitled to his seat as such.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the Committee on Elections, calls up the contested-election case of Sessinghaus vs. Frost. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] raises the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House proceed with the consideration of this election case?

Mr. CALKINS. I call for a division. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to make a statement.

Mr. MOULTON. I object, unless I have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. CALKINS. I was going to suggest that by unanimous consent I may be heard for a few moments, and then the gentleman may be heard in reply.

Mr. CLARDY. I object, unless some time is accorded to the other side.

Mr. CALKINS. Of course time will be allowed to the other side.

Mr. COX, of New York. I understand the objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. CALKINS. I am exceedingly anxious to have these two cases of Sessinghaus vs. Frost and Cook vs. Cutts taken up and disposed of right away. There is a bill from the Post-Office Committee in reference to the adjustment of the salaries of postmasters which comes over as the unfinished business, and which I am told will take but twenty minutes to pass it. I do not know how long it will take. It is now said it will not take over an hour to pass it. There is also another bill about some pension matters which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] wants to get in that probably would take about the same length of time. If the House will consent to take up those two cases and decide them, then it is the highest duty——

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. RANNEY. The gentleman has mentioned two cases, but there is another case still standing in the same line, that of Lee against Richardson, of South Carolina.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not mean to except that case.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish to know if he proposes to call up two of the cases and not the third?

Mr. CALKINS. I do mean to call up that case.

Mr. MOULTON. I desire to say but a word. I do not wish when these cases are taken up that they shall be disposed of without fair opportunity for discussion. If this side as well as the other side shall be allowed that opportunity, I shall make no objection.

Mr. CALKINS. Of course we all concede that.

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the House will proceed with the election case of Sessinghaus against Frost.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 83.

Mr. CALKINS demanded tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the House refused to proceed with the consideration of the contested-election case.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now call up the unfinished business coming over from last night.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters, as reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 140, noes 8.

So there was a second.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] will be recognized to control the time in favor of and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the time in opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been ordered to be printed, and appears in the RECORD of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a very important bill, and the House was very thin last night. There was no quorum present, only a handful of members. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to reading the bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. It is not necessary to consume time; it has been printed in the RECORD, where members have had an opportunity of examining it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the reading of the bill.

Mr. PEELLE. I object to taking up the time of the House in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am surprised to find the gentleman willing to increase salaries without reading the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the importance of expedition in the discussion of this question; and as the bill has been printed for the information of this House in the RECORD of this morning, I will assume that gentlemen either have examined it or will hereafter examine it before the vote is taken, and therefore I need not now go into an elaborate explanation of the details of the proposed legislation. It is known to this House by its action during the past fifteen minutes that the conference committee on the part of the House and the Senate have agreed to the date of the 2-cent rate of postage for domestic letters, going into effect under the law on the 1st day of the coming October. The House in the passage of the bill fixed this date originally on the 1st day of January next. The Senate fixed the date on the 1st day of July. The conference committee made an agreement dividing the time fixed by each House, and establishing the date on which it should go into effect as the 1st day of October of the present year. Had it gone into effect, in accordance with the date fixed by this House, I assume now, as I assumed and asserted during the discussion of the question reducing postage, that for the next fiscal year under the 2-cent rate there would be no deficiency on the part of the Post-Office Department, and therefore no demand upon the Treasury to make up the deficiency for the administration of that Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884. It is to carry out that law taking effect on the 1st day of October next that this bill is submitted for the consideration of this House, adjusting the salaries of 47,000 postmasters, all of whom are largely dependent either upon the amount of stamps canceled in their respective offices or upon the amount of stamps sold and canceled.

I would submit for the information of the House that many plans, suggestions, and bills drafted were presented to the Post-Office Department, not only by those outside, but by officials of the Department thoroughly familiar with the subject, covering the question of readjustment of compensation, and this bill now submitted to the House has been deemed not only by the Department but by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads as being the fairest and most equitable not only to this large body of subordinate officials but also to the Government. It is proper right here for me to state that the report of the Postmaster-General, as submitted to this Congress, called attention, independently of the reduction of the rate of postage, to the necessity of the revision of the salaries of the postmasters, and he used these words, which I shall read for the information of the House.

These recommendations and the suggestions commended to Congress, clearly and with great force, exhibit the cumbrous and complex system of compensating postmasters now in practice under existing law and explain the necessity for change and simplification of method and system:

The very able report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General calls attention to the great difficulty experienced in adjusting salaries to postmasters of the first three classes, and in making allowances for expenses to those of the first two classes.

He does not exaggerate those difficulties. It may well be doubted if he could exaggerate them. It would be easy to frame a law more unjust than that under which the salaries of postmasters are now settled, but it is quite unnecessary to do so—the existing law is sufficiently unjust. But necessity herself, though admitted to be the mother of invention, could not invent a more cumbrous or complex method of adjusting salaries. Postmasters at the smallest offices are paid alike. Their pay is apportioned in part upon the revenues of their offices and in part according to the labor performed in them. So far as revenue is derived from the rent of boxes, postmasters take the whole. So far as it is derived from the sale of "waste paper, dead newspapers, printed matter, and twine," they receive 60 per cent. So far as it is derived from the sale of money-orders, they receive one-third. So far as it is derived from the sale of stamps, envelopes, and postal-cards, they receive nothing. They may sell thousands in value, but they get no share of the proceeds. If, however, they cancel a stamp on matter mailed at their offices, no matter where the stamp is sold, they get 60 per cent. of its value. If they pay a money-order they receive a quarter of 1 per cent. of its amount.

This rule is sufficiently cumbrous, but sufficiently equal. Postmasters continue to be so paid until their sales and cancellations, exclusive of money orders, reach $400 per year. At that point a new rule is introduced. They still get the whole of the box rents; they still get the same commission on the sale and payment of money-orders; but, upon the proceeds from the sale of waste paper, dead newspapers, printed matter, and twine, and upon the cancellation of stamps they get 50 per cent. instead of 60 on the excess over $400.

This new rule controls until such sales and cancellations, exclusive of money-orders, reach $1,200 a year. Then a new rule obtains. It is difficult to see why, but thereafter, on the surplus received from the sales of waste paper, dead newspapers, printed matter, and twine, the postmaster receives, not 60 per cent., nor 50 per cent., but 40 per cent., and the same percentage on the value of stamps canceled.

When, however, the box rents and these various commissions, exclusive of the money-order business, shall aggregate $1,000, the office is advanced from the fourth to the third class. Then there is a new and most curious rule for compensation. Then the postmaster receives a salary in lieu of the box rents and commissions before assigned to him.

To determine the amount of the salary in a given case a fund is set apart. That fund is composed of all the box-rents, if the postmaster owns the boxes and the rents do not exceed $1,350 per annum. It is composed of two-thirds of the box-rents if the Government owns the boxes and the rents do not exceed $1,000. To those sums, respectively, is added commissions on all other postal revenues of the office in different proportions, to wit, 60 per cent. on the first $400, 50 per cent. on the next $800, 40 per cent. on the next $1,600, and 30 per cent. on the excess until the commissions amount to $1,350.

That sum, so curiously compounded, does not constitute the salary of the postmaster, but out of it is dipped, so to speak, as many even hundreds of dollars as can be found. That is the salary for all postmasters, unless the gross revenues exceed $4,000 per annum. When the revenues exceed $4,000 the postmaster receives a percentage on the excess. That percentage constantly varies. It is 1 per cent. on all sums between $4,000 and $10,000. So often as the revenues double the percentage is reduced one-tenth of 1 per cent. until the revenues reach the aggregate of $1,200,000. On all revenues above that maximum the postmaster receives one-tenth of 1 per cent.; and still, when a salary reaches $4,000, all these streams are turned off, except in the single case of the office at New York. There they continue to flow until the salary is swollen to $8,000.

The partnership now existing between the Government and the postmaster in the use of letter-boxes should be dissolved. Whenever the Government owns the boxes or hires them with the building, the whole of the rental paid by patrons, and not two-thirds of it, belongs to the revenues of the Department as much as the postage does. Where, on the contrary, the postmaster supplies the boxes and the Government does not, the latter should no more share in the proceeds from their rent than in the rent of any other property belonging to the officer. In all cases, therefore, in adjusting the pay of postmasters I think box rents should be wholly eliminated from the calculation; and I am strongly inclined to the opinion that the whole system of regulating the compensation of postmasters should be radically changed. I know of but two reasons for paying postmasters at all. One is, he incurs responsibility; and the other, he performs labor. Both the responsibility and the labor are accurately measured by the business transacted at the several offices. The business transacted at each office is measured with sufficient accuracy by its revenues. The two marked exceptions to this rule are the offices at New York and at Washington. The former office should be excepted because of the large amount of foreign mail handled at that office.

* * * * * * *

The office at Washington should be excepted because of the large percentage of matter handled there emanating from Congress or from the Departments, and which yields no revenue to the office. It is estimated that not less than 70 per cent. of all the matter at that office emanates from those two sources.

In concluding his long recommendation upon this subject he emphasized this language:

I know of but two reasons for paying postmasters at all. One is, he incurs responsibility, and the other he performs labor. Both the responsibility and the labor are accurately measured by the business transacted at the several offices. The business transacted at each office is measured with sufficient accuracy by its revenue.

I would state that upon this proposition, and upon this basis of labor performed and responsibility incurred the present bill is submitted for the consideration of the House. In this bill all that is deserving of retention in existing statutes is retained; all that is complex and cumbrous is wiped out and ignored.

The classification of postmasters under existing statutes is retained in this bill—other concurrent laws having effect upon allowances for clerk-hire, rent, fuel, light, and incidental expenses.

Permit me to refer you to report of Ex-Postmaster-General James, with reference to the claims of the postmasters of the several large post-offices, where labor, responsibility and bonded obligation entitle them to special consideration. I read from his report of June 30, 1881:

Table showing the gross revenue, bond, and compensation of postmasters and money-order business of seven of the principal cities of the United States.

Office.	Ordinary gross revenue.	Bond of postmaster.	Compensation of postmaster.	Money-order business.
				Value of orders issued.	Value of orders paid.

In view of the facts thus presented, I recommend that the compensation of the postmasters at Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, and Saint Louis be increased to $7,000, and that of the postmasters at Cincinnati, San Francisco, New Orleans, and Baltimore to $6,000 per annum.

It is as essential to the interests of the Government as to those of private enterprise that its business be transacted by men equipped for their work by natural qualification and special training. Surely, the Government can not expect to secure the services of the men best qualified to do its work when it offers a salary affording little more than a bare support to officials who are clothed with the largest responsibilities.

The marked increase of business in these several large offices may well receive the attention of the House, and when the vast amount of money handled and responsibility incurred is clearly understood and appreciated I do not think any gentleman upon this floor can object to the $12,000 increase of compensation which this bill carries for the eight largest offices in the country. I read the exhibit or statement of business in accordance with the latest official returns:

Baltimore	493,100

I also read to the House the statement of the business transacted in these several large offices in the money-order division:

J. H. ELA, Auditor.

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 28, 1883.

The $12,000 additional compensation which the bill carries for the said large offices will be:

Boston, $2,000, making total annual compensation	$6,000
Philadelphia, $2,000, making total annual compensation	6,000
Saint Louis, $2,000, making total annual compensation	6,000
Chicago, $2,000, making total annual compensation	6,000
Cincinnati, $1,000, making total annual compensation	5,000
San Francisco, $1,000, making total annual compensation	5,000
Washington, $1,000, making total annual compensation	5,000
Baltimore, $1,000, making total annual compensation	5,000

In view of the millions of dollars annually handled, no one certainly can object to the reasonably fair salaries when added to all the obligations and responsibilities there is required from the postmaster a bond of from $150,000 to $300,000.

I read to the House the details of the bill covering the first, second, and third class offices, and make the declaration that they will not increase or allow, other than in the eight offices before mentioned, additional compensation, save that which is due to natural growth and increase in work. The officers will receive the following specified compensation where their offices exhibit the specified gross receipts:

FIRST CLASS.

	Salary.
$40,000 and not exceeding $45,000	$3,000
$45,000 and not exceeding $60,000	3,100
$60,000 and not exceeding $80,000	3,200
$80,000 and not exceeding $110,000	3,300
$110,000 and not exceeding $150,000	3,400
$150,000 and not exceeding $200,000	3,500
$200,000 and not exceeding $260,000	3,600
$260,000 and not exceeding $330,000	3,700
$330,000 and not exceeding $400,000	3,800
$400,000 and not exceeding $450,000	3,900
$450,000 and not exceeding $500,000	4,000
$500,000 and not exceeding $600,000	5,000
$600,000 and upward	6,000

SECOND CLASS.

$8,000 and not exceeding $9,000	2,000
$9,000 and not exceeding $10,000	2,100
$10,000 and not exceeding $11,000	2,200
$11,000 and not exceeding $13,000	2,300
$13,000 and not exceeding $16,000	2,400
$16,000 and not exceeding $20,000	2,500
$20,000 and not exceeding $24,000	2,600
$24,000 and not exceeding $30,000	2,700
$30,000 and not exceeding $35,000	2,800
$35,000 and not exceeding $40,000	2,900

THIRD CLASS.

	Salary.
$1,900 and not exceeding $2,100	$1,000
$2,100 and not exceeding $2,400	1,100
$2,400 and not exceeding $2,700	1,200
$2,700 and not exceeding $3,000	1,300
$3,000 and not exceeding $3,500	1,400
$3,500 and not exceeding $4,200	1,500
$4,200 and not exceeding $5,000	1,600
$5,000 and not exceeding $6,000	1,700
$6,000 and not exceeding $7,000	1,800
$7,000 and not exceeding $8,000	1,900

Mr. McMILLIN. It increases, however, the salaries in the largest offices.

Mr. BINGHAM. It increases the salaries in the eight largest offices in the country—the offices that handle from six to almost twelve million dollars.

Mr. McMILLIN. And these officers now receive the largest salary?

Mr. BINGHAM. They receive now the largest salaries; but only to the extent of one, two, three, and four hundred dollars greater than first-class offices, where the postmaster handles limited amounts of money and where the responsibility is not great.

The rates fixed for the several classes to which I have referred have been determined after careful examination of the present salaries and gross receipts, as shown by the last biennial adjustment, which went into effect July 1, 1882, and I have no hesitation in saying that an adjustment made on this basis will be fair and impartial, and will cause less friction than any other plan which has been proposed. By less friction I mean that practically the present salaries will not be materially changed, and any increase of salaries will be due to a healthy increase of revenue. The reduction of letter postage will fall heaviest upon the legion (45,000) of fourth-class postmasters, as their compensation is largely made up from commissions on mail matter actually mailed at their offices—literally upon stamps canceled.

Mr. McMILLIN. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes to the fourth-class offices I wish to ask him what effect does the change in salary have upon the second and third classes?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that the bill holds the second and third classes, after careful and critical examination, just where they are now.

Mr. MORSE. And large bonds are required.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, large bonds are required.

There are members on this floor more familiar with the details of the fourth-class offices than I am. They know that in each of their districts they number a hundred and more. They are the class of offices which do not receive, as the larger offices receive, reasonable, fair compensation for stamps sold and for work done. In the fourth-class office the compensation allowed is a percentage on canceled stamps. The stamps must be canceled in the office, not sold, but canceled in the office, before the commission is allowed.

In that connection let me state the fourth class of postmasters are paid on the return to the Department of their quarterly accounts. They will immediately feel the effect on the rate of commission, if the present law stands, of the difference between the commission allowed for the cancellation of a 3-cent stamp and a 2-cent stamp. Gentlemen need but to hear that proposition to thoroughly understand it.

The law so far as that class of postmasters are concerned will take effect immediately; and in making the estimates and in changing the rate of commission your committee have determined to recommend such a rate and change in the commission as would give to the fourth-class postmaster the same amount of compensation that he now receives for a line of work identical, at the 2-cent rate, for exactly the same amount of work done; with this one addition, and the committee believe that in view of the fourth-class officers receiving no compensation for rent, fuel, light, clerk-hire, &c., some small increase of compensation should be given that class of officers, 45,000 in number.

I feel that I represent the entire Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I know that I represent the Department, when I submit that the basis we have drafted the bill upon will give to these fourth-class postmasters, from $100 up to $1,000 per annum, between 9 and 10 per cent. increase. But the largest average of increase will be in the class of offices that run up to between $400 and $500 per annum. That is the class that will more largely receive this percentage of increase than the postmasters whose compensation exceeds $500 per annum.

I will briefly illustrate by some tables I have the difference between the old law and the bill now under consideration.

These commissions under existing law are per quarter as follows:

On the first $100, 60 per cent., or	$60
On the next $200, 50 per cent., or	100
On the next $400, 40 per cent., or	160

limited, however, including box-rents and all other revenue except money-order commission, to $250 per quarter.

The proposed plan reduced to figures gives the fourth-class postmaster compensation at the following rates per quarter, namely:

On the first $50, 100 per cent., or	$50
On the next $100, 60 per cent., or	60
On the next $200, 50 per cent.. or	100

and 40 per cent. on all the balance, limited to $250 per quarter, exclusive of money-order commissions.

I also submit a table showing the present and the proposed compensation of fourth-class postmasters, giving the relative and average increase of salary on revenue of $50 to $1,000, under the old and new law:

	Per annum.	Compensation of postmaster.
		Under old law.	Under new law.	Increase.	Per cent. increase.
On revenue of	$50 00	$30 00	$50 00	$20 00	66.70
On revenue of	100 00	60 00	100 00	40 00	66.70
On revenue of	200 00	120 00	200 00	80 00	66.70
On revenue of	300 00	180 00	260 00	80 00	44.40
On revenue of	400 00	240 00	320 00	80 00	33.30
On revenue of	500 00	290 00	380 00	90 00	31.00

On revenue of	1 000 00	540 00	640 00	100 00	18.50
Averages	504 56	283 64	364 56	80 91	38.67

Also, table showing compensation of fourth-class postmasters under old and new law per quarter:

OLD LAW.

On first	$100, 60 per cent., or	$60
On next	200, 50 per cent., or	100
On next	225, 40 per cent., or	90
Totals	525	250=maximum amount allowed per quarter.

NEW LAW.

On first	$50, 100 per cent., or	$50
On next	100, 60 per cent., or	60
On next	200, 50 per cent., or	100
On next	100, 40 per cent., or	40
Totals	450	250=maximum amount allowed per quarter.

SUMMARY.

Old law	$525	gives postmaster $250
New law	450	gives postmaster 250
Difference in favor of new law per quarter	75

I ask the House to pass the bill. It will simplify the adjustment of the salary of every postmaster in the country. They will be paid in accordance with the gross receipts of their offices and responsibility for money obligations, as well as labor performed. It will increase to a reasonable and just extent the allowances of the fourth-class officers, whose pay is small, yet at the same time have duties that are exacting and important.

The bill is in the direction of good legislation, and should receive the support of every member of this House.

I shall append to my remarks several exhibits that may be useful to gentleman who may desire to examine more carefully into the bill under consideration:

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. MCMILLIN.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I feel that there is a necessity for legislation in behalf of the fourth-class postmasters of the country in view of the change that was made in the law during this session concerning the rate of postage; and while that is true I desire to enter my protest against a scheme for the purpose of making that class of officers the scape-goat through which the best paid postmasters of the country are to have their salaries increased.

The very first part of the bill pertains to that class of postmasters who already receive the largest salaries that are given to any postmasters of the country. It is a well-known fact that the service has suffered no detriment by reason of failure to pay this class of officers amply. It is a well-known fact that whenever there is a vacancy in any of the large cities of the country there is a swarm of applicants any one of whom would discharge the duties well; and yet with this fact staring us in the face we have the extraordinary spectacle presented of an effort to increase their salaries.

We have passed provisions during this Congress which will tend to reduce the salaries of the postmasters of the fourth class. I know it is necessary that some change in the present law in their behalf should be made. But I think that a bill which should provide that postmasters of the fourth class shall receive under the new law for the cancellation of a similar number of stamps (I do not mean stamps of the same value) the same compensation which they received under the old law would accomplish the end desired better than it will be accomplished by this bill. The whole system of compensation is changed by this bill, and we do not know what will be the effect if it shall become law.

I would like to have the gentleman in charge of the bill, or some member of the House, tell us where the money is to come from to pay this increase of salaries. It looks as if there were a disposition to heap up deficiencies for the next year. We change the rate of postage, and the effect of that will probably be to reduce the revenues of the Department from six to eight millions of dollars a year. No appropriation has been made; none has yet been proposed to supply that deficiency.

It is now proposed to increase the salaries of first-class postmasters, and no appropriation is made to pay that increase. Is it possible that we are going through the forms of law to change salaries and make no provision for their payment?

I think this measure is crude. I do not think it has been brought in with that mature consideration that its importance deserves. While, as I have said, I am anxious for legislation for the benefit of the poorest paid postmasters, those who receive from $100 to $200 a year, I think we should not accompany that with an increase of the salaries of those who happen to have already good berths.

Mr. BROWNE. I desire to be recognized for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the time for debate upon the pending bill be somewhat extended. It is a very important bill, and I would like to have a few minutes upon it myself. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended for one hour.

Mr. CAMP. I object.

Mr. RYAN. Do not do that.

Mr. CAMP. I do object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that, inasmuch as the House has declined to extend the time for the consideration of this bill, at least during the few minutes left the House will attempt to understand its provisions.

The occasion and pretense for bringing this measure forward is the change in the law reducing letter postage from 3 cents to 2 cents per half ounce; but the House ought to understand, and I presume it does understand, that this bill goes far beyond the mere effect of the reduction of the rates of postage. The bill is not based on the fact that the revenues of a certain class of postmasters may be materially reduced by the change in the law in regard to the rates of postage, for it is not confined to that class of post-offices, but is an ingenious method to effect a long-standing effort to increase the salaries of postmasters all along the line.

This measure is brought forward, as I think my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has in effect stated, to increase the salaries of postmasters generally, not simply those affected by the reduction of postage.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman should have said "equalize," not "increase."

Mr. HOLMAN. I think "increase" is the best expression, for you do actually increase the salaries of a large number of postmasters now exceedingly well paid.

Mr. BINGHAM. "Equalize" was my expression.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House will remember that in consequence of the agreement to the conference report to-day upon the Post-Office appropriation bill, the law reducing the rates of postage will not take effect until the 1st day of October. There will therefore be but two months intervening between the time the new law takes effect reducing the rates of postage and the meeting of the next Congress. Therefore by no possibility can any material harm be done, even if it should be found that the decreased revenues resulting from the reduction of the rates of postage shall materially reduce the salaries of the fourth-class postmasters, who alone could be injuriously affected by the reduction of postage.

Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill was introduced on the 19th day of February and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It was not reported back from that committee until the 28th of February, and it was not printed so that members could examine it until yesterday.

Here is a bill brought forward in the expiring moments of this Congress proposing to increase the salaries of postmasters all along the line. Under existing law there is no postmaster who receives a salary exceeding $4,000 a year except the postmaster in New York city. This bill proposes to pay a number of postmasters a salary of $6,000 a year each.

Mr. BINGHAM. Only four of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Four in number, my friend says. I accept his statement. The bill proposes to pay another class $5,000 a year each.

Mr. BINGHAM. Only four of those.

Mr. HOLMAN. And yet the salaries are now high enough. A still more remarkable effect of this bill is that the increase is all along the line while pretending to equalize salaries. Under existing law, where the compensation of the fourth-class postmasters is dependent upon the gross receipts of the office, the rate of compensation under the present law and under the law proposed by this bill is as follows:

Table showing compensation of fourth-class postmasters under old and new law per quarter:

OLD LAW.

On first.....	$100, 60 per cent., or $60
On next.....	200, 50 per cent., or 100
On next.....	225, 40 per cent., or 90
Totals	525.....	250 = maximum amount allowed per quarter.

NEW LAW.

On first.....	$50, 100 per cent., or $50
On next.....	100, 50 per cent., or 60
On next.....	200, 50 per cent., or 100
On next.....	100, 40 per cent., or 40
Totals	450.....	250 = maximum amount allowed per quarter.

SUMMARY.

Old law.....	$525 gives postmaster $250
New law.....	450 gives postmaster 250
Difference in favor of new law per quarter.....	75

Gentlemen will please bear in mind that changing the rate of letter postage from 3 cents to 2 cents per half ounce is not likely, on the theory which my friend himself has heretofore advanced, to reduce the revenues of the Post-Office Department, and yet by this bill the increased salaries of the fourth-class postmasters is shown by the following table:

Table showing the present and proposed compensation of fourth-class postmasters, giving the relative and average increase of salary on revenue of $50 to $1,000, under the old and new law.

	Per annum.	Compensation of postmaster.

So it is seen that the salaries are increased from the small post-offices to the largest a heavy per cent. And yet this is a bill merely to equalize salaries!

Gentlemen can see at once the effect of this measure and the high salaries now paid. Take for illustration the following, in the third class:

Gross receipts, $1,900 and not exceeding $2,100, salary, $1,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is exactly what the salary is now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not in this order nor upon this basis. Take again this from the third class:

Gross receipts, $2,100 and not exceeding $2,400, salary, $1,100.

So on through the entire list. Even in this higher class you pay to the postmaster about 50 per cent. of the gross receipts. A further objection I have to this bill is that it comes in at too late a moment for honest consideration. It comes here with its heavy increase of salaries at a time when the public judgment so recently expressed, if it means anything which honorable gentlemen should consider, means retrenchment in expenses and not extravagant salaries. Yet this bill proposes to make all along the line a material increase of salaries. I would like to know what expression of public sentiment has demanded this? What public demand is there for an increase of $2,000 in the salaries of some postmasters and $1,000 in others? What information has come to us from the late election or since justifying or excusing this increase of salaries? What party dared in the last campaign to demand an increase of salaries? What gentleman elected to the next Congress informed the people of his district that he was in favor of increasing salaries already large, $4,000 a year, 33⅓ per cent. or any other per cent.?

Mr. BINGHAM. The justification of this measure is the commonsense proposition that when a man handles from five to ten million dollars of the public money every year he ought to have some recognition for that great and serious responsibility.

Mr. HOLMAN. That "serious responsibility," when so universally have you relieved these officers from all responsibility whatever that you have even passed during the present Congress a general law authorizing the Postmaster-General, without the poor formality of coming to Congress, to relieve these officers from all responsibility whatever for losses sustained in all cases where there has been a moderate exercise of care upon the part of the official.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman refers to the bill which is limited to cases where not more than $2,000 has been lost by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable accident. That bill does not extend to all cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does with rare exceptions. I have heard heretofore the argument for enlarged pay on the ground of the responsibility resting upon public officials, and have been compelled to yield to it; but under the present state of the law that argument is gone.

I repeat, does my friend discover any drift of public opinion that those public officers or any other public officers of this Government are too poorly paid?

Mr. BROWNE. I can tell my colleague of some officers who are too poorly paid. I refer to the fourth-class postmasters.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, as to fourth-class postmasters, does my friend find that there is any difficulty in filling those offices with competent men in any section of this country?

Mr. ALDRICH. We do.

Mr. BROWNE. We do. Nearly one-half of these officers in my district have resigned because the compensation is wholly inadequate.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is truly refreshing to hear that any office under this Government, from fourth-class postmasters through all the grades of official service, is going begging. Such a fact has never yet come to my knowledge. Yet in the expiring hours of this session, without any possibility of any serious injustice being done to a single postmaster by the reduction of postage on the 1st of next October, the fact of that reduction is seized upon to increase some 60,000 salaries and to increase the salaries of some of the best paid officers in this great army of public officials. I trust this bill will be defeated. The people demand reform, and will you in defiance of that demand increase the public burdens? The country demands reform in the civil service. Will you still further corrupt the civil service by increasing the motive for corrupt practices in securing public office? A reduction of salary is the only true method of civil-service reform.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman know that many of these fourth-class postmasters have great labor and responsibility, without any allowance for office-rent or anything of that kind, and yet receive only from $40 to $100 a year, and that the reduction of postage from 3 to 2 cents cuts down this meager compensation exactly one-third?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it cut those salaries down one-third?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It does.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, sir, the argument on which the reduction in the rate of postage was carried through was that the increased amount of correspondence, enlarging the demand for postage-stamps and stamped envelopes, would prevent deficiency in the revenues of the Post-Office Department. But does my friend wish to increase the salaries of the more highly paid postmasters, officers who now receive from $2,500 to $4,000 a year, for the purpose of correcting any falling off of the salaries of the fourth-class postmasters which can be done promptly next session if an actual falling off of salaries is found?

The SPEAKER. The time for debate on this motion has expired.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BINGHAM to suspend the rules and pass the bill, there were—ayes 99, noes 21.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 152, noes 21.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being ayes 13, noes 103—less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point that the last vote fails to disclose the presence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. That is not required on this count.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that whenever the point is made that the vote just taken does not show the presence of a quorum——

The SPEAKER. But the requirement of the Constitution——

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point that there is no quorum in the House, as indicated by the last vote.

The SPEAKER. The point is overruled. There is a quorum as disclosed by the last vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not by the vote just taken.

The SPEAKER. The last vote as reported by the tellers on agreeing to the proposition to suspend the rules was in the aggregate 173—more than a quorum. The motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill is agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FLOWER] on the last suspension day had the floor and moved that the rules be suspended and joint resolution (H. Res. 267) to amend the Constitution of the United States be discharged from the Committee on the Judiciary and passed.

Mr. FLOWER. I now call up that motion, and ask for the reading of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same is hereby, submitted to the several States for their ratification or rejection, and the same, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

Every bill, resolution, or vote containing several items of appropriation of money to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary, shall be presented to the President of the United States, who may object to one or more of such items while approving of the other parts of the bill, resolution, or vote. In such case he shall append to the bill, resolution, or vote a statement of the items to which he objects, and the appropriations so objected to shall not take effect unless reconsidered and passed by two-thirds of each House, as provided in section 7 of article I of the Constitution. The items objected to shall be separately reconsidered in each House, and if on such reconsideration one or more of them shall be approved by two-thirds of each House, the same shall become part of the law, notwithstanding the objection of the President.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 40.

Mr. PAGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. FLOWER and Mr. CAMP. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FLOWER and Mr. PAGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 58.

So the rules were not suspended (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof), and the joint resolution was not passed.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The tellers, I understood, were demanded on the yeas and nays.

Mr. FLOWER. My demand for tellers was on the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman misunderstood it, that is all. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. They have been refused.

Mr. BAYNE. We did not so understand.

The SPEAKER. By the House itself.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That was the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so announced.

Mr. BAYNE. The RECORD will show we demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question has been disposed of, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to authorize the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and other railroad companies to unite and consolidate so as to form a continuous line of railroad between the tidal waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be lawful for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company (being the same corporation mentioned in section 23 of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," and the same corporation mentioned in section 18 of an act of Congress approved July 27, 1866, authorizing the construction of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad) to consolidate and merge its corporate powers, franchises, and organization with the following-named companies, whether organized and existing under the laws of any State or Territory, or under the laws of the United States, namely: Southern Pacific Railroad Company (of Arizona), Southern Pacific Railroad Company (of New Mexico), Galveston, Harrisburgh, and San Antonio Railway Company (of Texas), Texas and New Orleans Railway Company (of Texas), Louisiana Western Extension Company (of Texas), Louisiana Western Extension Company (of Louisiana), Louisiana Central Railroad Company (of Louisiana), Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad Company (of Louisiana), for the purpose of forming a continuous through line of railroad between the city and bay of San Francisco, in California, and other ports of the Pacific Ocean southward from San Francisco, or on the navigable tidal waters adjoining thereto, and such ports and places as may be selected on the Mississippi River southward from the mouth of the Arkansas River, Gulf of Mexico, and the navigable tidal waters adjoining thereto; and it shall be lawful and competent for said companies whose lines would form such continuous through line aforesaid to unite, merge, and consolidate their respective railroads, telegraph lines, capital stock, rights, privileges, franchises, property, and debts with the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and it and they are hereby authorized so to unite, confederate, and consolidate, upon such terms as the said companies may respectively agree upon, and may operate the same as one continuous and connected system of railroad and telegraph lines; and said company so formed by such consolidation shall be a body politic and corporate, by such name, style, and title as they may select, and by such name shall have perpetual succession, and shall be able to sue and be sued, defend and be defended, in all courts of law and equity within the United States, and may make and use a common seal, and succeed to and have and enjoy all the powers, privileges, and immunities necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act.

SEC. 2. That articles of union, confederation, or consolidation of said Southern Pacific Railroad Company and other railroad companies so uniting shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of the Interior in the manner prescribed in section 12 of said act of July 27, 1866.

SEC. 3. That from and after the date of the deposit of said articles of consolidation, the said railroad, or so much thereof as shall be from time to time constructed, shall be a post-route for national purposes, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, as provided in section 19 of said act of March 3, 1871: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held or construed to authorize or permit the consolidation of parallel or competing lines of railroads or to authorize the consolidated road to lease or purchase such lines between the said ports on the Pacific Ocean and the ports on the Gulf of Mexico or on the Mississippi River; but this section shall in no wise cut off or impair any lawful and now existing right of said companies conferred by or derived under any act of Congress: And provided further, That the assent of not less than three-fourths in amount of the capital stock of each company shall first be had and obtained to such proposed consolidation.

SEC. 4. That the right to fix from time to time, as the public interest may require, the rates for carrying passengers and freight on the consolidated road, is hereby reserved to Congress.

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act shall be held or construed in any manner to relieve the companies consolidated of the consequences of any failure by either of such companies to perform any act or acts required of them by any law or any provision in either of their charters; nor shall said consolidated company, or either of them, be relieved of any obligation to do or perform any act required by their respective charters or by any law or any contract with the United States, or any State or Territory, nor shall anything in this act be held or so construed as in any manner to revise or confirm any land grant to any railroad company, whether made by the United States, or by any State, nor shall said consolidation work a forfeiture of any legal right which either of said companies hereby consolidated now has under existing law, nor impair any contract of any such companies.

SEC. 6. That the rights of creditors of such companies so consolidating or uniting shall not be affected by such consolidation or union, and all such rights may be enforced against such consolidated or united company, or otherwise, as may be lawful; nor shall anything in this act, nor any consolidation thereunder, interfere with or impair the right of any State or Territory through which either of said railroads passes, or may pass, to regulate the rights, privileges, and responsibilities of such railway company within its territorial limits as fully and absolutely as it could do the same previous to said consolidation; nor shall anything in this act be construed in any manner to legalize or give validity to any Territorial or State laws in relation to any interests of any of the railroad companies herein authorized to consolidate; nor shall this act, or any provision thereof, be so construed as to deprive the courts of the several States or Territories, through which either or any of the roads herein named may pass, of jurisdiction over controversies between said companies and the citizens of such States or Territories; nor shall this act, or any provision thereof, be so construed as to extend the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States over such controversies.

SEC. 7. That the power is hereby reserved to alter, amend, or repeal this act as, in the judgment of Congress, the public good may from time to time require.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a second.

Mr. CALKINS. After this is disposed of I shall call up the contested-election cases.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1443) granting a pension to Edgar B. Lamphier;

A bill (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Daniel M. Morley;

A bill (H. R. 3743) granting a pension to Miss Amanda Stokes;

A bill (H. R. 5103) granting a pension to Margery Nightengale;

A bill (H. R. 5558) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Bayard; and

A bill (H. R. 6923) granting a pension to Mrs. Helen M. Thayer.

The message also announced that the Senate had rejected the bill (H. R. 6501) granting a pension to Patrick Horan.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 2263) to amend the pension laws, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to suspend the rules and pass the bill just read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a second on that motion.

The SPEAKER. Without objection a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman from Ohio will be considered as controlling the time in favor of and the gentleman from Indiana in opposition to this proposition.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hope I will have the attention of the House while I explain the provisions of this bill. I will do it very briefly, but I think very fully. The bill, as stated in the title, is for the purpose of authorizing the consolidation of nine companies which form a continuous line of railway from the Pacific Ocean to the Gulf of Mexico or the Lower Mississippi.

There was some objection to the bill as originally presented, and these objections, I will say, have all been considered and fully met by the amendments which have been prepared after consultation with gentlemen on all sides, who have scanned all the provisions of the bill with a view to removing all just ground for criticism.

I believe that in this bill we have been able to remove every well-founded objection, as I think gentlemen will discover upon examining its provisions.

Mr. WILSON. State the general objects of the bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have already stated that the general object is to authorize the consolidation of nine companies whose several roads form a continuous line from the Pacific coast to the Gulf of Mexico or Lower Mississippi.

It was objected originally, when this bill was first presented to this House, that the names of the companies had not been specified, and that possibly some other line of road, not contemplated by the bill, might be consolidated with them. Hence in the bill as amended the name of each of the companies, and only those forming the continuous through line, is specified. In the original bill authority was also given to operate branches and spurs. At the suggestion and in accordance with the wish of my distinguished and honorable friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that was stricken out, so that neither a branch nor a spur under the present bill can be operated as a part of the consolidation. Others suggested that possibly they might control or operate parallel or competing lines. We have answered that objection by inserting a provision which prohibits absolutely the consolidation of any parallel or competing line, or the operation of any parallel or competing line by this consolidated company. It was also suggested that it might possibly interfere with the duties imposed upon some companies by the States or Territories or by the United States. Hence a provision was drawn which places that beyond any possible peradventure in the following language:

That nothing in this act shall be held or construed in any manner to relieve the companies consolidated of the consequences of any failure by either of such companies to perform any act or acts required by them by any law or any provision in either of their charters; nor shall said consolidated companies or either of them be relieved of any obligation to do or perform any act required by their respective charters, or by any law or contract with the United States or with any State or Territory.

Then some gentlemen say, still this may tend to revive some forfeited land grant. At the suggestion of certain gentlemen familiar with the subject, who have scanned the bill carefully, this is placed beyond peradventure by the further clause:

Nor shall anything in this act be held or so construed as in any manner to revive or confirm any land grant to any railroad company, whether made by the United States or by any State, nor shall said consolidation work a forfeiture of any legal right which either of said companies hereby consolidated now has under existing law—

Now observe this provision—

nor impair any contract of any such company. And that the rights of creditors of said companies consolidating or uniting shall not be affected by such consolidation or union; and all such rights may be enforced against such consolidated or united company or otherwise as may be lawful.

Now, in order to meet every conceivable objection and provide an amendment that would do everything except to permit the cowboys to ditch the train and rob the passengers, we, at the suggestion of the learned gentlemen, my friends from Texas and California and others, inserted the following clause to protect fully the States and citizens of States in all controversies that can arise with this consolidated company or either of them——

Mr. BERRY. To what gentleman from California do you refer?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I refer to the gentleman's colleague [Mr. ROSECRANS].

Mr. BERRY. Because I oppose that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I thought you were one and inseparable.

Mr. BERRY. Not by a good deal. I object to the whole thing.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is in response to the resolution of your Legislature that the following amendment was prepared.

Mr. BERRY. The Legislature of California is opposed to it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now observe:

Nor shall anything in this act nor any consolidation thereunder interfere with or impair the rights of any State or Territory through which either of said railroads passes or may pass to regulate the rights, privileges, and responsibilities of such railway company within its territorial limits as fully and as absolutely as it could do the same previous to said consolidation; nor shall anything in this act be construed in any manner to legalize or give validity to any Territorial or State laws in relation to any interests of any of the railroad companies herein authorized to consolidate.

And beyond that, in response to my honorable friend from Texas, whose legal ability will not be called into question, and so as to place this entirely beyond all possible peradventure, there has been added the following. Now observe:

Nor shall this act or any provision thereof be so construed as to deprive the courts of the several States or Territories through which either or any of the roads herein named may pass, of jurisdiction over controversies between said companies and the citizens of such States or Territories. Nor shall this act or any provision thereof be so construed as to extend the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States over such controversies.

Further—

That the power is hereby reserved to alter, amend, or repeal this act, as in the judgment of Congress the public good may from time to time require.

There is also inserted here a provision which was entirely satisfactory to all friends and foes of the bill, giving Congress the right to regulate in its discretion the rates for carrying passengers and freight on that road.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman read that provision?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will:

That the right to fix from time to time, as the public interest may require, the rates for carrying passengers and freight on the consolidated road is hereby reserved to Congress.

My friend will observe that as to interstate commerce, as to freights starting from the Pacific to the city of New Orleans, the General Government will claim the right to regulate that through freight. But within the territorial limits of the States, as to their own commerce, as to their own carriage of passengers and freight, the bill expressly reserves to the States and Territories the right to do that thing.

Mr. SPARKS. Is there not a conflict here? That power seems to be reserved or seems to be conferred by the bill on Congress.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. Now, if it belongs to the States on any of these roads does not this take it away from them and give it to Congress?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, sir. My friend will observe it does not. One relates to the interstate commerce and the other in express terms reserves the jurisdiction over the local rates and commerce to the States and Territories themselves.

Now, let me say that in all these matters I have consulted with the men on this floor who I knew had intelligent convictions touching the provisions of this bill in order that every objection might be removed which could suggest itself to their minds as being in any degree an infringement on the rights of any State or of any citizen of a State.

Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman does want to remove objections——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do.

Mr. SPARKS. I wish to suggest to him that I do not understand that clause. I believe it is the fourth section of the bill. I do not understand that clause relates exclusively to interstate commerce. I do understand it would confer the power upon Congress and take it away from the States. I so understand it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] is a good lawyer, and he knows that in construing the law you construe it with reference to the entire context, considering all the parts of the law together. Now, these two provisions can stand together, the Government regulating the through transcontinental freight bound to New Orleans and to the East or Europe, while the other provision of the bill expressly reserves to the States and Territories the right to regulate the rates for the local freight and passenger traffic. Hence it is clear that these two powers stand together, both being effective, the regulation of the interstate and transcontinental traffic being reserved to the General Government, leaving to the States and Territories all the power and authority they now have over local business.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand that. But I say the language of your bill, in my judgment, does not make it so. Your fourth section does not confine this power in Congress to through freight or interstate commerce.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It does fix and determine the jurisdiction of the States and of the General Government, and limits the authority of the latter in that behalf. And it does this by expressly reserving to the States and Territories control over local rates, while it confers or rather recognizes the authority of the United States over through traffic.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will wait to hear from those who have objections to the bill.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the gentleman is there any land grant in this bill?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, sir. On the contrary it expressly prohibits and prevents any possible revival of a land grant to any company, whether from a State or the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will my friend from Ohio allow me to ask a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is recognized as in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The fact of the gentleman from Ohio having taken so long a time only to remove so many objections to his bill, is a very suspicious circumstance. I propose to present another objection, which strikes at its very root. As I understand, ever since McCullough vs. Maryland was decided, in 4 Wheaton, it has never been doubted that Congress has no authority to make any charter except for United States governmental purposes, or to carry out some United States governmental power.

This bill is simply to grant conveniences to certain railroad companies for their purposes and for their benefit only. That is all the report in its favor claims. The Government has no interest in it whatever. It is for private persons, private stockholders who realize the importance of getting a charter here to make their transportation easier and cheaper.

Again, the bill covers three railroads of the State of Texas. That State has a constitution which declares:

> No railroad company organized under the laws of this State shall consolidate, by private or judicial sale or otherwise, with any railroad company organized under the laws of any other State or of the United States.

And in disregard of that the bill undertakes to consolidate its three with other railroads of other States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. This bill is the latest evolution from a broth that has been brewing here in committee and elsewhere for two years. In its present form it has never before been introduced in this House or considered by any committee. A large portion of it is in manuscript. It has never been printed, and none of us have ever had an opportunity to read or consider what is in it. It has appeared in several phases before the Committee on Pacific Railways, of which I have the honor to be a member, but never just in this form. It is immense in its scope, and needs long, careful, and the most painstaking investigation. Instead of that it is now, for the first time, brought before the House, and under the gag of the previous question, in the expiring hours of the session and the Congress.

I deliberately state to the House and the country that I believe it to be full of unseen results, pitfalls, and snares. No man can say here to-day what is in the bill or what progeny it will bring forth; no man dare say. The gentleman attempts to quiet apprehension by assuring the House that there is an all-saving "proviso" in the bill to the effect that nothing therein shall extend or confirm any land grant, &c., to any one of these roads, or to this consolidated concern; but he hurried over that other little innocent-looking "proviso" within his all-saving proviso. That inner proviso turns upon and swallows up its parent proviso and completely destroys it. It is to this effect: "Nor shall anything herein contained be construed to impair, annul, or in any manner affect any rights that any or either of these roads may have acquired by law or by virtue of any contract or otherwise." Here one of its cloven feet peeps out; and all of its feet are cloven.

What does that little innocent-looking inner proviso mean? Congress heretofore granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company about 15,000,000 acres of land in New Mexico and Arizona, with the right of way through the public lands of those Territories and a charter carrying all the usual franchises. That company failed to earn that grant of land by compliance with the terms and conditions of the law. But C. P. Huntington, the owner of the Southern Pacific Railroad of California, and in fact of all the California railroads, did build his road through those Territories within the time allowed to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and over the line of their right of way. He met the Texas Pacific east of El Paso and gave it battle at law and in all other possible ways to prevent its construction farther toward the Pacific coast. He wanted no competition there, no rival. In the mean time Jay Gould had possessed himself of the Texas Pacific, and now crossed swords with his great rival.

This forced a compromise, and it was made in November, 1881, as the junction of the Texas Pacific and Southern Pacific at Sierra Blanco had secured a continuous line from Marshall, Texas, to the Pacific before the time expired for the completion of the Texas Pacific; the land grant made to it was transferred to the Southern Pacific, though the Texas Pacific had not earned an acre of it. But the terms of that compromise can best be seen by the following article from the New York World of November 27, 1881, a paper belonging to Gould and speaking by authority:

> The agreement which has been in preparation for some days and was signed yesterday in regard to the settlement of the disputes between the Texas and Pacific and Southern Pacific Railroad Companies, and for an interchange of traffic and facilities, is very comprehensive and important. It is made between C. P. Huntington on one side, representing the Southern Pacific, and the Galveston, Harrisburgh, and San Antonio Roads and their connections eastward as far as New Orleans, and Jay Gould on the other side, representing the Texas and Pacific, including its New Orleans connection, the Iron Mountain, the International, Missouri, Kansas and Texas, and Missouri Pacific Companies. It provides that the tracks of the two systems shall be joined when they meet one hundred miles or thereabouts east of El Paso, and both parties are to use the portion between the junction and El Paso on equal terms, the Texas and Pacific reserving the right to run its own trains into El Paso on paying half cost of maintenance, taxes, and interest on half cost of construction, $10,000 per mile. Through business is to be done on a pro rata basis by both companies, and this stands all the way to San Diego, Los Angelos, and San Francisco, although the franchise of the Texas and Pacific was by its charter limited to San Diego; and rates are to be as low between competitive points as by any other transcontinental routes.
> No discrimination is to be made by the Gould roads for or against any of the termini on the Mississippi or Gulf, either as to rates, time, or otherwise, or among the railroad lines eastward thereof, but east-bound unconsigned business for points reached by them in Northern Texas, Arkansas, and Missouri, is to be delivered to them at El Paso or the Junction, as the case may be. The agreement does not prevent or interfere with the completion of the Huntington road through Texas via San Antonio and Houston, but provides that after its completion the New Orleans and seaboard business thereof shall be divided equally between the two lines and their connections, the Huntington road from Houston to New Orleans being accorded the privilege of using one hundred miles of the Texas and Pacific nearest to New Orleans, when necessary, on the above terms. The two systems of roads intersect and cross each other at Houston, and between this point and Galveston they use the Galveston road, running through trains if necessary. The through business to and from El Paso and the Pacific will be divided on the basis of one-third to the Texas and Pacific and its connections and two-thirds to the line via San Antonio, that being the shortest line.
> In consideration of the privileges of using jointly the road into El Paso, and of a perpetual privilege in Los Angeles and San Francisco as well as San Diego, equal to the most favored, the Texas and Pacific has relinquished its claim to the land grant, right of way, and franchises west of El Paso to the Southern Pacific companies. The Texas and Pacific engages not to extend its road west of El Paso so long as the covenants with the Southern Pacific are observed, and the Southern Pacific agrees not to parallel the Texas and Pacific east of El Paso or either of the roads mentioned in Texas, Arkansas, or Missouri. The usual provision is made for arbitration between any of the parties for the settlement of disputes, and the respective superintendents are to carry out the details of the arrangements as to interchange of traffic and the rates of compensation.
> The junction with the Texas and Pacific will take place about December 1, at Sierra Blanca Springs, in Western Texas. The lower lines across Texas will not be opened before June or July next. Through trains will commence running between New Orleans and El Paso and Saint Louis and El Paso about January 1. The distance from New Orleans by either line to El Paso is nearly 1,200 miles; to Memphis about the same. From Saint Louis to El Paso 150 miles further; from El Paso to San Francisco 1,285 miles.—New York World, November 27, 1881, page 3, column 1.

Now look at that map. [Pointing to a map suspended in front of the Clerk's desk.] Observe the red lines in California centering at San Francisco. They show the Huntington railroad system and monopoly in that State. It may be likened to a huge devil-fish, whose capacious maw has closed upon the great port and city of San Francisco, with all its vast wealth and commerce, and whose all-grasping tentacles reach north into Oregon, out over the ocean on the west, to Mexico and Texas on the south, and upon and over the Rocky Mountains on the east, hugging half a continent in its grasp and taxing its commerce at will, with none to compete with or make it afraid. No other railroad company has ever yet been able to reach California. Huntington is "monarch of all he surveys," and meets all others who approach his empire beyond his frontiers and gives them battle, vanquishes them, and imposes terms upon them. Gould is monarch of all that lies to the east of Huntington's empire.

Now, this treaty between these two great powers provides for the sale, transfer, and delivery to Huntington of all the land grant, right of way, and franchises of the Texas Pacific Railroad west of El Paso; that the Texas Pacific shall never extend its road west of El Paso; and these monarchs each engage and covenant never to parallel each other. In other words, there shall be no more competition. That is the contract, and these are the great rights that are not to be "impaired" by this bill. The purchased right to 15,000,000 of acres of unearned public land is not to be impaired. The peaceable enjoyment of the California monopoly that revels in its unrestrained power of taxation is not to be impaired. And to all this, and much more that is unseen, the Government is by the terms of this bill to give its sanction and approval. A continent, with all its lives and hopes and fortunes, is parceled out between these two haughty autocrats, and none of the imaginary rights, powers, and privileges that they may have acquired from each other are to be impaired by this bill.

What is the consequence to the people? Take as an illustration sugar, which to-day comes into California free of import duty. No sooner does the Government take off the duty of 70 per cent. than Huntington puts it on for himself, and to-day sugar costs the people of California as much as it costs in New York, where it pays a duty of 70 per cent.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Three cents a pound higher.

Mr. DUNN. Because of the monopoly which is not to be impaired by this bill.

Are the members of this House ready to vote for a measure which they have never read; to vote for a bill that has never been considered, with all these monstrosities and enormities in it? Who knows what they would sanction by voting for such a bill? They would sanction all the extraordinary powers which may have been derived from the States and Territories that granted their charters. This Government may be committed to a sanction of all of them by this measure.

Worse than that; it would be committed to the contract which prohibits competition by transcontinental roads across this continent. Is this House prepared to do that?

The gentleman says that the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] prepared an amendment to this bill. He did so by request, in order to make this bill less vicious than it is; and yet he will not give his sanction to it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. DUNN. I will yield whatever time I have left.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DUNN. I will ask consent to print with my remarks some documents which I have here.

There was no objection, and leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the value of railways and railway corporations as leading factors in the development of our material resources and of civilization. I am disposed to deal with them in a spirit of fairness. But, sir, I can not conceal from myself the fact that they represent one of the most interesting questions of the day, as the embodiment of corporate powers, in respect of their right and franchises and as public carriers, both toward the people and the Government. I feel that in a matter of such gravity as is here presented we should have time to scrutinize closely every feature of the measure before us. We have not had such an opportunity. While, therefore, expressing my profound respect for the gentlemen advocating this bill, and my regret to differ from them, I am constrained under the circumstances to cast my vote in the negative.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. CULBERSON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], understanding that I was opposed to this measure, submitted the bill to me and asked me to suggest some amendment to it that would tend to destroy a part of its alleged viciousness.

I suggested that the whole tenor and object of the bill was to create out of eight local State and Territorial corporations a national federal corporation; that the effect of the bill would be to take from the States their jurisdiction over the question of freights and fares over those companies, and to deprive the State courts of jurisdiction over controversies between the citizens of those States and Territories and these railroad corporations. I said to him that if he would put a clause in the bill which would prevent that, it might give to his bill more strength than it now had, but that I should still oppose it.

This measure, Mr. Speaker, is contrary to the policy of the State of Texas. There is a provision in the constitution of Texas which forbids the consolidation of any railroad chartered under the laws of that State with any railroad chartered by any other State or Territory or by Congress. Now, if you pass this bill you will override and nullify and destroy that provision of the constitution of the State of Texas, or provoke a serious conflict between the authority of the General Government and the State. By this bill it is proposed to take from that State jurisdiction over its local roads, which by the very terms of their charters are under special obligations to the State.

If Congress possesses the power to grant charters for the purpose of building railroads through the States without the consent of such States, which I deny, it certainly has no right to usurp the jurisdiction of a State over roads already built and in operation in the State, and over the operations of which the State has reserved the right of supervision and control. Texas now has the right to regulate the rate of freight and fares over the three roads within its borders which by the terms of this bill are to be merged in this grand national corporation. These companies are amenable to the citizens of that State in the courts of that State for wrongs done them or for rights withheld.

If this measure becomes a law, notwithstanding the safeguard proposed by me, and which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] has incorporated in the bill, the legal effect of its provisions will be to vest in Congress the supervision and control of these roads and extend the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States over controversies between the citizens of that State and these corporations. While the bill ostensibly provides against this result it is not improbable that the courts will hold that if Congress creates a federal "corporation citizen" that such citizen shall be entitled to all the rights of any other citizen, and that provisions abridging such rights are inoperative and void. Such is the tendency of decisions now in respect of the rights of corporations. Besides all this, if I had time I could demonstrate to the satisfaction of the House that the object of this bill, of which I do not believe the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] is cognizant, is to strengthen the claim of the Southern Pacific Company to the land grant of 18,000,000 acres of land heretofore granted the Texas and Pacific Railway Company, to which I do not believe the Southern Pacific Company has the shadow of a right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am not disposed to vote for a bill of this character submitted to the House in this way. The bill is not in print; it is submitted mainly in manuscript. It is a bill affecting, as I believe, in the future a land grant of millions of acres. I think the House should pause before it consents in this hasty manner to the consolidation of all these roads. I hope the motion to suspend the rules will not prevail.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think Congress, in view of the growing power of the great railroad corporations of the country, may well hesitate to consolidate these corporations now under local control into one powerful corporation, extending from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean. Congress has already organized enough of these corporations, with vast and perpetual powers, to list in the early future the strength of this Government.

The most fatal objection to this measure, beyond the consolidation of power, is that in spite of the limitation sought to be provided in the bill this corporation, with perpetual powers, will be placed beyond and above the jurisdiction of the States through which the consolidated road shall pass; for although there is a provision in the bill proposing to reserve to the States through which this consolidated road will pass the jurisdiction of questions arising between the corporation and citizens of the State, it is questionable whether that important result can be secured.

I ask the lawyers of this House whether the Federal Government can in this way, under the Constitution, surrender its judicial power to a State? The Supreme Court has held in effect that Congress can not surrender to the States the power of taxation of the Federal securities: and there have been other decisions of that court bearing upon this question which in my judgment renders it questionable whether the provision to which I refer will be of any effect whatever. If it should prove ineffectual, as I believe it will, these eight corporations now or soon to be under State control and subject to the jurisdiction of State tribunals and subordinate to public interests will be organized into one great corporation, extending in its power from the Mississippi to the Pacific, defying the legal courts and driving the citizen into remote Federal tribunals, which to the poor and the feeble is a denial of justice. Besides, sir, no other than a positive declaration of forfeiture can prevent this corporation, rendered powerful by this consolidation, from asserting a claim to the land grant of 18,000,000 acres to the Texas Pacific, which though long since forfeited is still, under the extraordinary decision of the Supreme Court, in force. I hope the House will not by passing this bill create this great corporate power to override States and still more imperil the monopoly of this great land grant of 18,000,000 acres.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, one of the prime factors in a fair discussion is to state the facts as they are. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] knows very well that this bill, when introduced last session, was considered by our committee and amendments made which are all in the direction of what he and his friend desired. [Mr. DUNN rose.] I can not yield; the gentleman would not let me interrupt him. These amendments, as appears by the report lying upon the table, are in furtherance of every suggestion made by gentlemen who have opposed the bill, the object of these amendments being to meet fully those objections.

One thing more: my friend stands before the House and says in a loud voice that the bill confirms all the rights, grants, and privileges conferred by the Territories upon these companies, and this, although he heard me read the clause in the bill which especially provides against the very thing that the gentleman mentions.

Mr. DUNN. I understood this to be a new bill and not the committee bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman stated that the tendency of this bill is to revive a land grant, when he knows that omniscience could not frame or use language which would or could more clearly and absolutely prohibit the revival of land grants, or any land grant.

Now, I like to see fair play and perfect candor in dealing with public questions. It is the easiest thing in the world to put up a man of straw, and then exhibit rare skill in knocking him down. I undertake to say that this bill confers no power upon these companies except to form a continuous through line from the Pacific to the Gulf, and this in furtherance of a project in support of which gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber have talked themselves hoarse—the project of forming a continuous through line, thereby cheapening the cost of administration and cheapening rates. Reserving to Congress the power which my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has at all times insisted that the General Government should have to regulate interstate commerce, the bill at the same time secures to the States fully and amply the power to regulate the rates within their own territory.

If my friend had stated the several propositions of the bill fairly, I would not complain; but he has not done so. It is proper that I should say that my friend from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] did not say he would support the bill; but his main objection (except that he questioned the wisdom of a consolidation at all, whatever its influence upon rates) was that it placed within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts controversies between this consolidated company and citizens of the several States or Territories.

Mr. CULBERSON. That was one objection.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly; and I asked my honorable friend to prepare an amendment which would meet that objection, a provision reserving to the several States all rights in this respect and abridging to that extent the Federal jurisdiction. That was done.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to ask my friend from Ohio whether this bill gives to these companies when consolidated any power in addition to that which they now separately hold under the action of the respective States and Territories?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It does not. On the contrary, it abridges and restricts the power of these companies; it denies them privileges which they have now.

There is not in this bill a suggestion of a revival of any grant or any contract; and I think the allusion which has been made to contracts between Jay Gould and Huntington, touching some great interest belonging to the Texas Pacific Railroad, is just as foreign from this bill as a verse selected at random from the Koran.

It is complained that the bill has not been printed with the amendments; but, sir, it has not been changed in any substantial particular since it was reported favorably to the House, except to abridge the rights of these companies and to enlarge the rights of all who may transact business with them. It reserves to the States the right to supervise these corporations within their limits and to fix rates, and it secures to the State courts the jurisdiction of all controversies between the company and the citizens of the State.

Mr. CULBERSON. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. Suppose we pass the House bill and the Senate strikes off these safeguards he suggests?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then I will oppose the bill.

Several MEMBERS. That is enough.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I stated to this House, when I introduced the bill, that I would see that its provisions were such as would fully protect the interests of the citizen of every State through which the road might pass. While accomplishing all that the company desires, I would not confer upon this company the power or authority to trench upon a single right of any State or any citizen. I shall adhere to that to the end.

Mr. BERRY. I only wish to say that if I had the opportunity I would enter the solemn protest of California against the passage of this bill. I do that now on the part of the State and her people.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The objections to the bill expressed in the resolutions of the California Legislature have been removed by an amendment that secures to that State and its citizens all they ask or claim.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 87, nays 128, not voting 76; as follows:

Mr. GUENTHER with Mr. DEUSTER.

Mr. TUCKER. If Mr. KENNA were here I should vote "no."

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote. I voted in the negative, but I had paired with my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON].

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the RECORD as a matter of course.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table House bill No. 1410 to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service, and agree to the amendments of the Senate thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendments will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "duty," in line 5, down to and including line 8, and insert:

"Shall have lost one hand or one foot or been totally or permanently disabled in the same, or otherwise so disabled as to render their incapacity to perform manual labor equivalent to the loss of a hand or a foot, shall receive a pension of $24 per month.

"That all persons now on the pension-rolls, and all persons hereafter granted a pension who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or shall have been otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor in so much as to require regular personal aid and attendance, shall receive a pension of $30 per month: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal section 4679 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or to change the rate of $18 per month therein mentioned to be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established, for which section 4695 makes no provision."

Amend the title by adding thereto the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. CURTIN. I apprehend that this bill needs no explanation, Mr. Speaker. The bill which passed the House gave $40 per month; the amendments of the Senate are sufficiently explicit. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7682) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within ten miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Missouri; and

A bill (H. R.7115) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Thames River, near New London, in the State of Connecticut, and declare it a post-route.

YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House, pursuant to law, the following concurrent resolution of the Senate, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 2, 1883.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 10,000 additional copies of the proceedings of the Yorktown centennial celebration be printed; of which 6,000 shall be for the use of the House and 4,000 for the use of the Senate.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

SORGHUM SUGAR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 2, 1883.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the National Academy of Sciences on the sorghum-sugar industry be printed, with such portions of the appendix and accompanying exhibits as may be selected by the Joint Committee on Public Printing; and that there be printed 6,500 copies, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, and 500 copies for the use of the said National Academy of Sciences.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF SESSINGHAUS VS. FROST.

Mr. CALKINS. I now call up the contested-election case of Sessinghaus against Frost, and ask the Clerk to read the accompanying resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Resolved, That R. Graham Frost was not elected as a Representative to the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States from the third Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to occupy a seat in this House as such.

2. Resolved, That Gustavus Sessinghaus was duly elected as a Representative from the third Congressional district of Missouri to the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States, and is entitled to his seat as such.

Mr. CLARDY. On that I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is: Will the House proceed to consider the contested-election case named.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 56, noes 60.

Mr. CALKINS. Tellers. There is no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands tellers.

Mr. WILLIS. It is too late to make the point of a quorum.

Mr. CALKINS. I think I made it in time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. CALKINS and Mr. CLARDY were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 70.

So the House decided to proceed with the consideration of the contested-election case.

Mr. CLARDY. I call for the yeas and nays on this vote.

The SPEAKER. It is too late; some time has elapsed since the announcement of the vote. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. CALKINS. I now yield the floor to my colleague on the committee [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker —

Mr. CALKINS. May I ask the other side how much time is desired for argument, that we may have some arrangement?

Mr. HATCH. We do not want any limit fixed.

Mr. CALKINS. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MOULTON]. How would an hour on each side do?

Mr. MOULTON. I am willing.

Mr. CALKINS. Then it is understood that an hour on each side is to be taken in the discussion, after which I will call the previous question.

Mr. MILLER. It appears from the returns of the election held in the third Congressional district of Missouri on the 2d day of November, 1880, that R. Graham Frost, the contestee in this case, received 9,487 votes; Gustavus Sessinghaus, the contestant, received 9,290 votes, and D. O. O'Connell received 266 votes.

Mr. Frost having a plurality of 197 votes on the face of the returns was awarded the certificate of election.

At the time of the above election the city of Saint Louis was partially divided into three Congressional districts. The third district was composed of one township in Saint Louis County and of the northern part of the city of Saint Louis.

The constitution of the State, adopted in 1875, in prescribing the qualifications of voters, reads as follows:

Every male citizen of the United States, and every male person of foreign birth who may have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, according to law, not less than one year nor more than five years before he offers to vote, who is over the age of 21 years, possessing the following qualifications, shall be entitled to vote at all elections of the people:

First. He shall have resided in the State one year immediately preceding the election at which he offers to vote.

Second. He shall have resided in the county, city, or town where he shall offer to vote at least sixty days immediately preceding the election.

By this same constitution, article 9, sections 20 et seq., power was given the citizens of Saint Louis to frame a charter not inconsistent with any provision of the said constitution for the government of that city

Article 8, section 5, and article 9, section 7, of said constitution are as follows, namely:

ART. 8, SEC. 5. The General Assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all voters in cities and counties having a population of more than 100,000 inhabitants, and may provide for such registration in cities having a population exceeding 25,000 inhabitants and not exceeding 100,000, but not otherwise.

ART. 9, SEC. 7. The General Assembly shall provide by general laws for the organization and classification of cities and towns. The number of such classes shall not exceed four, and the power of each class shall be defined by general laws, so that all such municipal corporations of the same class shall possess the same powers and be subject to the same restrictions. The General Assembly shall also make provision by general law whereby any city, town, or village existing by virtue of any special or local law may elect to become subject to and be governed by the general laws relating to such corporations.

In pursuance of article 9, section 20 et seq., the city of Saint Louis in 1876 adopted a scheme and charter, one part of said charter providing for registration. This scheme and charter was never ratified subsequently by the Legislature of Missouri, but all subsequent elections in Saint Louis were held under this charter and its provisions until 1878. In 1878 the municipal assembly of Saint Louis passed a city ordinance regulating elections and providing for a complete system of registration in said city, by which and under which a large number of names were stricken from the registration list—enough, the Committee on Elections find, to govern and decide this case. If they are counted, the contestant is elected; if they are not counted, the contestee should retain his seat. Section 11 of said ordinance, as amended by the city assembly on August 20, 1878, is as follows:

SEC. 11. The mayor shall appoint a board of revision, consisting of one reputable citizen from each ward in the city who shall possess the qualifications of a member of the house of delegates, whose duty it shall be to meet with the recorder of voters, at his office, twenty days before each general, State, or municipal election, for the purpose of examining the registration, and making and noting corrections therein as may be rendered necessary by their knowledge of errors committed, or by competent testimony heard before the board; a majority of said board shall be necessary to do business, and the mayor shall be ex officio president thereof. They shall strike from the registration, by a majority vote, names of persons who have removed from the election district for which they registered, or who have died, and shall note the fact opposite the name of any person charged with having registered in a wrong name, or who for any reason is not entitled to registration under the provisions of this ordinance, which person shall be challenged by the judges of election when presenting himself to vote, and rejected unless he satisfy said judges that he was entitled to register, and said board shall also place on said books the names of such persons as in their judgment have been improperly rejected by the recorder of voters. They shall sit from day to day, not exceeding ten days, until they have completed their labors, and their proceedings shall be printed daily in the paper doing the city printing. They shall each be allowed the sum of $3 per day for their services.

It is true that the State Legislature of Missouri in 1877 enacted a general election law, three sections of which are as follows:

SEC. 4380. All cities and towns in this State containing 100,000 inhabitants or more shall be cities of the first class.

SEC. 4385. Any city or town in this State existing by virtue of the present general law, or by any local or special law, may elect to become a city of the class to which its population would entitle it under the provisions of this article by passing an ordinance or proposition and submitting the same to the legal voters of such city or town at an election to be held for that purpose, not less than twenty nor more than thirty days after the passage of such ordinance or proposition; and if a majority of such voters, voting at such election, shall ratify such ordinance or proposition, the mayor or chief officer of such city or town shall issue his proclamation declaring the result of such election, and thereafter such city or town shall, by virtue of such vote, be incorporated under the provisions of the general law provided for the government of the class to which such city belongs, which class shall be determined by the last census taken, whether State or national.

SEC. 4389. Any city of the first class in this State may become a body-corporate, under the provisions of this article, in the manner provided by law, &c.

Then follow the provisions for governing cities of the first class and for registration and elections therein.

It is proper to state, however, that it has never been claimed by the contestee that Saint Louis ever elected to accept the provisions of this law or elected to become a city of the first class, or in any way designated its wish, desire, or intention to accept these provisions. It became a body-corporate by virtue of its scheme and charter adopted in 1876, and has continued so to act to this day.

Neither was it claimed that the provisions of the act of the Legislature of 1877 governed or controlled the election of 1880; nor were these provisions of the act of 1877, respecting registration, of any force or effect in said city. The last city ordinance was adopted subsequently to any act of the General Assembly. It contains forty and odd sections and prescribed an entire scheme regulating elections and providing for registration in the city, and was the only law by which registration was had in that city.

These views are supported by Mr. Bell, the city counselor, a man who is admitted to be of eminent legal ability. His views will be found on page 1814 of the record.

The Constitution of the United States, article 1, is as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may, at any time, by law make or alter such regulations except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The question raised, therefore, in this case is: Was the registration law of Saint Louis, under which the election of 1880 was held, legally enacted; and were its provisions applicable to the election of a Representative in Congress? Could the people of Missouri by a constitutional provision delegate to the city of Saint Louis the authority to pass a registration law applicable to that city only? The Constitution of the United States having expressly declared that the manner of holding elections for Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof, could the State Legislature or the constitution of Missouri delegate its authority to any other power, to any other body?

That the election was held under the provisions of the charter was not denied. That the registration law by which a large number of voters were deprived of their right to exercise their franchise was enacted in 1878 was not disputed. That enough legal voters were thus stricken off to change the result is not in doubt. The committee believe that so much of the ordinance as made registration a prerequisite to voting was illegal, was unconstitutional, had no binding power, and that all legal votes rejected by virtue of this ordinance should be counted.

That there may be no mistake in regard to the exact situation of affairs, I shall run over in a half dozen sentences the exact situation, and shall leave it to any gentleman upon that side of the House who sees fit to examine the question whether or not the city of Saint Louis could by a city ordinance provide that registration should be a prerequisite to voting, when there was no law upon the statute-book providing such a regulation and applicable to Saint Louis.

The constitution provides that residence in the State for a given time and residence in the district for a given time entitles a citizen to vote, and not a word about registration, nothing except residence. The city of Saint Louis, under the constitutional provision authorizing it to enact a scheme and charter, passed a registry law making registration a prerequisite for voting.

It is true that that scheme and charter has been published in the laws of the State as compiled by a joint committee; but it was compiled by that committee without any authority of law. They placed the charter there not by direction of the Legislature, but because they thought it ought to go there; and the registration law, as passed by the city of Saint Louis under the scheme and charter, was never ratified by any legislative body other than by the municipal legislature of the city of Saint Louis.

But we are told that the State in 1877 passed a registration law, and that it passed one applicable to cities of the first class, and cities of 100,000 inhabitants were cities of the first class, and we are asked to take notice of the fact because Saint Louis has more than 100,000 inhabitants therefore she falls within the provisions of the general law.

But it is to be marked that the same enactment of the Legislature provides that a city must, in order to become a city of the first class, accept the provisions of the law providing for cities of the first class. Saint Louis is not a body corporate by virtue of that enactment, but it holds its charter by virtue of the constitutional provision permitting it to adopt the scheme and charter under which it has existed since 1876.

And as I remarked a moment ago, Mr. Bell, a man of eminent legal ability, who had been city counselor for two years prior to 1880, testified under oath that the election in the city in 1880 was held, not under any law of the State, but by virtue of the charter and of the amended ordinances passed in July and August, 1878.

Let me ask any Democrat, is it possible that a city of any class can pass a registration law making registration a prerequisite of voting? When the Constitution of the United States says that the Legislature of a State shall prescribe the manner of holding elections for Representatives, and when the Constitution of the United States delegated that power to the Legislatures, did it mean that the Legislature or the people of any State might redelegate that power to any city, to any town, or to any municipality?

I think there is no man upon the other side of the House who will go the length of saying that any city, by virtue of any State constitution or any legislative enactment can adopt a system of registration imposing upon voters regulations other than those imposed upon them by the constitution of their State or by the Legislature thereof.

The committee believe that the registry clause was illegal, was unconstitutional, had no binding effect, and that all legal votes rejected by virtue of the provisions of this clause should be counted.

But we hold that these names thus stricken off should be counted, even if the law was held to be constitutional and binding, for the further reason: At the first meeting of the board of revision it adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That when a member of the board of revision presents a list of persons found on the list furnished him by the recorder of voters with dead, removed, not found, vacant house, duplicate, not a citizen, or any other word or phrase to indicate that the person is not entitled to vote, his name being on the books of the recorder, the board of revision shall take immediate action on such names and instruct the recorder of voters to erase such names from the registered list of voters in his office.

By this resolution that board delegated its exclusive power to each of its members, and in advance agreed that whatsoever names any of its members presented to be stricken off should be stricken off without any knowledge or testimony. The recorder of voters, who was ex officio clerk of the board, swears that the business was done as follows, namely:

The clerk called ward 1. When the reviser from that ward sent up a list of names, which was not even read, the clerk merely stated the number of names on the list, when, by virtue of the above resolution and without further action by the board, they were stricken off, no other member of the board but he from the first ward ever hearing the names read or knowing what names had been stricken off. The same action was had when ward 2 was called, and so on through the whole twenty-eight wards (record, page 131). This was also proved by nearly all the members of the board called by the contestee as witnesses in his behalf. (See record, pages 1792, 1824, 1825, and 1844). It is undisputed. The board sat from one to two hours each of the eight days, and in that time struck off over 12,000 names from a registration of about 60,000.

The fact also appears that the reviser for the fourth ward of this district, that ward in which most of the above disfranchised voters lived, left his entire work of revision to irresponsible deputies, whose work was sent in, and the names reported by them were stricken from the list of voters in the manner above described.

The testimony of one Michael Burke shows that he was one of these unsworn deputies, and reveals the frauds by which Republicans were intentionally stricken off the lists. He also swears—and his evidence is wholly uncontradicted—that there was an understanding and agreement between all these deputies that they should act together in practicing these frauds. (See record, page 71 and following.)

It will be borne in mind that the law not only does not recognize these deputies, but specifically provides that this work of determining the qualifications of voters should be done by these revisers, sitting as a court and acting judicially on "actual knowledge" or "competent testimony, and by a majority vote."

The testimony shows that one hundred and fifty-one of the men stricken off were legal and qualified voters, many of them being old residents, and that they did all in their power to entitle them to vote. The committee hold that their votes should be counted by the House. The said voters had done everything the law required of them; they had exhausted their remedy; they had registered and gone to the polls and offered to vote, but their names having been stricken off they were not allowed to vote.

The principle is well established, and was adopted by this committee in the case of Bisbee vs. Finley (present Congress), that where judges of election improperly refuse a qualified voter the right to vote, his vote will be counted here. We submit the reason of that rule will apply as well to this case, where the voter has done everything in his power and the primary wrongful act was committed by the registration officers.

McCrary on Elections, sections 10, 11, and 383, fully sustains this view in the following language:

A case may occur where a portion of the legal voters have, without their fault and in spite of due diligence on their part, been denied the privilege of registration. In such a case, if the voter was otherwise qualified and is clearly shown to have performed all the acts required of him by the law, and to have been denied registration by the wrongful act of the registering officer, it would seem a very unjust thing to deny him the right to vote. In elections for State officers, however, under a constitution or statute which imperatively requires registration as a qualification for voting, it may be that the voter's only remedy would be found in an action against the registration officer for damages. (See, also, sections 11 and 883.)

It will be observed that Judge McCrary, after stating the general doctrine, says that—

In elections for State officers, however, under a constitution or statute which imperatively requires registration as a qualification for voting, it may be that the voter's only remedy would be found in an action against the registration officer.

This refers exclusively to State officers, while the office for which it is intended to count these votes is not a State office—that the United States Constitution has given this body full control over the question as to who are its members; and in the State of Missouri neither the constitution nor any statute in force in Saint Louis makes registration an imperative prerequisite or qualification. (See constitution 1875, heretofore cited.)

The Constitution of the United States having declared that the Legislatures of the several States shall provide for choosing members of Congress, and the constitution of Missouri having authorized the General Assembly, and that alone, to enact a registration law, we hold that so much of the ordinance as made registration prerequisite to voting has no binding force or effect, and is invalid.

We therefore rely upon the language of McCrary, section 11, that—

In the absence of any positive law making registration imperative as a qualification for voting, it is a very plain proposition that the wrongful refusal of a registering officer to register a legal voter who has complied with the law and applies for registration ought not to disfranchise such voter. The offer to register in such a case is equivalent to registration. This would be held to be the law upon the well-settled principle that the offer to perform an act which depends for its performance upon the action of another person, who wrongfully refuses to act, is equivalent to its performance.

Furthermore these votes (151) thus illegally stricken off should be counted upon another ground, following a well-established principle of law.

The proof in this case shows that the board of revision by whom the above voters were disfranchised acted at the outset and throughout their entire proceedings in absolute violation of not only the spirit but the letter of the law which gave them authority. The ordinance explicitly says that this board shall meet—

For the purpose of examining the registration and making and noting corrections therein as may be rendered necessary by either their knowledge of errors committed or by competent testimony heard before the board, a majority of said board shall be necessary to do business.

By a resolution adopted at the beginning (heretofore cited) they declared they would neither hear testimony nor act upon the knowledge of the board. Thereafter names of voters were stricken off the list without even being read to the board, and merely upon the recommendation of an individual member who, in many cases, as the proof shows, adopted without question, knowledge, or examination the reports of his unsworn and unauthorized deputies.

When it is borne in mind that no actual notice was given to the voter thus stricken from the list, and that even if he had such notice there existed no remedy or law by which he could be reinstated, the necessity of holding this board to a strict execution of its powers will be apparent.

It will be observed that the ordinance conferred upon the board of revision the power to examine and revise the registration list prepared by the recorder of voters and making and noting corrections therein, to correct his errors or omissions, but the law nowhere empowered them to correct or revise their own.

It is a well-settled doctrine of law that as to courts not of record and other bodies having judicial functions no presumptions arise as to jurisdiction, or the regularity of their proceedings, and that any judgment rendered by such court or body not in strict conformity with the law is void.

This board of revision, as shown by the record, acted from the beginning to the end in utter disregard and violation of the law.

This ordinance gives the board power to strike from the registry lists, by a majority vote and either on the knowledge of the board officially or by competent testimony heard before the board, the names of those only "who have removed from the election district for which they registered or who have died." The resolution divested the board of all its functions; it gave each member individually the right to not only strike off the dead and removed, but it gave him the right to strike off those not found; it gave him the right to write "vacant house" against a man's name, and that man was disfranchised; it gave him the right to strike off duplicate names; it gave him the right to strike off all who were in his judgment not citizens; and, lastly, it gave him the right to strike off any one whom he thought for any reason ought not to vote—and to do all this without any testimony, without any knowledge as to whether it was right, and without any notice to him whose name he struck off. And then the board beforehand sanctioned all this; told each reviser to do whatever he would; it, as a board, would stamp it as the act of the board.

It will be seen by this ordinance that this board, besides striking off the names of those who had removed out of the precinct where they lived when they registered, and the names of those who had died, were required "to note the fact opposite the name of any person charged with having registered in a wrong name, or who for any reason is not entitled to registration under the provisions of this ordinance, which person shall be challenged by the judges of election when presenting himself to vote, and rejected unless he satisfy said judges that he was entitled to register." This board was precluded from striking off the names of these persons. Its only duty was to make note against them, and then the judges of election were to judicially examine into the qualifications of these voters. So the board not only violated and defied the law, but by its acts it prevented the judges of election from examining and determining the questions which the ordinance explicitly referred to them. If this board had been a court of general jurisdiction, even then its acts would have been absolutely void because of its failure to proceed in accordance with law.

We therefore hold that the action of this board in striking off the names of the above voters was illegal and absolutely void and of the same effect as if done by any unauthorized party.

Again, the proof shows that the action of the board of revision from its inception operated as a fraud upon all who were improperly stricken off by them, and that there was actual fraud on the part of some of those to whom were improperly delegated the duties and functions of the whole board, which fraud resulted in striking off and disfranchisement of these voters.

This opportunity for fraud is evidenced by the illegal resolution adopted, the manner in which the board did its work, and by the employment of unauthorized and unsworn deputies.

The actual fraud is shown in the uncontradicted testimony of Michael Burke, one of the above deputies in the fourth ward of this Congressional district, who unblushingly tells how he struck off of the list Republican voters; of his understanding that he was hired for that purpose, and agreement with other deputies to do the same work in their wards; in the fact that of the 12,000 names stricken off—the contestee after keeping in a conspicuous place in the leading Democratic paper of Saint Louis an advertisement for all Democrats who had been wrongfully stricken from the registration list to appear and give their testimony—only obtained three who were qualified voters; in the fact that in numerous instances, as shown by the testimony, some members of a family were stricken off said list and members of the same family left on, and in each of such instances the Republicans were stricken off and the Democrats left on; in the fact that five months after the election herein, as is shown by the testimony, another election was held in Saint Louis, before which a presumably fair registration was had, and at which every Republican candidate was elected by a very large majority, whereas at this election the Democratic candidates for President and governor each received a majority.

We therefore hold that, as fraud vitiates all things, the frauds above enumerated vitiated the action of said board of revisers.

For each and all these reasons, and because it seems just and right that where a legally-qualified voter has done all that the law requires of him in order to vote, but he has been deprived of the privilege by the default, neglect, or fraud of any officer of election, his vote should be counted, and because it seems to us that these voters were, in the eyes of the law, on the list of voters furnished the judges of election (having been stricken off by illegality and fraud), we hold that these votes should now be counted for contestant.

In addition the committee held that 35 other votes should be counted. If valid they had complied with the registration law of said city, having previous to the election registered their names before the proper officer; that on the day of election they offered their ballots at their respective and proper polling precincts in said city, all said ballots being for contestant; that their names were, each and every one of them, found on the poll-list at the precincts where they offered to vote, but for various trivial and insignificant reasons, such as, for instance, the misspelling of names or the incorrectness of numbers, and, in some instances, for no reasons whatever, the judges refused to receive their votes, and they were not received or counted.

The committee also counted 8 votes as follows: That they had never registered and voted in the city of Saint Louis; that on the day of election they were registered at the polls of their respective and proper precincts by the registering officer duly appointed for that purpose; that they offered their ballots for contestant for Representative in Congress from the third Congressional district of Missouri, but the judges refused to receive and count their votes, and they never have been counted.

The committee also counted 86 votes, as follows:

The Legislature of Missouri in 1877 adopted the following act, which both parties to this contest state was in force in Saint Louis in 1880, and so conceded by all parties:

An act to provide for the exercise of the right of voting by persons who have failed to register.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, as follows:

SECTION 1. In all State, county, and municipal elections hereafter held in any city of this State having a population of 100,000 inhabitants or more, no person shall be deprived of the right of voting at such election by reason of having failed to register: Provided, That, in all cities where registration is required by law, the party offering to vote, but who from any cause has failed to register before he offers to vote, shall be, on the day of such election, registered by a special registrar of election, appointed by the judges of election for that purpose at each precinct, as a qualified voter, in a book to be kept for that purpose; and the ballot of such voter shall be received and counted at such election; and such registrar shall return to the register of voters of such city the list of such voters so registered within ten days after such election, provided the said registrars shall be sworn as provided for the recorder of voters and the books shall contain the written or printed oath as required in the regular registration books.

Approved March 30, 1877.

The evidence shows that eighty-six citizens of Saint Louis were at the date of the election legal and qualified voters of the State of Missouri and city of Saint Louis and said third Congressional district; that they never had registered or voted in the city of Saint Louis; that on the day of election they offered at their respective and proper polliin g precincts, and before the officers appointed to register voters and receive and count the votes, to register under the above law and vote for the contestant, but the officers whose duty it was failed and refused to register them or to receive and count their ballots, and their ballots were not received and counted by the judges of election, and they never have been counted.

There were also 23 ballots cast for contestants, but not counted, having this caption, namely, "Chronicle Selected Ticket," a ticket made up of names of persons on both the Republican and Democratic regular tickets. The election officers threw these 23 votes out on the ground that the ticket was designed to deceive the voter, and in doing so claim to have acted in accordance and within the letter and spirit of the following law in force in Missouri:

Each ballot may bear a plain written or printed caption thereon, composed of not more than three words, expressing its political character, but on all such ballots the said caption or headlines, shall not in any manner be designed to mislead the voter as to the name or names thereunder. Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this act shall be considered fraudulent, and the same shall not be counted.

The committee held that the words used in the caption were in no way calculated to mislead or deceive a voter, and accordingly counted the same.

Evidence on pages 952 and 897 of the record, which is uncontradicted, will be found, showing that 10 votes cast for contestant were thrown out and not counted by the judges, merely upon the ground that the contestant's given name was not on the ballots. The proof shows that no other man by the name of Sessinghaus was a candidate at that election in that district for any office.

Hence we follow the unbroken chain of authorities as cited by McCrary, and hold that these 10 votes should be counted for contestant.

At one precinct in the said district, it appears from the evidence (page 612 of record) there were cast by legally qualified voters fifteen ballots having the caption "Greenback Labor Ticket," but with the nominee of that party for Congress scratched out in pencil and the name of contestant inserted, none of which ballots were counted by the judges of election.

The evidence is wholly uncontradicted. We think the above votes should be counted for contestant, the intention of the voters being plain and the ballots being legal.

In precinct 148 the testimony shows that the board organized under the law to foot up returns made by the judges of election counted for contestant 141 and contestee 58, that appearing to be the figures on the poll-book of that precinct.

The undisputed positive testimony of a majority of the officers of election at that precinct is that contestant received 149 votes and contestee 52, and that those were the figures certified to and returned by the judges. The contestee called no witnesses to disprove this testimony, and if it had been false it could easily have been shown. We therefore conclude either that a mistake was made or the figures were intentionally changed after leaving the hands of the judges, and that in either event it should be corrected. This adds 8 votes to contestant and takes 6 from contestee. (See record, pages 1748, 674-'5, 823, and 668-'9.)

There was also voted at that election a ticket headed "Hancock Independent Ticket," upon which the name of contestee was printed but scratched out, and contestant's name inserted in pencil. This ticket was thrown out by the judges. (See pages 779 and 791.) It seems plain that it should be counted for contestant.

At precinct number 74 a ballot was cast (as shown by the evidence, page 985) which was made up of the tickets of the two parties, cut in the middle and pasted together, thus making a complete ticket with only one name thereon for each office. It had on it the name of contestant for Congress. This ballot was thrown out and not counted by the judges. We think it should be counted for him. The voter evidently knew what he was about, and it was his privilege to vote for whom he pleased.

As to precinct No. 39, the contestant urged persistently, and introduced much testimony to support his position, that this precinct should be thrown out; but we are constrained to differ with him. We find that the evidence of intimidation hardly comes up to the standard provided by the precedents cited by McCrary, and hence we conclude that it must stand. We find, however, that twenty men (all colored) who were qualified and legal voters, and duly registered, and who had done all that the law required of them, who were entitled to vote at that poll, went there and offered to vote, but were refused for various trivial reasons, many of them being frightened by abuse and driven from the poll.

It is admitted by contestee, and the proof is positive and uncontradicted, that a minor, Louis Hain, cast his vote for contestee, and that it was so counted. We therefore take one vote from contestee. (See record, pages 1232 and 1754.)

In conclusion, therefore, the committee found, and so reported, that these 358 votes should be added to those reported for contestant and 7 deducted from those returned for contestee, which leaves the net result as follows:

Votes as returned for contestant		9,290
Add		358
Total		9,648
Votes as returned for contestee	9,487
Deduct	7
Total		9,480
Majority for contestant		168

In arriving at this conclusion the committee gave the benefit of every doubt to contestee and arrived at the conclusion that the contestant should be seated.

I would inquire how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty-five minutes.

Mr. MILLER. I will reserve the remainder of my time till later.

Mr. MOULTON. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY].

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, before attempting a reply to the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER], I will, if the House will indulge me, very briefly state the facts in the case now pending before us, as I understand them.

At an election held in the third Congressional district of Missouri in November, 1880, R. Graham Frost, the contestee, received for the office of Congressman 9,487 votes, Gustavus Sessinghaus, the contestant, received 9,290 votes, and Daniel O'Connell obtained 266 votes, Mr. Frost having on the face of the returns a plurality of 197 votes. Within the time prescribed by statute Mr. Sessinghaus gave notice to Mr. Frost of his intention to contest the latter's right to a seat in this Congress, and he put his contest on the ground that certain qualified voters of the district, who had been duly registered and who offered to vote for him, were deprived by the judges of election of their franchise for the alleged reason that their names had been stricken from the registry lists by the board of revisers of the city of Saint Louis, within whose limits the third district is located, and on the further ground that certain other persons entitled to register and vote applied for registration at their respective voting precincts with the intention of voting for Mr. Sessinghaus, and were refused registration and not allowed to vote. There were other grounds stated in the notice of contest, but as they have been practically abandoned by the contestant, it is not necessary to state or to discuss them.

The contestee answered, putting in issue these allegations, after which testimony was taken by the parties in support of their respective right to a seat in this House, and these three volumes [holding them up], constituting a monument to their industry if not to their genius, are the result of their labors.

According to an assertion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER], uttered to-day on this floor, the right of the contestant in this case to a seat in this body is dependent upon the invalidity of the election laws of the city of Saint Louis. In other words, it is conceded by him that if in 1880 there was a valid registration law in the city of Saint Louis, the contestee has an unquestionable right to his seat. If I can get the attention of the members of this House, I believe myself able to satisfy them that there was at that time a law requiring registration in the city of Saint Louis as a prerequisite to voting—a law as valid as any law which can be found upon the statute-books of the State of Missouri or of any other State in the Union; and if I am able to do this, I shall confidently expect the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his associates on the Committee on Elections to unite with us in defeating the recommendation of the committee, and in thus confirming Mr. Frost's title to an office to which he was fairly and honestly elected.

The report presented by the majority of the Committee on Elections in this case is so replete with misstatements of fact and misrepresentations of the law that I am sure I shall be unable in the time allotted to me by the House to call attention to all of its most glaring deceptions. In some instances, I regret to say, the committee has actually misquoted the statutes of Missouri, and in the attempt to arrive at a conclusion in this case it is evident that it has been grossly misled, as in one part of its report it says that the revisers of election in the city of Saint Louis were imposed upon by the agents employed by them.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] says that the city of Saint Louis had no right to enact an ordinance prescribing registration as a prerequisite of voting. Independently of any provision in the State constitution authorizing it, I agree with him. But that is a question we need not discuss here, because the State law in regard to registration for cities of the first class applied to the city of Saint Louis.

In 1875 there was a new constitution framed by a convention of the State of Missouri and adopted by its people. That constitution among other things provided that within a certain time after its adoption the qualified voters of the city and of the county of Saint Louis should elect thirteen freeholders, at an election to be called by the council of the city and the county court of the county of Saint Louis, upon whom should devolve the duty of preparing a scheme for the enlargement and definition of the boundaries of the city, the reorganization of the government of the county, and the adjustment of the relations of the city thus enlarged and the residue of Saint Louis County, and of drafting for the city of Saint Louis a charter which should be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of Missouri.

And it further provided that such scheme should be submitted to the people of the whole county of Saint Louis, and that the proposed charter should equally be submitted to the qualified voters of the city so enlarged; and upon the ratification by the people of this scheme and charter, the said scheme should become the organic law of said city and county, while the charter should exclusively become the organic law of said city.

The election thus provided for was held in conformity to the constitution, and the scheme and charter were ratified. About this there is no dispute.

The charter, adopted as it was by the qualified voters of the city of Saint Louis, provided a system of registration, which the committee informs us was of no binding force, but was invalid. Under this charter the election of 1878 took place, as well as the election of 1880 at which Mr. Frost and Mr. Sessinghaus were opposing candidates.

I can not understand why the majority of the Committee on Elections has labored in its report to show that the charter of the city of Saint Louis has been improperly and without authority given a place in the revised statutes of Missouri, for its validity is certainly not dependent upon its being found in the statutes. If the constitution of the State of Missouri delegated to the framers of the charter of the city of Saint Louis the power to enact registration laws, and if such laws are in harmony with the State constitution and the State laws, then without regard to their presence in or absence from the statutes they are valid.

Mr. RANNEY. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether the provision for the revision of the Missouri statutes did not declare expressly that the revisers should only codify, not change the law.

Mr. CLARDY. The revision of the Missouri statutes referred to by the gentleman was made by a committee appointed by the Legislature in 1879, in pursuance of a provision in the constitution of the State requiring the Legislature to revise, digest, and promulgate all laws in force in the State within five years after its adoption. The committee was not authorized to make or amend laws, and in no instance did it do either, as it has been intimated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But the Legislature at its session in 1879 amended section 23 of a former act so as to read as follows:

All elections in the city of Saint Louis shall be conducted, in all respects, as provided by the laws now in force regulating elections in said city.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman state when that law was passed?

Mr. CLARDY. The law was amended in 1879; or, anyhow, it is in the revised statutes of 1879.

Mr. MILLER. Amended by whom?

Mr. CLARDY. By the Legislature of Missouri.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is utterly mistaken. I have examined the statutes of 1879, and I defy any man to find that amendment. It was put there by the revisers under their assumed authority to amend the law.

Mr. CLARDY. The revisers assumed no such authority. The amendment was adopted by the Legislature.

Mr. RANNEY. I have not yet heard the answer of the gentleman from Missouri to my question whether there was not in the law authorizing the revision an express provision that it should not change the law?

Mr. CLARDY. There was such a provision. I do not claim that the legislative committee alluded to by the gentleman had the right to make new laws.

Mr. MILLER. That is just what it did.

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman is mistaken. The election of 1878 was held under the new charter of the city of Saint Louis and the Legislature, in order that the election laws of the city might not be questioned, adopted the amendment which I have above quoted. Will any gentleman now say that we have no laws in the city of Saint Louis for the government of elections?

The validity of the charter has been affirmed by all the courts of our State whenever questions have arisen requiring them to pass upon its provisions. I have here a case decided by the supreme court, the opinion in which is delivered by Judge Norton, whose distinguished service in this House and still more distinguished service on the supreme bench has made his name familiar to the people of the whole country, affirming that under the constitution of the State of Missouri the city of Saint Louis had the right to embrace in its charter such provisions of law as do not conflict with the fundamental law and the statutes of the State.

The Supreme Court of the United States would hold such a decision obligatory upon itself. The decisions of the tribunal of a State relative to its constitution or laws, unless they contravene some provision of the Constitution of the United States or some act of Congress, are considered by the Supreme Court as absolutely binding; and yet with a Republican Committee on Elections such a decision has not even the weight of persuasive authority.

Mr. RANNEY. Does that decision refer to elections at all?

Mr. CLARDY. I do not say, nor do I wish to be understood as saying, that there was any election case decided by the supreme court of Missouri in which the charter was passed upon. I could say, however, that recently there has been an election case passed upon by that court in which a member of this House was interested, and none of the judges called into question the election law of the city of Saint Louis.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me now direct the attention of the Committee on Elections to another principle of law bearing on this contest.

It is an old maxim that a statute can only be repealed by a statute. This maxim has, however, been qualified, and it is also held that a statute can be repealed by non-user. But it is claimed in this case that the provisions of the charter relating to registration have been enforced, and most rigorously so, and hence the doctrine of non-user is not invoked. And while it is held in this country that a statute may be repealed by being omitted from authorized revisions, yet if the assertion be true that the Legislature of Missouri did not intend that the charter of the city of Saint Louis should be placed in the revised statutes of the State, I am unable to understand how its absence from them can affect its validity. But the truth is that the committee appointed by the General Assembly had the express authority of the Legislature for collecting and publishing in the appendix to the revised statutes of Missouri all laws specially applicable to the city of Saint Louis, and in this appendix may be found the charter of that city and its system of registration. It has been stated, however, that this charter has never had the sanction of the Missouri Legislature. In answer to that assertion I can only appeal to the constitution of Missouri, which, as I have before indicated, authorized the city of Saint Louis to adopt a charter containing the fundamental laws necessary for its own government, and such other laws as may be in harmony with the constitution and laws of the State, and I can not but insist that no legislative adoption was necessary to the validity of the charter beyond the action taken by the Legislature in directing the committee of revision to collate and publish the same in the appendix to the statutes, and, indeed, it was not even necessary that this publication should be made.

But I desire besides to direct the attention of the House to a provision of the constitution of Missouri (and I wish that the members of the Committee on Elections would give me their attention) which declares that the Legislature shall make provision for the registration of all the voters of cities having more than 100,000 inhabitants. That provision is referred to in the report of the Committee on Elections, and in this report it is argued that the law which the Legislature enacted in pursuance of the mandate of the constitution of Missouri can not possibly have anything to do with this case. It is evident, however, that if the charter of the city of Saint Louis was invalid, the law of the State of Missouri, enacted in pursuance of a constitutional provision, was then in force, and upon examination it will be found that that law was complied with in every particular by the city of Saint Louis in the election of 1880.

The constitution of Missouri provides that the General Assembly shall enact a registration law for all cities having over 100,000 inhabitants. Of course the Legislature can not be coerced into the enactment of such a registration law, but the framers of the constitution indicated the wish of the people to have the voters in cities containing 100,000 or more inhabitants provided with the safeguard of a registration law. When the Legislature met in 1877, after the adoption of this constitution, what did it do? Under the provision of the constitution directing it to classify cities into four classes, it provided that all cities of over 100,000 inhabitants should be denominated cities of the first class, and that those of a less number of inhabitants should respectively belong to the second, third, or fourth class. But the Committee on Elections has been misled by a subsequent section of the above-mentioned statute which declares that any city or town of the State of Missouri existing by virtue of the general law, or by any local or special law, may elect to become a city of the class to which its population entitles it by submitting a charter to the approval of the qualified voters, and which further provides that in the case of the adoption of such charter the mayor should issue a proclamation declaring such city or town a city of the class to which its population entitles it.

And what was done in the case of the city of Saint Louis? The members of the Committee on Elections entirely overlooked the statutes. What was done? This charter was submitted to the qualified voters of the city of Saint Louis in pursuance of an express constitutional provision and was adopted by the city of Saint Louis, and it contains the identical provision which this statute in another section declares shall be in the ordinance which is to be submitted for ratification under this statute to the voters of cities when they elect to become cities of a particular class.

Mr. MILLER. What is the date?

Mr. CLARDY. Eighteen hundred and seventy-seven.

Mr. MOULTON. Before this election.

Mr. MILLER. What year?

Mr. CLARDY. In 1877 this law was passed.
Mr. MILLER. When was this charter adopted?
Mr. CLARDY. In 1876.
Mr. MILLER. One year before the law was passed.
Mr. CLARDY. But if it is found that there has been a literal compliance with the law, as it appears upon the statute-books, can it be said that, because there was upon the statute-books before that time a law which was of no binding force and validity this law is not to be regarded? But I have shown, and I think to the satisfaction of any lawyer, that there has been a literal compliance with the statutes of Missouri, to say nothing about this charter, in the election in which the contestee and the contestant appeared as candidates. Regarding the validity of the charter, I hold that it matters little what we think about the powers of a municipality in the city of Saint Louis if we find a constitutional provision delegating such powers. It matters little whether the charter was valid or invalid, as there was a law on the statute-books relative to registration, a law which the Committee on Elections undertakes to skim over, and which was of binding force and validity.
Mr. BUCKNER. Let me ask my colleague a question.
Mr. CLARDY. Certainly.
Mr. BUCKNER. I ask my colleague whether the election of last year in the city of Saint Louis was not conducted under the same law?
Mr. CLARDY. No; the law has been changed. But let me call the attention of the members of the majority of the Committee on Elections to another of their inconsistencies in this case. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] has stated to the House, and in its report the majority of the Committee on Elections expresses this view, that there was no law upon the statute-books which required the registration of voters in the city of Saint Louis. And yet the Legislature of the State of Missouri, just anterior to this contested election, in the spring, I believe, of 1880, enacted what was known as the O'Neill act. Under the registration law as it existed up to that time voters were required to register previous to the election and at the office of the recorder of voters. They could not register at the polls. By this registration law enacted in 1880 it was provided, however, that persons who had failed to register could avail themselves of that privilege on election day at the polls; and the majority of the Committee on Elections, in order to get in some voters, undertakes in one case to avail itself of that law. It admits that that law applies to the city of Saint Louis and to all cities where registration is required. The city of Saint Louis must have possessed a valid registration law, else how could the O'Neill act, being an amendatory act, apply to it? Here is an enabling act. Here is a remedial statute. Here is a statute enacted to remedy defects in an existing law. But the Committee on Elections says that there is no existing law. Well, if there be no existing law, to what law does the O'Neill act apply?

That, Mr. Speaker, is one of the inconsistencies of the gentleman who framed the report of the majority of the committee. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] says that the registration law under which the Congressional election of 1880 was held is unconstitutional. I do not know whether he means the law which is to be found on the statute-books of the State of Missouri, or whether he refers to what is known as the scheme and charter.
Mr. MILLER. I referred to the registration act passed in 1878.
Mr. CLARDY. Passed by the Legislature of the State of Missouri, do you mean?
Mr. MILLER. By the city of Saint Louis.
Mr. CLARDY. The act the gentleman talks about is a copy of the registration law which is to be found upon the statute-books of Missouri. The city of Saint Louis at that time enacted an ordinance in harmony with this statute.

The majority of the Committee on Elections in its report further quotes the registration ordinance of the city of Saint Louis, the eleventh section of which it invokes in this case in order to exclude one hundred and fifty-five voters. It quotes that statute and dwells upon its incongruity with the law. But it misquotes the statute.
Mr. MILLER. What statute?
Mr. CLARDY. It misquotes the eleventh section of the registration ordinance of the city of Saint Louis. It recites here that the board of revisers must meet twenty days before the day of election, and it says that the law requires thirty days and that the charter also requires thirty days, but that the ordinance calls only for twenty days and it holds it invalid on that account. The registration ordinance offered in evidence on page 1684 is in the precise language of the law as it exists upon the statute-books, and is in conformity with the charter of the city of Saint Louis. I know that the gentlemen of the committee did not intentionally misquote this ordinance; but it is misquoted nevertheless, and it is adduced as one of the grounds why they are to turn out a man from this House who was honestly elected by the people and to put in here a man who was never elected. Here we have an ordinance, changed not intentionally by the committee, I am sure, because I find this change in the brief of counsel for contestant, and I presume, of course, that the committee relied upon that brief; but it was nevertheless a mistake, and a mistake against the interests of the contestee in this case.

But, Mr. Speaker, the majority of the committee has not only been mistaken as to the law governing elections in the city of Saint Louis, but mistaken as well in regard to the general election law of this country.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.
Mr. HOOKER. I will take the floor, and yield my time to the gentleman from Missouri.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not now be recognized, as debate has been limited.
Mr. MOULTON. I will yield five minutes more of my time to the gentleman.
Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, the committee in its report quotes from McCrary on Elections this sentence:

> A case may occur where a portion of the legal voters have, without their fault and in spite of due diligence on their part, been denied the privilege of registration. In such a case, if the voter was otherwise qualified and is clearly shown to have performed all the acts required of him by the law, and to have been denied registration by the wrongful act of the registering officer, it would seem a very unjust thing to deny him the right to vote. In elections for State officers, however, under a constitution or statute which imperatively requires registration as a qualification for voting, it may be that the voter's only remedy would be found in an action against the registration officer for damages.

The Committee on Elections admits the validity of this doctrine, but it says that it does not apply to the election of a Representative in Congress.

When Mr. McCrary laid down the above proposition he supposed, as is shown by the first edition of his work on the American law of elections, that the statute enacted in May, 1870, regulating Congressional elections would be held by the courts of this country to be applicable to the voters of all the States in this Union. But he also affirms that if Congress does not pass enactments for the regulation of Congressional elections, they are governed by the laws prevailing in the different States relative to elections.

The Supreme Court decided in the case of the United States vs. Cruikshank, and in the case of the United States vs. Reese, that the third section of that statute, quoted in the brief of counsel, and upon which the argument turned—the identical argument made here by the Committee on Elections—the Supreme Court said in those two cases that that statute was unconstitutional. The court said that it should at least provide for nothing further than what was contemplated by the fifteenth amendment. And yet the Committee on Elections insists upon the validity of that statute in this case, and talks about the prerequisites of the voter and the right of Congress to interfere in elections and to control them.

In the absence of any Congressional statute relative to the election of members of Congress, the exercise of the franchise is dependent upon State regulation; and if there were such a statute containing provisions other than those contained in the fifteenth amendment I think the clear intimations in the case of Ex parte Seebold are that it would be held unconstitutional. The right to vote in this country is derived from laws. The right to vote is not a natural right; it is not a right which inheres in and attaches to the person; but it is a purely political right, and it owes its existence to positive law.

The States of this Union confer the elective franchise upon the citizens and under a constitutional provision prescribe the qualifications of voters as well for electors for President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress as for the officers necessary to their own government. Whatever privilege a sovereignty may grant, it can prescribe the terms upon which it shall vest in the grantee.

The Supreme Court says, in the case to which I have referred, that except as limited by the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution the right of the States to prescribe the qualifications of voters is absolute. But, Mr. Speaker, who ever heard before of registration being a qualification? Mr. McCrary, in his work on the law of elections, expressly declares that it is not a qualification.
Mr. MILLER. We do not claim that it is.
Mr. CLARDY. The majority of the Committee on Elections talks about registration as a qualification for voting, and argues that as such it added to the qualifications of voters as they are prescribed by the constitution of Missouri, and that hence it was unconstitutional. There is no proposition of election law better settled than that registration is not a qualification, but a regulation.
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. MILLER. Now, let me take the floor in my own right while I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] a question, in order that we may have a clear understanding about this case. We have quoted in the majority report section 11 of the registration law, and state that it was passed by a city ordinance of Saint Louis in 1878. Do I understand the gentleman to deny that?
Mr. CLARDY. Did you say 1878?
Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.
Mr. CLARDY. It was passed prior to that year.
Mr. MILLER. And does not that law require that the board of revisers shall meet twenty days before the election?
Mr. CLARDY. No, sir.
Mr. MILLER. I refer you to pages 1701 and 1702 of the testimony.
Mr. CLARDY. Very well.
Mr. MILLER. And they show that the ordinance was amended——
Mr. CLARDY. What is the page?
Mr. MILLER. Pages 1701 and 1702. They show that the ordinance was amended on the 20th day of August, 1878, and that it provided that the revisers should meet twenty days before election, while the scheme and charter and the act of 1877 which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] has spoken of provide that they shall meet thirty days before the election. So that there is a marked difference between the ordinance of 1878 and the statute of 1877 and the city ordinance of 1876. Now, does the gentleman say that ordinance was not passed?

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is quoting a law which was passed subsequent to this election. I say, however, that in the city of Saint Louis, at the November election of 1880, under a provision of the law of the State the revisers met thirty days before the election.

Mr. MILLER. Now, the evidence shows that they met twenty days before. And the law is the same.

Mr. CLARDY. The law will be found on page 1684 of the record in this case. It was introduced by the counsel for Mr. Sessinghaus. It says that the board of revisers should meet thirty days before the election, and it is introduced in evidence by the contestant as the law governing that election; and I never heard it disputed in the State of Missouri.

Mr. MILLER. Do you deny that the ordinance printed on pages 1701 and 1702 is the city ordinance?

Mr. CLARDY. Of course I do. It is only an amendatory section.

Mr. MILLER. Do you deny that it was adopted in 1878?

Mr. CLARDY. I do.

Mr. MILLER. Did it not fix the time at twenty days?

Mr. CLARDY. It did.

Mr. MILLER. Then the law was twenty days.

Mr. CLARDY. No; the law was thirty days. I speak of the law which was in force at the election when Sessinghaus and Frost were the candidates.

Mr. MILLER. I speak of that also. Now, in addition to that I call the attention of the gentleman to the evidence of Mr. Bell, the city solicitor of Saint Louis, on page 1814.

Mr. CLARDY. I have read that evidence. At the time when Mr. Bell was testifying, an amendatory ordinance had been passed. This ordinance conformed with a State statute on the subject of registration, and both were passed after this election had been held.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; the charter provided thirty days; but on page 1702 of this record there is an amendment to that. What do you do about that?

Mr. CLARDY. The law which the gentleman from Pennsylvania quotes was passed after the election of 1880.

Mr. MILLER. I will retain the balance of my time. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty minutes.

Mr. CLARDY. The House can judge of the magnitude of this case from the fact that the entire ninety days provided by law for the taking of testimony were consumed by both the contestant and the contestee. Three thousand pages of testimony have been printed for the perusal of the Committee on Elections and of the House, and in this testimony the contestant's counsel attempt in vain to substantiate the claim of their client to a seat in this House. In vain do we look for evidence which would be deemed sufficient by a judicial tribunal for the unseating of the contestee. No facts are brought forth which could invalidate the election of Mr. Frost, and in order that that end may be accomplished the election laws of the city of Saint Louis are now to be declared unconstitutional. The majority of this House is ever ready to cover its disregard of justice and right by constitutional quibbles and petty subterfuges.

Within the space of an hour the contestant will be awarded on the floor of this House a seat to which he was never elected and to which he has signally failed to establish a claim. The emoluments attached to a seat here will, however, thus come within his reach, and while he may probably in no manner be able to catch the Speaker's eye during the expiring hours of the Forty-seventh Congress, he will on the contrary, and oddly enough, succeed in obtaining the eye of the Sergeant-at-Arms with regard to the question of compensation for services which he has never had an opportunity nor right to render. And succeeding in this latter undertaking, he will no doubt be content. But the party to whose votes he will owe his seat will by its arbitrary decision of this case establish a further instance of its rabid partisanship and of its reckless abuse of power and utter disregard of justice, and thus it will fitly close in this House a supremacy which has been replete with profligacy and recklessness.

Mr. FROST. I do not desire—or rather I would prefer not to address the House at this time. I trust that before this case comes to its final adjudication the House will be willing to listen to me for a few moments. I will not trespass very far upon its patience; but I hope I will not be condemned without having had some brief opportunity for a hearing.

As my colleague [Mr. CLARDY] remarks, this case is one of great magnitude, as shown by the 3,000 pages of recorded testimony and the three or four points of law upon which we have not yet touched. That would indicate that we should have some reasonable time for its discussion. I ask for very little time, in order that the case may be presented fairly before members of this House; but I do not wish to be heard now.

Mr. MOULTON. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MOULTON. Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible to discuss even a single phase of this question in the short time for this debate limited by order of the House. And I look upon an argument or an attempt at an argument under the circumstances that surround us as almost if not quite futile. The temper of the House and the hurry of the business in these closing days disqualify members for impartial and calm consideration of questions of this kind.

I desire to call the attention of gentlemen for a few moments to a phase of the question that has been discussed. It is claimed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] that the only question they propose to consider in this case is in regard to 155 votes. Here are 155 voters who, as is claimed by the contestant, were entitled to vote and have been improperly deprived of their right by reason of having been improperly stricken from the registration list. He admitted that if these 155 votes are not counted for contestant then he fails in his contest.

The returns of the election give Mr. Frost 197 votes majority, and he has the certificate of election and the seat.

These 197 votes must be overcome by legitimate proof.

The burden of proof is upon the contestant. He claims that he is entitled to the seat; and he is to make out his case by a clear preponderance of testimony. Nobody is to be deprived of his seat upon mere guesses or surmises. If a man is to be turned out of this House, the evidence ought to be clear and conclusive, such as to satisfy the mind of any reasonable man.

Let us look at this question. The main point, the gravamen of the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER,] is simply that the city of Saint Louis made a registration law whereby it was provided that before a man should be entitled to vote his name should appear upon the registration list; and the conclusion of the gentleman is that Saint Louis possessed no power, no authority to prescribe that condition to a man's vote. Now, I want to call your attention to this controlling and significant fact. Here in this case before the Committee on Elections was the ablest attorney in the city of Saint Louis, and an ex-member of Congress, appearing for Mr. Sessinghaus. This case was argued at extraordinary length before the committee; every question in the case was evolved; and Mr. Pollard, who argued the case on behalf of the contestant before the Committee on Elections, never raised that question; never pretended for a moment that the city of Saint Louis had not the right to pass this registration law. Elections for members of Congress and State officers for years have been held under that same scheme and charter, yet no lawyer, high or low, ever questioned the validity of that registration law. I repeat that the counsel of the contestant never made the point. It came out in this way: It was casually suggested by one of the members of the committee during the very last stages of the hearing that perhaps Saint Louis had not the right to pass a registration law. That suggestion was at once seized upon, and is now made the turning point in this case.

The contestant had failed in every other part of his case, but like a drowning man he seized upon this straw to save his case.

I want to state another fact. Almost every provision in the charter of Saint Louis, under the constitution of 1875, has been before the highest tribunal, the supreme court of the State of Missouri, and in more than twenty-five cases, involving the liberty of the citizen, right to office, personal property, and almost every other right, the validity of that charter has been sustained.

The authority to frame this "scheme and charter" is derived not from the Legislature, but from the constitution of the State of Missouri, adopted by the people of that State in the year 1875. (See Constitution of Missouri, Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1879, section 20, Article IX.

SAINT LOUIS.

SEC. 20. The city of Saint Louis may extend its limits * * * and frame a charter for the city thus enlarged. * * * Such scheme shall become the organic law of the county and city, and such charter the organic law of the city.

Thirteen freeholders were to frame this charter, and the only limitation made by the constitution as to what provisions it should contain is to be found in the following section:

ART. IX, SEC. 23: "Such charters and amendments shall always be in harmony with, and subject to, the constitution and laws of Missouri." * * *

If the registration law above quoted and embraced in the charter thus authorized is in harmony with the constitution and laws of Missouri, wherein can such law be unconstitutional?

If there is any want of harmony it can be readily pointed out. It is certainly not in conflict with any registration law passed by the General Assembly of Missouri. Compare the sections of the charter above quoted with sections 4391, 4393, 4399, 4401 of the general registration law passed by the General Assembly of Missouri for all cities of over 100,000 inhabitants, and the most perfect harmony is apparent. In fact, they are almost identical in phraseology.

The city of Saint Louis also adopted an ordinance which contains the same provisions embraced in the charter.

See page 1681 and following of the Record.

The ordinance, the charter, and the law passed by the General Assembly are substantially copies of each other.

If, then, there is no want of harmony, what other reason can be urged to declare the law invalid?

We find it on page 6 of the majority report of the sub-committee:

"True it is the ordinance of Saint Louis provides that a voter 'shall not vote elsewhere than in the district where his name is registered and whereof he is registered as a resident;' but it is to be remembered that this ordinance was never passed, accepted, or adopted by the Legislature of Missouri, and that the constitution of 1875, which authorized the city of Saint Louis to adopt a charter, also, in another provision, authorized the General Assembly to pass a law for the registration of voters in cities having over 100,000 inhabitants. The power under the constitution to pass such a law was vested exclusively in the General Assembly. An attempt on the part of any other body to make such a law, ordinance, or charter, is, to say the least, of very questionable authority."

The section referred to is as follows:

"ART. VIII, SEC. 5. The General Assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all voters in cities and counties having a population of more than 100,000 inhabitants, and may provide for such registration in cities having a population exceeding 25,000 inhabitants, and not exceeding 100,000, but not otherwise."

If you will observe, the constitution, in thus providing for "cities and counties," does not include or refer to the city of Saint Louis. Saint Louis is made an exception from all other cities; and in Article IX, which refers to "counties, cities, and towns," special sections are adopted for the "city of Saint Louis."

In the case of the City of Saint Louis vs. Sternberg, 69 Missouri Reports, on page 297, Judge Norton says:

"It will be observed that in Article IX of the constitution, under the head of 'counties, cities, and towns,' Saint Louis is singled out from all other cities and towns in the State, and sections 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 of the article contain provisions relating exclusively to it."

The fact that the General Assembly was ordered to frame a registration law for "cities and counties" of over 100,000 inhabitants was clearly not intended as a restriction of the full power given to Saint Louis to also frame a registration law, provided it was not in conflict with State legislation.

In the same case Judge Norton continues: "The general purpose that the city might have the power to enlarge its limits and separate itself in a governmental point of view from the county, and have the right as a municipality to govern itself, provided its government should be in subordination to and consistent with the constitution and laws of the State of Missouri, is manifested throughout the above sections." * * *

"It is clear, we think, from these sections, that it was the intention of the framers of the constitution that the city of Saint Louis might adopt as its organic law a charter containing any and all the provisions then in its charter, and such other provisions as would not be inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the State."

In re Charles Dunn, volume 9, Missouri Appeal Reports, page 255, the court says:

"An ordinance passed under authority of such a charter must of course be equally in harmony with the constitution and laws of the State; otherwise it will, in so far as it fails of such harmony, be invalid.

"By the word harmony in this connection is not to be understood an exact coincidence in all possible points of comparison.

"Its meaning is clearly that no regulation established by the charter, nor any made by its authority, shall do violence either to the declared laws or to the policy or manifest governmental purposes of the State, as shown in her constitution and statutory enactments."

As has been observed, instead of there being any want of harmony, any inconsistency, any violence to statutory enactments, the charter ordinance and statutory enactments are in perfect accord.

Besides the registration law embraced in the charter of Saint Louis is by special enactment of the General Assembly adopted and recognized as the law governing elections in that city.

Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1879, volume 11, page 1082.

"SEC. 5503. Elections in Saint Louis—conducted how. All elections in the city of Saint Louis shall be conducted in all respects as provided by the laws now in force regulating elections in said city."

What does the General Assembly mean by "the laws now in force governing elections in said city," and why does the statute single out Saint Louis, and as to it make such a special provision?

Saint Louis had a registration law of its own; that was in its charter; other cities did not have registration laws of their own, and hence it was necessary to single out Saint Louis.

If there is any further doubt that the registration laws of Saint Louis is what is meant by the "laws now in force regulating elections in said city," it is but necessary to turn to the Revised Statutes of Missouri, where the charter of the city of Saint Louis is published with the State laws.

Revised Statutes of Missouri, volume 11, page 1575.

This publication was incorporated in the revised statutes of the State of Missouri not by chance, but by direction of the General Assembly.

Revised statutes, vol. 1, title "Laws," section 3158.

There can be no question that when they use the language, "laws now in force," in section 5504, and "except as otherwise provided by law," in section 5563, the registration laws of Saint Louis as contained in the charter and printed with the revised laws of the State, were referred to as existing laws.

This being the case, instead of there being want of harmony, there is not only perfect harmony, but a legislative adoption of these very laws in question.

We must, therefore, conclude that these registration laws are valid.

My friend from Pennsylvania says, at the time of the election in 1880, there was no law prescribing registration, and the city of Saint Louis prescribed registration which was a qualification not required by the constitution. To this point I reply that the charter of Saint Louis requiring registration of a voter is not considered in a constitutional sense as adding any qualification at all. It has been decided not only in Pennsylvania, but in every State of the Union, that the right to vote is not a natural right, but is a right which depends upon law. Mr. McCrary and all the other writers on this subject say that requiring registration on the part of the voter is nothing more than adopting a rule or regulation. That is the decision in all the States.

McCrary, in his Law of Elections:

"The right of suffrage is not a natural right, nor is it an absolute unqualified personal right. It is a right derived in this country from constitutions and statutes. It is regulated by the States, and their power to fix qualifications of voters is limited only by the provisions of the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution, which forbids any distinction on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

See also sec. 3, page 9.

And again:

"Subject to the limitation contained in the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the power to fix the qualifications of voters is vested in the States. Each State fixes for itself these qualifications, and the United States adopts the State law upon the subject as the rule in Federal elections."

Sec. 1, chap. 1, page 7.

It was strongly urged in his behalf that the law requiring registration was in violation of the constitution of the State of Missouri, because it was adding an additional qualification.

In Capen vs. Foster, 12 Pick, 485, and Brigalley's Election Cases, 51, and McCrary, sec. 7, page 11, in discussing the power to provide for the orderly exercise of the right of suffrage, and the power to enact registry laws, and to prohibit those not registered from voting, it is decided that such laws do not add to qualifications of voters; they are simply rules regulating voters.

And McCrary says, sec. 7, page 11: "It is now generally admitted that those laws do not add to the constitutional qualifications of voters, and are therefore not invalid."

It was also urged that the law requiring registration was not "imperative" or positive, within the meaning of the rule laid down in McCrary.

The language of the law could not be more positive. It reads thus:

"But shall not vote elsewhere than in the district where his name is registered and whereof he is registered as a resident."

Revised Statutes, vol. 11, page 1576.

Now, here is the constitution of Missouri conferring on cities of the first class having over one hundred thousand inhabitants the right to govern themselves in everything not in conflict with the constitution of the State. I ask gentlemen upon the other side to show me how the requirement of registration is in contravention of that constitution, when registration is not regarded as a qualification at all, any more than the requirement in the charter that a man shall reside in his precinct 10 or 20 days before the election is a qualification. It is a rule or regulation, simply, and not a qualification.

These 155 men lived in the city of Saint Louis, and had no right to vote there, except by complying with the provision of law regulating that matter. It is admitted that they did not do so. Here was a board of registration, whose duty was to examine the registration lists and correct them, and their action was judicial, and these 155 names were struck off. There was no fraud in this respect. The men never used the means provided by law for replacing their names upon the list. Therefore they had no right to vote. This alone should end this case.

Mr. BRUMM. Does the gentleman contend that a city council can by its ordinance regulate the mode of election of State officers as against a State law conflicting with such ordinance?

Mr. MOULTON. Nobody claims any such thing, or has said any such thing. My proposition is that the constitution of Missouri granted to the city of Saint Louis ample and complete power to require registration. That is the point I make. The city derived its full power from the constitution of the State.

Mr. BRUMM. Does it grant power to pass an ordinance in conflict with a State law with regard to the election of State officers? Does it go that far?

Mr. MOULTON. It does not. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the charter and law of the State are in absolute harmony. So much for that. Now it remains alone for the Elections Committee of this House to say to the able judges and lawyers of the State of Missouri that they did not know their own law. This charter is published in the authorized edition of the laws of Missouri. It is recognized as law, absolutely and completely as any statute of the Legislature, not having its power from an act of the Legislature, but from the very highest source, the Constitution itself. It never has been questioned till now.

I desire now to call the attention of this House to another great fact developed in this case. The only value that a deposition has as evidence is its integrity. If its integrity is destroyed no court of justice will regard it as evidence. Now look at the testimony and facts concerning this case. Here are 3,000 pages of testimony taken by the notary public, and it has been shown by the affidavits of parties, and not denied, that after it was transcribed the whole of that evidence went into the hands of Sessinghaus's attorney. The notary public swears, in his affidavit appended here to the minority report, (and he also appeared before the committee,) that the papers showed on their return to him that various and sundry changes had been made in names, dates, numbers, and the like. The gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. DAVIS,] a member of the committee, pointed out to the committee and made a memorandum of over one hundred changes in the handwriting of Sessinghaus's attorney. My friend from Ohio [Mr. RICHEY] on the committee, also showed, on a partial examination, forty or fifty changes in the spelling of names and places and in dates.

Now, this whole case turned on names, dates, numbers, and streets. Did such a man live in such a house at such a time in such a street and such a number. I wish to direct your attention particularly to this fact. The notary public was called and requested to bring his original stenographic notes, so as to compare the evidence. That notary public swore that, notwithstanding he knew this case was being considered by the House and undetermined, and that the integrity of the depositions were in question, nevertheless he absolutely destroyed every particle of the original stenographic notes. His notes were a part of that testimony, and yet every single particle of it he destroyed.

Mr. HOOKER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. MOULTON. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. Do I understand that the testimony taken in this case was in the custody of the representative of the contestant after it was taken?

Mr. MOULTON. Yes; every word of it was in his custody.

Mr. HOOKER. And altered by him?

Mr. MOULTON. Yes; altered in hundreds of places in the handwriting of Sessinghaus's attorney. When the notary public was called before the committee he was asked to bring his original memorandum. He came before the committee and swore that he had burned the whole of it. This evidence appears in our report. He burned it so that we could not examine it, and determine what was true and what was false. Yet upon that testimony you are called upon to turn out Mr. Frost, who has 197 majority, by reason, as you say, that these 155 were improperly deprived of their votes. How do you know? The integrity of this evidence has been disputed, and no court, not even a justice of the peace, would, in the trial of the smallest and most trivial case in the world, allow it to come in. Here this notary public swears that the opposite party had the record in his possession and made these changes in it, and, furthermore, that he himself destroyed his original memorandum, and yet you are called upon to vote Mr. Frost out and Mr. Sessinghaus in for the purpose of giving the latter $10,000 salary and $1,000 mileage.

Now, one word as to the law bearing on the question of tampering with the deposition or evidence.

It is quite clear that the law is scrupulously particular in demanding that the spotless integrity of depositions shall be preserved. It is sensitive to the highest degree in considering a complaint such as we find here. Even in mere matters of form it demands the most exact compliance with such formalities as the various statutes may require.

We cite a few cases in which motions to suppress depositions were sustained where mere formal rules were disobeyed:

"2 Washington Circuit Court Report, p. 356: 'A commission which had been executed and returned was set aside because it had been opened by one of the officers of the government before it came into the hands of the clerk.' (United States vs. Price's Administrator.)

"Shankwiker vs. A. Reading (4 McLean's Reports, p. 240): 'The law requires the deposition taken under act of Congress to be retained by the officer until he deliver the same into court, or shall, together with a certificate of the reasons for taking it,' &c.

"Read vs. Thompson (8 Cranch, 70—J. Story): 'Independently of all other grounds, the court are of the opinion that the fact of the depositions not having been opened in court is a fatal objection.'"

1 Brown's Admiralty Reports, p. 66: "Though a deposition be taken under a stipulation, waiving all objections as to the form and manner of taking, it must still be returned to court in all respects as required by law."

The charge of the motion, however, goes not only to form but to substance, and claims that the worst of bad faith was exhibited by the attorney of the party in whose interest the depositions were taken. The court in Beverly vs. Burke (14 Georgia, 70), says:

"In deciding as we do, we establish no new rule. We hold that the case presented to us falls within a rule already well settled, and that rule simply is that there must be no circumstances of unfair advantage obtained by one party over the other in having testimony taken by depositions. * * * Many written cases may be found in which it has been held that such depositions should always be taken in good faith. I content myself with referring to but one. In Bean vs. Quinby, 5 New Hampshire, 98, the court says: 'The invariable rule by which this court is governed in the admission of depositions is not to receive any which have not been taken fairly and with the utmost good faith.'"

The law does not permit depositions to be drawn by any attorney interested in a cause. The reason of the rule is well stated in these cases following a special statute:

"Hurst & Co. vs. Larpim (21 Iowa, p. 484, Lowe, C. J.). Appeal from the order of the court suppressing certain depositions for the reason that they had been written by the counsel for the party in whose favor they were to be read as testimony, instead of its being done by the commissioner designated in the notice. The objection was well made and properly sustained, and that, too, without the slightest imputation on the counsel who officiated as scribe. It was simply a legal impropriety which it was competent for the court to correct and enforce by rule, if need be. The notary is supposed to stand at all times indifferent to the parties, whilst the lawyer, having made himself a partisan, is sufficient to feel a bias in favor of his client. Should he act as scrivener in taking and in after reading it over himself to the witness for correction or approval, contrary, as we think, to the spirit of the statute, however honestly done, it would nevertheless subject him to criticism and suspicion. To relieve him of this left-handed compliment, we hold the court did not err in suppressing depositions."

Again in Allen vs. Rand (5 Cond., 522):

"The law will not trust an agent to draw up a deposition for his principal, as by the insertion of a word, the meaning of which is not correctly understood, or by the omission of a fact that ought to be inscribed, the testimony thus garbled and discolored will be false and deceptive. Nor is there a possible argument in favor of such a proceeding.

"The statute, even when strictly construed, is sufficiently lax, when ex parte depositions are taken at least, not unfrequently to admit of the poisoning of justice in the very foundations, for if the evidence is untrue or partial the result can never be conformable to right. * * * As the witness ought to be disinterested, so must the evidence be impartial, comprising the whole truth, as well as nothing but the truth, and that never can be rationally expected when a deposition is drawn up by an attorney or agent. * * *

"It is much preferable that, in particular instances, the party should even be deprived of testimony than a principle leading to a widespread mischief should be adopted. It is true that an agent may draw up a deposition impartially, and there is no reason to doubt that the young lady in the case acted with the most delicate integrity. But the statute was made in contravention of wrong and intends not in any case to place confidence where it may be abused."

Such are reasons given for the rule in cases where, in the language of the court, "there is no reason to doubt that the young lady in the case acted with the most delicate integrity."

But this case is broader, and shows that the same disposition and the same delicacy which the court attributes to the party in that case, in which the depositions were suppressed, cannot, under the affidavit of the notary in this case, be given to the attorney who wrote the "marginal suggestions."

We think that the charter of Saint Louis authorized a registration law such as was shown to exist.

That the 155 names stricken from the registration list were in accordance with law, and that the integrity of the deposition in this case has been wholly destroyed, and that Frost is entitled to his seat.

Mr. FROST. I rise for the purpose of asking, by unanimous consent, that the House will hear me for a few minutes before it shall proceed to vote on this case.

Mr. MILLER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. FROST. Half an hour will be sufficient.

Mr. MILLER. If he wants half an hour I prefer he should go on now.

Mr. FROST. For myself, Mr. Speaker, as it is now near the time for taking a recess, I should prefer to be heard when we meet again this evening.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman has the floor, and let him go on now.

Mr. FROST. If it is not objectionable, I should much prefer to begin my remarks after the recess.

Mr. PAGE. I hope that will be granted, because it is now so near the hour when we are to take the recess the gentleman could not possibly conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HITT in the chair). If there be no objection, it will be ordered accordingly.

Mr. MILLER. I have reserved my time, and do not wish to proceed until I have heard from the other side.

Mr. PAGE. Let us take a recess now.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think that gentlemen will object to allowing the gentleman whose seat is contested the modest length of time that he asks, thirty minutes, to explain his own case, and to give it to him at the time when he can have some assurance that the gentlemen who are to vote upon and decide his case will be present. There is hardly anybody here now; and there is a principle of fairness underlying this matter which should not be lost sight of.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to the gentleman proceeding, as the House has given him consent, if the time is occupied now.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. I think it has been usual in all contested-election cases, after the debate has been closed both pro and con on the part of the Committee on Elections making the report to the House, to then allow the contestant and the contestee to be heard after the conclusion of the debate. Therefore, I think the request of my friend Mr. FROST, from Missouri, is not at all unusual or out of order, but on the contrary it is in perfect conformity with the precedents, all of which establish the principle that he has a right to be heard before his case is decided in this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That, of course, can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOOKER. But it is governed by precedents, let me say to the Speaker with all deference, rather than by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But it has been done by consent in each case.

Mr. HOOKER. The precedents are all in the direction that I have cited.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, of course the gentleman can occupy the time now.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I want to inquire if by unanimous consent we can not take a recess now, and give Mr. FROST the time that he asks after the recess shall have expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can be done now, if that is the desire of the House.

Mr. PEIRCE. I object.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I ask unanimous consent that we take a recess now until half past 7 o'clock.

Mr. BROWNE. Before that is done I desire to make an observation. By a special order of the House, Friday evenings have been set apart for the exclusive consideration of such business as is reported from the Committee on Pensions of the House. I am willing that this arrangement shall be made, if by unanimous consent the House may meet tonight for business generally.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Oh, no.

Mr. BROWNE. And with the understanding that the few cases pending here for consideration, probably occupying the attention of the House not more than thirty minutes, may be taken up and disposed of at some time during the session.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would not the gentleman have the time between now and 5.30 o'clock, the hour fixed for the recess, to take up and dispose of the pension cases on the docket?

Mr. CALKINS. If in order, I make the motion for a recess now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order to make that motion.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the statement of the gentleman from Indiana that the business of the House is limited by the order of the House to pension business, and that no other business can be transacted, I certainly hope that order will be vacated, because we shall probably desire to present some conference reports this evening which will have to be acted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Indiana as insisting upon the special order to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to suspend the rules and vacate the order making this evening a special order for pensions, unless it can be vacated by consent.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion for a recess.

Mr. HISCOCK. We may desire to present some conference reports.

Mr. HATCH. The interruption of this case is all out of order. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the motion which I have indicated, that we vacate the special order for this evening.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

(Here the Speaker resumed the chair.)

Mr. HISCOCK. I have been informed, Mr. Speaker, that there is a special order for this evening limiting the business to be transacted to that of pensions only. If such is the case, then I desire to move to vacate that special order so far as it is limited to pension cases. I repeat it is likely we shall desire to present some conference reports.

Several MEMBERS. And other business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to vacating the special order?

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of order. I object to vacating the special order to that extent. I object to any other business than conference reports.

Mr. HATCH. I object to vacating the special order.

Mr. CLARK. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the special order would not interfere with the consideration of an election case.

Mr. HISCOCK. Would it interfere with the consideration of conference reports?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. I do not know but what it has been already answered in response to the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York; but I want to know if to-night when the House meets it can not by a majority vote control the business of this evening's session?

The SPEAKER. It can.

Mr. WASHBURN. To any subject?

Mr. RAY. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a report from the Committee on Claims for reference to the Calendar.

Mr. CLARK. The regular order, as I understand it, is the motion made to take a recess until half past 7 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised of that. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Hampshire if there be no objection.

ALEXANDER SWIFT & CO.

Mr. RAY, from the Committee on Claims, by unanimous consent, reported back the bill (H. R. 1304) for the relief of Alexander Swift & Co., partners, and Alexander Swift & Co. and the Niles Works; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE. I rise now to a question of order. I wish to ask if I understood the Chair to say a moment ago that by a majority vote we can take up any business this evening?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say anything of the kind. That was not the question presented to the Chair.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. A motion had been made to take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair knows nothing of that motion.

Mr. CALKINS. I had submitted the motion.

Mr. WHITE. What is the order for this evening's session?

The SPEAKER. It will be time enough to determine that when we reach it. The Chair can not undertake to decide all possible and imaginary questions before they arise.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 719) for the relief of the representatives of Sterling T. Austin, deceased;

A bill (S. 826) for the relief of Powers & Newman and D. & B. Powers; and

A bill (S. 1829) to amend an act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 359) to print 5,000 copies of the report of the board on behalf of the United States Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876;

A bill (H. R. 7597) to admit free of duty articles intended for the national mining and industrial exposition to be held at Denver, in the State of Colorado, during the year 1883;

A bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7623) relative to the Southern exposition to be held in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the year 1883.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Some gentleman moved to take a recess till half past 7 o'clock.

Mr. CALKINS. I submitted that motion before its present occupant resumed the chair.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his motion?

Mr. CALKINS. Several gentlemen desire to present reports, &c., and if there be no objection to entertaining their requests I will withdraw the motion.

FEES OF REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the fees allowed registers and receivers for testimony reduced by them to writing for claimants in establishing pre-emption and homestead rights and mineral entries, and in contested cases, shall not be considered or taken into account in determining the maximum of compensation of said officers.

SEC. 2. That registers and receivers shall, upon application, furnish plats or diagrams of townships in their respective districts, showing what lands are vacant and what lands are taken, and shall be allowed to receive compensation therefor from the party obtaining said plat or diagram, at such rates as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and said officers shall, upon application by the proper State or Territorial authorities, furnish, for the purpose of taxation, a list of all lands sold in their respective districts, together with the names of the purchasers, and shall be allowed to receive compensation for the same not to exceed 10 cents per entry; and the sums thus received for plats and lists shall not be considered or taken into account in determining the maximum of compensation of said officers.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

JOHN P. GREGSON.

Mr. WATSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 153) for the relief of John P. Gregson; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FEES OF REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill called up a moment ago by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT].

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask whether or not any gentleman is informed how much the fees are in the aggregate that the registers and receivers under this law would receive which they are not required to account for?

Mr. MAGINNIS. They are required to account for all of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but by this bill they are released from that.

Mr. STRAIT. Not at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. These fees do not go into the salaries at all; they are that much extra. And my question is, how much will these fees amount to for the various plats they furnish?

Mr. STRAIT. The fees are very inconsiderable. This bill is recommended by the Committee on Public Lands and by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. WASHBURN. Let me say to the gentleman from Indiana that it is more in the interest of the general public than of any individuals.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very desirable to know how that is. This is merely an addition to the salaries of the registers and receivers, and I think some gentleman would know how much of an addition it would be.

Mr. WASHBURN. You can not tell. You do not know what the call may be for the copies of these papers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; inasmuch as these fees have been heretofore taken into account and to the extent these officers furnished copies. If they furnished copies they charged for them, and that charge was a part of their salary.

Mr. STRAIT. I have said this is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. There can be nothing exorbitant in it. This is asked in the interest of the settler.

Mr. HOLMAN. I apprehend if we abolish the pre-emption laws and nobody takes up the public lands except those entitled to them under the homestead law, this will be of little consequence. I believe the chief benefit will accrue to speculators. But I will not urge the objection.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. STRAIT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration House bill No. 6754.

Mr. JACOBS. I object.

WILLIAM ANDERTON.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7683) granting a pension to William Anderton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TREATY AT BUFFALO CREEK, NEW YORK.

Mr. SPAULDING, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7559) providing for a settlement with the Indians who were parties to the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, on the 15th day of January, 1838, for the unexecuted stipulations of that treaty; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DIBRELL, for the remainder of this day's session, because of indisposition.

To Mr. JOYCE, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROSECRANS, to print in the RECORD remarks prepared by him upon the Pacific Railroad consolidation bill. [See Appendix.]

To Mr. CASSIDY, to print in the RECORD remarks upon the Pacific Railroad consolidation bill. [See Appendix.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal of papers, as follows:

To Mr. BURROWS, of Missouri, in the case of Abraham Buckholder, now before the Committee of Invalid Pensions; no adverse report.

Also, in the case of John Dickson, for relief (H. R. 3708) now before the Committee on Claims; no unfavorable report.

To Mr. MURCH, in the case of M. Wilber.

To Mr. WAIT, in the case of William Carruthers.

To Mr. HOUK, the commission of Isaac Risenden, as late captain United States volunteers.

JOSEPH C. IRWIN.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and pass at this time Senate bill No. 964 for the relief of Joseph C. Irwin.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joseph C. Irwin, of Kansas City, Missouri, $8,378.46, in payment and full satisfaction of all claims under contract, and for eighty cavalry horses delivered by the said Joseph C. Irwin to Major J. M. Moore, quartermaster at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, February 2, 1872, upon the contract of Andrew J. Williams, and for which payment in whole or in part has never been made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to reserve the right to object until the report has been read.

The SPEAKER. There will not be time for reading the report before the hour for taking the recess. If the reading of the report is insisted on the bill had better be withdrawn.

Mr. VAN HORN. I can explain it in a minute. This man had a contract to supply horses, and he supplied eighty of them. The Government has used them; but the man has not been paid because he did not fulfill his whole contract. This bill has passed both Houses at different times, and is recommended by the committee.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. CLARK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOSS OF THE JEANNETTE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the record of the proceedings of the court of inquiry in regard to the loss of the Jeannette and the death of Lieutenant-Commander DeLong and others; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a statement of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims for the year ending December 3, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The hour of half-past five having arrived, in pursuance of a previous order the Chair declares this House in recess until half-past 7 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., the Speaker in the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 324) providing for deficiencies in the appropriations for salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate disagreed to by the House to the bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, to print the report of the Commissioner of Education for the year 1881, 4,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Education.

CHARLES H. TOMPKINS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask consent to take from the Private Calendar and pass at this time Senate bill No. 729 for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins, of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to settle the accounts of Charles H. Tompkins, a lieutenant-colonel and deputy quartermaster-general in the Army, for reimbursement of the moneys actually expended by him in providing himself with quarters and fuel while awaiting orders at San Francisco during a part of the year 1874; and the necessary amount to pay any balance found due to the said Charles H. Tompkins is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the said Tompkins, in the settlement of such accounts, shall not be credited with the amount of any actual expenditure in any one month, or part thereof, greater than was then and there expended by the United States in providing quarters and fuel for officers of like grade.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering the bill which has just been read?

Mr. HOLMAN. Without waiving objection, I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] will state the reason for this bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. This bill has passed the Senate, and comes from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House with their unanimous report in its favor.

It simply provides for the payment of the actual cost of quarters and fuel by General Tompkins, of the United States Army, while awaiting orders in San Francisco. The Treasury Department has not paid this amount, because at that time officers of the Army were not entitled to commutation for quarters and fuel, only in kind. General Tompkins having been under orders the Department declined to furnish him in kind with quarters and fuel. It is understood by the War Department and Treasury Department; but there is not any law to pay this money, from the fact that at that time quarters and fuel were not allowed officers in the service, although they are to-day.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of House resolution No. 338, and that it be now passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to organize a board of officers, of not less than three in number, selecting the same from the ordnance and artillery arms of the United States service, who shall examine all the facts relative to the said claim of Dr. J. B. Read, and ascertain whether the United States have made any use of any invention of the said Read in projectiles; whether the same, if so used, were used under any contract, express or implied; to what extent, if any, his invention was so used, and whether such use was valuable to the United States, and if so, what sum, if any, under the circumstances of the use, the United States ought in justice to pay for the same; and that such board do make their report thereon with all convenient speed to Congress for its action in the premises; and that such report be accompanied by a statement of all the proofs submitted to and considered by them.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution; which was thereupon ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to suspend the rules——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will not be recognized at this time to make a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. LYNCH. Then I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar and put upon its passage Senate bill No. 1939, which has been favorably reported from the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the bill is not at the desk.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask to have taken up for present consideration Senate bill No. 2060.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the further consideration of the election case of Sessinghaus vs. Frost.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELFORD. I understand that under the rule——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BELFORD. I want to state it, because I want to understand this question. I understand that under the rules of this House, restrictive and damnable as they are, any member during the last six days of the session, if he can catch the Speaker's eye and receive recognition, has a right to move to pass a bill under a suspension of the rules. I want to know whether that rule is in operation now.

The SPEAKER. It is; but there is now pending before the House a question of the highest constitutional privilege, which for the time being is entitled to preference. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] is entitled to the floor.

MISSOURI ELECTION CONTEST.

The House resumed the consideration of the contested-election case of Sessinghaus vs. Frost.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FROST], the contestee in this case, wishes to occupy thirty minutes. If he desires that time, I wish him to proceed now.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I will proceed at this time to occupy my thirty minutes, if that is the understanding; but within my experience in this House, running over six years, the contestee in all cases has been allowed to have the conclusion of the debate. As, however, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] objects to that in this case, I shall have to proceed now, allowing him the advantage of both the opening and the closing speech.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, how long does this debate run?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FROST] is entitled to the floor for 30 minutes by consent of the House.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, it must be a gratifying circumstance for any lawyer to have an opportunity of discussing during 30 minutes a record covering three volumes of this size [exhibiting a volume]. Further, Mr. Speaker, it is always gratifying to a lawyer to address a jury that will not give him its attention. Unless I can have the attention of this House, I do not propose to speak at all. I have something to say and shall say it as briefly as possible; but if members of the House do not desire to listen to me, if they do not come here with the idea that they are going to allow themselves to at least hear the argument which may be brought before them, I shall sit down now, and allow the edict which has gone forth to be enacted. But, sir, I know that if this House is appealed to in the proper spirit, as I propose to appeal to it, I shall at least gain its attention so long as I speak to the point.

Any gentleman who has had the slightest experience of election cases in this House is perfectly aware that for some reason this House never does sit upon an election case in the same manner as a court sits when it hears the claim of one individual against another.

Now, sir, I intend no reproach against the majority of this House. I speak generally with reference to the whole system of the trial of election cases as they have been conducted in this House since the initiation of our form of government, and as they have been conducted in the British Parliament, from which we deduce our rules and methods of procedure.

Sir, during two or more centuries contested-election cases in the British Parliament were decided by the King or his ministers. In a contested election from Cornwall, the King or his ministers decided upon the returns of the sheriff of that county. Then the House, the lower House of the British Parliament, asserting its prerogatives, gradually gathered to itself the right of deciding upon the qualifications and returns of its own members; and after a period of two or more hundred years, having gone through the same experience that we have gone through, the House of Parliament discovered that the returns were always made from the Committee on Elections according to the views of the majority in power and the sentiment that was controlling at the time. Now, sir, when the House of Parliament had become fully aware of that fact, as we are aware of it to-day, they then introduced a new rule, which was, that every election case that came before the House should have appointed for its consideration a special committee. And then, under the impression that by that means they could get an opportunity to act in a judicial frame of mind, they determined to appoint this special committee, brought them before the bar of the House, and the Speaker administered to them a special oath that they would adjudicate in a judicial frame of mind upon questions submitted to them. That, as may well be imagined, was a failure, as it had been before.

The Parliament of Great Britain having become satisfied that it was not that kind of a tribunal which, by its very nature and quality could judicially entertain these subjects, it determined by law to attempt at least to go down to the constituencies and to give them a fair opportunity to be heard and to pass upon all questions of fact and law bearing upon the matter of a disputed election, and thus the lower house of Parliament decided that two judges should go down from Westminster Hall into the constituencies and hear the evidence and to decide as they would in any other litigation that might come before them.

Were I a member of the next House my first duty, sir, should be, and I call attention of gentlemen on this side who may be and will be interested in that question, to induce the House to make provision for sending all contested-election cases from the House of Representatives to the district courts of the United States for adjudication. Let them be tried there where we will have an opportunity to be heard, an opportunity to have our evidence presented in a judicial form and that evidence passed upon. And I hope that there will be some gentlemen on our side of the House who will, during the next Congress, be willing to take up that question at the very beginning of its session, and send it to the courts where there may be a fair, impartial, judicial hearing of each election case upon its merits.

Now, Mr. Speaker, by what I say when I speak of a fair and impartial hearing I do not intend to reflect upon the integrity of the members of the Committee on Elections of this House. I have no such idea. I do not intend to impeach their fairness; but I assert, as a matter of fact known to all, that under the system which is now in vogue in this House with regard to the management of cases of contested elections, it is impossible for the Committee on Elections to fairly adjudicate upon every case that comes before it. Not through any fault of the individual members of that committee, but through the fault of the necessary circumstances by which they are involved and which they are unable to control.

Let me put the point to the House, inasmuch as I am momentarily unable to secure the ear of the Speaker. Was there ever a lawyer who, when he found in the course of the trial of a case before a jury that a member of that jury was absent or asleep and had not heard a large portion of the testimony—I ask, was there ever a lawyer who failed to file a motion for a new trial under such circumstances? And I assert that the members of the Committee on Elections have never heard evidence in this case. Nor have they ever read the evidence. I assert, furthermore, that not all the members of that committee have heard fully the argument which has been presented in this case by counsel, if a majority of them heard it at all. They submit the matter to a subcommittee, and they take the opinion of that subcommittee, and the subcommittee never hears the testimony. Sir, we have talked about the questions of law involved in this case to-day, and I hesitate not to assert that if the testimony had ever been listened to by a jury of twelve men, it would be found that my opponent did not have any ground whatever upon which to stand. But it never has been investigated at all.

There is not a single member of the Committee on Elections who knows anything about the testimony taken in this case, excepting so far as it was communicated to him by the briefs of counsel. When our courts decide cases they write judicial opinions. Let any gentleman in this House take up the reports in this case—and I am not talking about this case especially, but about all election cases—let any gentleman take them up and ask himself if that is the kind of a decision that a judge would render. Why, sir, they are but the briefs of counsel. They are not judicial decisions. They do not make any pretense to be judicial decisions.

Of course in the time at my command I can have no opportunity to read the testimony or to bring it before the attention of this House. But, sir, I am in a fortunate predicament in my case; I have one proposition that I believe will settle this case in the mind of every gentleman upon this floor who has ever read Blackstone. We cannot, as a general proposition, go into the discussion of questions of fact. We have not the time. We have not the opportunity; it is impossible that gentlemen should attend to their business upon this floor and investigate these cases.

But, sir, I have the proposition here which every man who has ever read Blackstone must recognize as being perfectly impregnable. It is in evidence that when this case was first tried, after ninety days, and I will say ninety nights, of testimony, after several bulky volumes of testimony had been taken, the notary who had been employed in the taking of the depositions handed that testimony over to one of the attorneys for my contestant. And here I desire to say that in any remarks I make I do not intend to reflect upon the contestant in this case, Mr. Sessinghaus. Our relations have been perfectly friendly and amiable, and will be whatever may be the termination of this cause. He is a gentleman. But, sir, one of his attorneys, Mr. Lyne S. Metcalfe, jr.—I have to mention his name; I wish I did not have to do it, but the record compels me to do it—went to the notary, asked him to deliver to him the testimony in this cause, had it in his possession, and altered it. Two gentlemen who were on the subcommittee having charge of this case, [Mr. RITCHIE and Mr. LOWNDES H. DAVIS,] investigated the condition of the record, and they reported that they had not examined everything, but that they had found on it two hundred marginal alterations, which had been adopted by the notary. I employed a gentleman in this city who found eighteen hundred alterations made by Mr. Metcalfe in this testimony.

Mr. CLARDY. Changing the numbers of the houses, and thus making or unmaking voters.

Mr. FROST. The question in this case turned on registration. If a man lived, for instance, at 1810 Franklin avenue, he was in my district and entitled to vote. If he lived at 1811, he was across the street in another district, and was not entitled to vote. And the alteration from a zero to 1 made the difference whether he was a voter in my district or had fraudulently intruded himself. Eighteen hundred alterations were made in that testimony by Mr. Metcalfe, and, according to the sworn testimony of the notary, adopted by him as evidence. As to the good faith of this man Metcalfe I can suppose that the attorney in the cause might have had some reason to get possession of the depositions for perfectly honorable and honest purposes. But sir, in the office of my counsel, I met Mr. Metcalfe, and here is the affidavit which I made, corroborated by the affidavit of my counsel, an affidavit which Mr. Metcalfe has never dared to contradict. I will read it to the House. Or I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

GUSTAVUS SESSINGHAUS, CONTESTANT, vs.
R. GRAHAM FROST, CONTESTEE.

In the matter of contest in the third Congressional district of Missouri.

R. GRAHAM FROST, being duly sworn, on his oath states that:

I was present at the office of Donovan & Conroy, in the city of Saint Louis, on the 10th day of November, 1881.

Mr. Donovan informed me that he had heard that all the depositions given on behalf of Gustavus Sessinghaus in his contest had, since they were taken by Notary Kraft, been in the possession of his counsel, Lyne S. Metcalfe, jr.; that also all depositions taken on behalf of myself had, at the request of Lyne S. Metcalfe, jr., been delivered to him by Notary Kraft.

We were conversing about this extraordinary proceeding when Lyne S. Metcalfe, jr., entered the office.

Mr. Donovan said to him, "Mr. Metcalfe, you must have your brief on the contest already prepared, for I understand that you have during the summer read over all of the testimony."

His reply was, "Oh, no! I did not have the testimony; I had only my depositions of one day, and that was the day the city ordinances were introduced. I wanted to see if the ordinances were reported correctly."

I made a note of this answer just as it fell from Mr. Metcalfe's lips; and when Mr. Donovan talked with him again about having understood that he had had the testimony, he positively denied that such was the truth.

R. GRAHAM FROST.

Mr. FROST. Now, sir, he denied positively to my attorney that he had had that testimony. And the record shows, by the letters written by him to the notary, that he had had all of it. Sir, when he told me and my counsel that he had not had that testimony, he had actually had it all in his possession. He had mutilated it; he had altered it. And the notary himself admits that he had adopted the marginal notes suggested by the counsel for the contestant. And further, he had erased in the face of absolute objection, made during the trial, important testimony in relation to certain witnesses.

After we had come here and after we had offered here the motion to suppress that evidence, because it was not evidence that any court would have entertained for a moment; after we had notified the notary that we wanted his original notes, so as to compare them with the testimony; and when the committee finally subpœnaed him, he came forward and declared that he had destroyed his notes in the interim between the time when we had impeached their authenticity and the time when he was called before your committee to substantiate their authenticity.

Now, sir, do we not then have here the fullest evidence of bad faith? But apart from the question of bad faith, if I had time to talk here about questions of law I could quote authority after authority. The reports of the courts of this country, of the Supreme Court of the United States, and of the courts of the States are full of decisions insisting upon the absolute necessity of the integrity of depositions, that they shall be guarded with the most sedulous care.

I should like to read some of them, but I have not time. It is unnecessary to take up the time of the House upon an elementary proposition of law like that.

Easily we may get into a cavil or a dispute about a fact. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] may get up and dispute with me as to a question of fact, and honestly we may differ. The House having never heard it, gentlemen may properly vote with their respective parties.

But I bring before you a proposition which no lawyer and which no court would fail for a moment to sustain. You heard to-day the eloquent speech of my colleague and friend from Saint Louis [Mr. CLARDY], and of my friend from Illinois [Mr. MOULTON], upon the registration laws. You heard the statement made by them that the attorney of the contestant, Mr. Pollard, an ex-member of this House, a member of the Forty-fifth Congress, never raised in his brief any question upon that point; never thought of it. There is not a lawyer in the city of Saint Louis to-day, I undertake to say not a lawyer in the State of Missouri, who would attempt to attack the validity of the registration laws of that State.

When the Committee on Elections had, however, failed to substantiate any of the extravagant declarations contained in the petition in this case, when the committee had got itself into that condition that it could find no foothold from which to make a favorable report in behalf of my friend, Mr. Sessinghaus, having tied a knot so tightly that it could not unloosen it, its majority was mindful, I doubt not, of that maxim which you, Mr. Speaker, may remember, if you are only listening to me, from the Ars poetica of Horace—nec intersit deus, nisi sit dignus, vindice nodus—never call upon a divinity, unless the knot itself requires for its untangling divine interference. In the Latin, Deus meant either a divinity from above or a divinity from below; and there was no way of distinguishing between the two. I do not know from what region this divinity came. But as the committee had got itself thoroughly entangled, a divinity was wanting. And the great constitutional lawyer from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER] arose, and like Alexander, when he would not untie the knot, he cut it with his trenchant sword.

That great constutional lawyer suggested to Mr. Pollard and to my contestant a point which they had never thought of, a point which no lawyer in the State of Missouri had ever thought of, for our supreme court and our bar have not had those unique advantages of instruction in constitutional law which are possessed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

If I were to attempt to obtain justice in this case, as I would before any court in the land, I should require at least two or three hours. But I do not propose to detain the House any longer; simply in closing I wish to say that from my experience, from what I have seen in this House, I know the fiat has gone forth. My head is in the hangman's noose, and the only question is, when shall the drop fall?

Several MEMBERS. No. No.

Mr. FROST. I can congratulate myself upon the fact, however, that my exit from this Hall will be a matter which will concern the public very little. But you, too, Mr. Speaker, in a few short hours, will quit that chair, and your party will quit this floor, and this to the satisfaction of all, not by the decision of a malignant partisan tribunal which has not heard your case, or pretended to hear it, but by the impartial, well considered verdict of the public which has judged you, sir, and judged your party. A decision has gone forth against you and your party which I hope will keep—not against you personally, Mr. Speaker, because to you I wish every prosperity in life, and everything that may be happy and felicitous—but the edict has gone forth from the American people that neither you nor your party shall hold power in this country for at least the next two years; and this edict is more powerful than any which the majority of this House may yet proclaim during its short term of power.

If I have any time to spare I will yield it to my friend from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HOOKER. I will not take those two minutes now. I hope to get something added to them. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] will put fifteen minutes more on, I shall then like to speak.

Mr. MILLER. I have not enough time to do so, or I would.

Mr. HOOKER. Then put on ten minutes after you speak.

Mr. MILLER. If I can I will do so. I will now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. I shall occupy the attention of the House but a few moments, and in that time I will endeavor to call attention to the real issue in that case. That issue can be best presented by stating the facts out of which it arises.

This contest grows out of the rejection of the ballots of certain persons who had been duly registered, but whose names had been stricken from the registration-list by the board of revisers in the city of Saint Louis a few days before the election took place.

The question is not whether the parties were registered voters or not. They had registered. That fact being kept in mind, this case is relieved of a great deal of unnecessary legal learning and technical quibbles. The ordinance under the authority of which these names were dropped provided that the board of revision should strike from the list the names of persons who had died or removed. These names, among others, were stricken from the list. Bear in mind, the only two cases in which names could be thus stricken from the list were removal and death.

On the day of the election these persons whose names had been stricken from the list presented themselves at the polls and tendered their ballots, having complied fully with all the requirements of the law or the ordinance of registration, having done everything that the law required them to do. But on presenting themselves at the polls to vote in virtue of their right, they having fully complied with all the conditions precedent to the exercise of that right under the laws of the State of Missouri as well as the ordinance of the city of Saint Louis, they were surprised to find their votes challenged. They proposed then and there to qualify anew under the laws; in other words, to comply with the law providing for registration at the ballot-box. But they were denied the right to do this upon the ground that their names had been stricken from the list, and therefore, and therefore only, they could not, as voters might do who had never been registered, qualify then and there and vote.

The ordinance did not provide for cases of this sort. The authority given the board of revision to drop names was to be exercised when a man was dead or had removed. If he was not dead, if he had not removed, if in fact he was still alive and a resident, what was the legal effect of the act of the board in striking his name from the registration-list? Is there a lawyer here or elsewhere who would have the hardihood to deny the proposition that the act of the board of revision was simply and absolutely null and void? If this act was based upon the assumption or hypothesis that the man was dead, when in fact he was not dead, the legal sequence inevitably is that he was qualified to vote and could not thus be deprived of his right.

That is all there is in this entire case. There is no question that the men were qualified to vote, no question that they had complied with the law, had done everything that the law prescribed. They had been registered and came to the polls to vote. If they had never registered they were entitled to be registered at the polls; but they were solemnly told, "You are dead; notwithstanding you are here in person the decree of this high tribunal, emanating from that divinity below referred to by the contestee, has declared you dead, and as dead you shall be treated."

I understand from this testimony that there were about 12,000 of the 60,000 registered voters in that city stricken off at that time. Who ever heard of such slaughter in ten days? It surpasses Samson with his bone killing the Philistines. Why, sir, if this be law, what an easy matter to disfranchise whole communities! Whether the ordinance be valid or invalid, it amounts to nothing. There is the naked question. Taking the ordinance and assuming its validity by the statutes of Missouri, still these men were qualified under the ordinance and had the right to vote. Hence all this discussion of constitutional and other questions amounts to nothing in the world. Stripping the case of all sophistry and coming down to the point, it is just this: Was this extraordinary board of revision endowed with such superhuman power that it could sit in the recesses of dark chambers and kill 12,000 freemen at a single dash of the pen? [Laughter.] Why, sir, if such a thing could be accomplished there were 12,000 homicides perpetrated—nay, murders, because the testimony shows it was done deliberately and with malice aforethought. [Laughter.]

Mr. FROST. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. FROST. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that since the time to which he alludes we have elected my very excellent friend, Mr. Ewing, Republican mayor of the city of Saint Louis, who appointed a revising board, and that in the last election that republican revising board struck off 15,000 names? Is the gentleman aware of that?

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Well, what does that prove? If it proves anything it simply proves that Republicans are sometimes as bad as Democrats; and so far as I am concerned, the Lord deliver me and mine from both. [Laughter.]

Mr. FROST. No, sir; it proves that the gentleman lives upon a broad prairie country and not in a large city.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES, of Texas. As I have been interrupted, I would like a minute or two more.

Mr. MILLER. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Now, Mr. Speaker, after a discussion of these points it is hardly worth while to take up any other question, because I think the points I have presented supersede the necessity of considering others.

I want to present this point. The statute of Missouri providing for registration in its application to cities of the first class, and the city of Saint Louis is one of them, requires the board of revisal to meet thirty days before the election, and sit ten days, and ten only. So the term fixed by the statute expires twenty days before the election. By the ordinance of the city the board in that city meets twenty days before, sits ten, and then expires. What follows? If the law of Missouri is paramount to that of the city regulating Federal and State elections the time for revision had expired before the city board met, and their proceedings, to use legal parlance, was coram non judice, and not worth the snap of your finger because of want of jurisdiction. That is all I have to say. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MILLER. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say anything in this case. And why? Because I have argued this matter, I thought, once before this House, and they did not pay any attention to it, and therefore I did not propose to say anything this time. And what point did I make then? It was that the man who was interested in the case had the testimony in his hands, not only for one day and one week, but for months, and did just as he pleased with it. I said, as I understood the law in this country, that any court would suppress that testimony and never permit it to be read. But this House decided differently.

Now, every man who is acquainted with the facts in this case knows that this man—I believe his name is Metcalf, or something like that—had this testimony in his hands not only for one day but for weeks and months; and after having testified that he did not have all of it, and what he had only for one day, it was proved on him he had all of the testimony all the time.

I say, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say anything about this, but if there is one conviction in my mind it is that these election cases should be decided according to law. Whenever we leave that course we leave everything to be decided according to political predilections and feelings.

But there is one thing which occurs to me in this matter, and that is that this notary public had permitted the attorney on the other side to take this testimony, and as a member of the sub-committee which examined it I found one hundred and eighteen changes made by that attorney, every one of which was adopted by the notary public, as he stated, without comparison with his original notes. I said that was sufficient for me in this case.

But what happened after that? On the investigation of this matter it came out that he had burned all his original notes—destroyed them—thereby leaving the committee in doubt as to what should be done in the matter. He thereby left us without the means of testing whether he had testified to the truth or not.

One more point and I am through. This case has been fought point after point and day after day, and finally it all settled down to one thing, and that is whether the city of Saint Louis had a registration law or not. How do they determine that matter? Simply by denying they had any registration law. We all know this, that when you cite a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States you take a report of the decisions of that court; whenever you cite the law of a State you take the statutes of that State. Here the statutes of the State of Missouri show that registration was provided by the city of Saint Louis, and yet when apprised of that fact they say there was no registration provided by the State of Missouri, when the statute itself says there was such a law.

But I do not rest this case on that one point. If we have any law in this country, if we are to be governed by laws which guide us in other matters, let us not seat a man here on testimony handled by the attorney on the opposite side and changed to suit his own purpose.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLER. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall spend but a moment in answering one or two questions which have been raised by the contestee and by the gentleman from Missouri who has just preceded me.

And first, as it has been spoken of by two gentlemen, relative to the testimony, let me say that the committee, in order to assure itself that the testimony had not been tampered with, summoned the stenographer who took all the evidence in the case from Saint Louis before it, examined him in the committee-room, and he testified that after he had gone over his stenographic notes and compared the testimony as transcribed by him and his clerks, and signed it and sealed it, that it was never out of his hand until it came to this House and got into the hands of the Clerk of the House. He said that naturally in the transcription of the testimony there were some blanks and errors that had crept into the stenographic notes of his assistants who had transcribed the copy which had to be supplied; for you may well imagine that when we have this mass of testimony, comprising as it does 3,000 printed pages, and which had been dictated from the notes of the stenographer to five clerks or amanuenses and afterward rewritten from their shorthand notes, that some errors would inevitably creep in.

The clerks in taking down in shorthand from dictation and then in transcribing their notes made some omissions, according to the stenographer's testimony, and made mistakes which he discovered and testified to, and which he had found on comparison with his notes had been made and which he corrected. It is true that the attorney in going over the testimony marked on the margin of the paper what he thought the corrections were, but the stenographer swears that he never adopted a suggestion made by the attorney until after he had compared it with his own original stenographic notes, and saw that the correction suggested was proper. When that suggestion was right the stenographer swears that he adopted it. When it was not right he swears that he did not adopt it; and after he had done that he corrected it page by page with his original stenographic notes. No man tampered with it; no man wrote on it; no man inserted anything in it, and the committee found that the facts are as I have stated, and his testimony is printed with the record of this case, where any man can see it for himself.

Now they say he destroyed his stenographic notes. Why? Because, according to his own testimony he was told that the case was decided. He had gone out of the business, and found, in cleaning up his office, the notes in this case, together with all of his work for ten years past, making a large mass of papers which was lumbering up his room, and he burned not only these notes but everything else of that kind that he thought useless, and that, too, six months before he was summoned to come before this committee.

Mr. WILLIS. As one of the jurymen in this case let me ask——

Mr. MILLER. I cannot yield for a question. There was not a single gentleman who heard the testimony or who knows the facts who doubted the veracity of the stenographer.

Mr. WILLIS. I say as one of the jurymen in this case, Why were those notes destroyed? They should be produced.

Mr. MILLER. I must decline to yield the floor. I have given the gentleman an answer. I repeat what I was saying, that any man who reads his testimony will have no doubt either of the integrity, the intelligence, or the veracity of that man to whose testimony I am now referring.

Enough for that. The gentleman from Missouri stated that they might have acted in revising this list of voters under the law of the State of 1877. Ah, they might! But the fact is the city of Saint Louis, by an ordinance published in this testimony, adopted on the 12th day of July, 1878, provided differently. They passed an ordinance, which is published in this testimony from page 1681 to 1700, in this volume which I hold in my hand, containing a complete system of registration, and they amended one section of it afterward, on the 20th day of August, 1878. That ordinance differs from the general law of Missouri as applicable to other cities and to other localities in that it requires but twenty days before election for the meeting of the revisory board, while the general law requires them to meet thirty days before for this purpose. And the evidence is, as is shown by the record on page 134, that the clerk of the board of revisers swears that they met twenty days before the election and adjourned ten days before the election, showing that they followed letter for letter the ordinance of Saint Louis of July and August, 1878. Will some Democrat tell me that a city council can pass a law providing a system of registration, providing that registration shall be a prerequisite to voting, when the Constitution of the United States provides that the Legislature of the State, and the Legislature alone, shall determine the manner of holding elections for Representatives? It is absurd.

They might have acted under the law of 1877, said the gentleman from Missouri. Ah, but the clerk of the board of revisers swears that they did not. But the attorney for the city of Saint Louis testifies in this case that he prepared the rules and regulations which were issued to every board of election officers, swears on page 1814 that they followed the ordinance, and that he knows of no other law than the ordinances of Saint Louis which govern elections in that city.

I shall not go, Mr. Speaker, into the question as to the manner in which the names were stricken from the list. Suffice it to say that the first thing they did was to pass a resolution that each member of the board should make out a list of names of persons that he thought ought to be stricken off, and that having written them and without reading them to the other twenty-seven members, without having submitted them to the other twenty-seven members of the board at all, they were sent up and the clerk was instructed by the board to strike them out.

Mr. HOOKER. If that ordinance is void, how is Mr. Sessinghaus elected?

Mr. MILLER. The committee does not claim that the entire ordinance is void; only so much as requires registration as a prerequisite to voting. He was elected by virtue of the ordinance, laws, and the constitution of the State of Missouri. We counted the vote of every man that had been in the State one year and was a native-born or legally naturalized citizen and who had resided in the election district the number of days provided by the constitution of Missouri. And we counted no man's name unless we were satisfied that he had the constitutional requirements to authorize him to exercise the right of franchise.

But, sir, if the registry law was legal that was in force then, I charge that the board of revisers acted so carelessly, so illegally, so fraudulently, as appears by the testimony in this case, in striking these names off, that those votes should be counted on the principle that parties did all they could to qualify themselves to cast their votes at the November election of 1880.

Why, sir, I remember one case of a man who was born in Saint Louis, who had lived there all his life, who had lived in the same house for five years. He had been registered by this board. He had never moved his residence. His name was stricken off. He went to the polls to vote. The election officer knew that that man had lived in the same house for five years; he knew he had lived in the city for twenty years, but he could not receive his vote. But that man's son who lived in the same house with him and who slept in the same house with him, voted the Democratic ticket and his name had not been taken off, and he voted. Do you say that the father's vote should not be counted when he had done all the law required him to do granting it to be constitutional; when he had gone and registered, when he had lived in the same house for five years and never moved out? Yet his name was stricken off, although the section provides that no man's name shall be stricken off unless he has moved from the election district or died. Had he moved? No. I need not ask if he had died. Was not his name illegally stricken off? Had he not done all he could? Ought this House not to count that vote? If not, why not?

Of the one hundred and fifty-one names some of the cases are not so strong as that. But they are names of men who had lived in the city some of them all their lives, some of them for ten years; some for five years; all of them citizens; and when they came to vote the only reason their votes were not taken was because this board had illegally, if not fraudently, stricken their names from the list. We counted those votes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said all I desire to say. I have presented this case to the House as I found it. I have presented it as it was found by eleven members of the Committee on Elections. The gentleman from Missouri thought I originated this plea. If I did, it was argued before the full Committee on Elections by two eminent lawyers of Saint Louis, each of them being given one hour. The contestee's attorney was given an hour to point out wherein that position was wrong, if it was wrong. He presented his case to the full committee with eminent ability; and after he had presented it, after he had argued the legal proposition, then other members of that committee, Mr. JONES of Texas, Mr. RANNEY of Massachusetts, Mr. CALKINS, the chairman of the committee, Mr. PAUL of Virginia, and other members of this committee to the number of eleven, counting myself, agreed that the conclusion was irresistible. And it is not my report, it is the report of the eleven members of the Committee on Elections. And if it is something new that the lawyers of Saint Louis never thought of, they can think of it from this time on; and if there is anything wrong in it, they can pick it to pieces.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask on what ground he claims Mr. Sessinghaus is elected if the ordinance was void and Mr. Frost could not be elected?

Mr. MILLER. On the ground that the men who voted for Mr. Sessinghaus or offered to vote, making a majority of 168, were legal voters of Saint Louis under the constitution of the State of Missouri, authorized to exercise the elective franchise by virtue of the constitution and laws of that State, and we believe that the Congress of the United States has authority and power to inquire into the fact as to what the constitution of the State is, as to what the qualifications of voters are, as to what their conduct was at the election, and for whom they voted. And I say if a majority of the legal voters of a district, qualified by the constitution, cast their votes for a given man, and there was no law to prevent them from being cast, their votes ought to be counted. I have never claimed that the entire ordinance was void; only so much of it as made registration a prerequisite for voting.

Mr. HOOKER. How much time is the gentleman from Pennsylvania going to give me?

Mr. MILLER. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes.

Mr. MILLER. I yield the balance of my time to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], all but the last half minute. I yield him two and one-half minutes.

Mr. HOOKER. I have simply to say to the House that if the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] is worth anything it knocks the bottom out of his own case as he has reported it to the House; because if he insists that the direction by the city of Saint Louis as to the method of registration and revision was wrong, then the very man for whom he reports was elected under this same system of registration and revision. Is not that so?

Mr. MILLER. Not at all; he was elected by virtue of the constitution and the laws of Missouri.

Mr. HOOKER. Ah, was he, indeed? But he lived in the city of Saint Louis, and his friends voted for him under the law of the city of Saint Louis precisely as did the friends of my friend from Missouri, [Mr. FROST].

But I have one thing to say in reference to this whole matter, that upon the very threshold of this case, Mr. Speaker—or gentlemen of the House, for as I have not the attention of the Speaker, I will address myself to you—on the very threshold of this case the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER], the chairman of the Committee on Elections [Mr. CALKINS], and all the other members of the committee, came before this House acknowledging the fact that the chief witness in this case, as to the merits of this election, as to whether it was honestly and fairly conducted or dishonestly and unfairly conducted—they came before this House with the admitted fact that the chief witness, the stenographer who took the testimony, after the evidence had been closed and in contravention of every principle of law which prevails with reference to the taking of testimony before courts of justice or before tribunals which have to decide law questions, allowed the attorney of the contestant to make marginal notes directing the stenographer what he considered to be the true rendition of the testimony of the witnesses.

Is not that the fact, gentlemen of the House of Representatives? The stenographer swears that he burned the original notes and adopted the suggestions of the attorney of the contestant and made them a part and parcel of the evidence which was transmitted to the House of Representatives in regard to the mode and method of this election. Is not that true? Can anybody deny it on the part of the Committee on Elections? Does the gentleman making this report from the committee or the chairman of that committee deny it?

It is like burning the Bible and trusting to hearsay as to what it contains. It is like burning up the records of a court and then trusting to the hearsay of witnesses. I am sure that my distinguished and learned friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY], who I understand is on that committee, would never be heard to say before any tribunal sitting in the grand old Bay State of Massachusetts that they should listen to a witness who would swear that he had burned up the evidence he had taken to prove the facts in a case and had taken the marginal notes of an attorney as to those facts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has half a minute of his time remaining.

Mr. MILLER. And I now yield that half a minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CALKINS. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the resolutions which have been reported from the Committee on Elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

I. Resolved, That R. Graham Frost was not elected as a Representative to the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States from the third Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to occupy a seat in this House as such.

II. Resolved, That Gustavus Sessinghaus was duly elected as a Representative from the third Congressional district of Missouri to the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States, and is entitled to his seat as such.

The question was taken upon adopting the resolutions; and upon a division there were—ayes 92, noes 86.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. ATHERTON, Mr. CALKINS, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 110, not voting 55; as follows:

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I have inadvertently voted in the case, and of course voted according to my convictions of what is right. I regret very much that I feel myself necessitated on account of a pair which I made with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RUSSELL] to withdraw my vote.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. NEAL with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. KASSON with Mr. HEWITT of New York.

Mr. MARSH with Mr. DIBRELL.

Mr. MOREY with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. HOOKER.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. BLACK.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, with Mr. WISE, of Virginia.

Mr. KELLEY with Mr. WHITTHORNE.

Mr. BURROWS, of Missouri, with Mr. ROBINSON, of New York.

Mr. URNER with Mr. MCLANE of Maryland.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. GIBSON.

Mr. CASWELL with Mr. OATES.

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. REAGAN.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask that Mr. Sessinghaus be now sworn in.

Mr. GUSTAVUS SESSINGHAUS presented himself at the Clerk's desk and was duly qualified by taking the "test oath" prescribed by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1443) granting a pension to Edgar B. Lamphier;

A bill (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Daniel M. Morley;

A bill (H. R. 3743) granting a pension to Miss Amanda Stokes;

A bill (H. R. 5103) granting a pension to Margery Nightengale;

A bill (H. R. 5558) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Bayard; and

A bill (H. R. 6923) granting a pension to Mrs. Helen M. Thayer.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION FOR 1881.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution of the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881 there be printed 4,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to give notice that as soon as the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is about to present, shall have been disposed of I intend to call up the contested-election case of Cook vs. Cutts, from the State of Iowa. I ask members, if they wish these election cases disposed of, to stay here and dispose of them to-night, as this will be the last chance.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to submit the report of the committee of conference on the legislative appropriation bill, which I send to the desk.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 44, 45, 46, 57, 58, 59, 72, 73, 87, 88, 94, 96, 97, 98, 101, 102, 104, 106, 107, 109, 119, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 145, 146, 150, and 152.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 70, 71, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 99, 103, 108, 110, 112, 113, 116, 118, 120, 121, 123, 124, 125, 141, 142, 143, and 144, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: At the end of the amended paragraph insert the following; "For clerk to Committee on Military Affairs for balance of current fiscal year, at the rate of $2,000 per annum, $666.67;" and in lieu of the sum stated in lines 10, 11, and 12, on page 7 of the bill, insert the sum of "$364,694.87;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twelve" and insert "ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert the sum of "$112,350;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "sixty" and insert the word "fifty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$183,610;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$34,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirty-three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "forty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "fifty-seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "fifty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 93: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "forty-seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$88,620;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$337,230;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Before the word "dollars" insert the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Chief of salary and allowance division and chief of appointment division, at $2,000 each; one;" and on page 70 of the bill, in line 25, strike out the word "clerks" where it first occurs in said line, and insert the word "clerk;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed by said amendment insert "sixteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four;" and on page 72 of the bill, in line 24, strike out the word "seven" and insert "eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 127: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$67,120;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 148: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$3,280;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 149: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretaries, respectively, of the Departments of State, of the Treasury, War, Navy, and of the Interior, and the Attorney-General, are authorized to make requisitions upon the Postmaster-General for the necessary amount of official postage-stamps for the use of their Departments, not exceeding the amount stated in the estimates submitted to Congress; and upon presentation of proper vouches therefor at the Treasury the amount thereof shall be credited to the appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the same fiscal year. And it shall be the duty of the respective Departments to inclose to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, in all official communications requiring answers, or to be forwarded to others, penalty envelopes addressed as far as practicable, for forwarding or answering such official correspondence."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 151: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 151, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"SEC. 4. That hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Executive Departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employés of whatever grade or class, in their respective Departments, not less than seven hours of labor each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order: Provided, That the heads of the Departments may by special order, stating the reason, further extend or limit the hours of service of any clerk or employé in their Departments, respectively, but in case of an extension it shall be without additional compensation; and all absence from the Departments on the part of said clerks or employés in excess of such leave of absence as may be granted by the heads thereof, which shall not exceed thirty days in any one year, except in case of sickness, shall be without pay."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the conference report was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the conference report:

The bill as agreed upon in conference appropriates $20,464,296.22, being $80,566.17 greater than as it passed the House, $175,033.33 less than as it passed the Senate, and $115,110.68 more than the appropriations for the current year, and $966,663.86 less than the estimates for 1884.

The principal items of increase made by the Senate and agreed to by the House managers of the conference are as follows:

House of Representatives, $4,666.67; State Department, $1,320; Register's Office, Treasury, $13,500; Navy Department, $1,400; Secretary Interior, office of, $7,980; Attorney-General, Interior Department, $6,350; General Land Office, $34,400; Indian Office, $3,000; Civil Service Commission (contingent), $5,000; Post-Office Department, $8,340.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I wish to inquire of the gentleman submitting this report what the conferees have done in regard to the provision of the House reducing the number of internal-revenue collectors.

Mr. CANNON. The bill as passed by the House reduced the number of those collectors to eighty-two. Under the present law there are one hundred and twenty-six. The Senate struck out the provision making the reduction, and after a full and free conference the Senate conferees refused to recede. A majority of the House conferees, if not all of them—and I certainly think I speak for those who signed the report—became satisfied that the Senate would not yield the point, and we yielded.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Then I understand you give up that point altogether?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly, we give up the point.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Then I hope the House will not agree to this report.

Mr. CANNON. It is but just, however, that I should say for my colleagues and myself that whatever our own convictions were about the matter (and I am frank to say in my opinion the action of the House was not wise), yet without reference to my individual opinions I have done what I could, and so did the other members of the conference committee, to carry out the wish of the House in this matter.

Mr. ATKINS. I have declined to sign the conference report, the main reason being that indicated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]—the fact that the Senate struck out the provision adopted by the House reducing the number of internal-revenue collectors from one hundred and twenty-six to eighty-two. I did not feel that I could sign the report, because I would do violence to the feelings of the minority side of the House, which I had the honor to represent on the conference committee. For that reason I refused to sign the report.

I may say that I voted for the amendment of the House, and my judgment is now the service would be better if we had reduced the number to eighty-two instead of letting them remain at one hundred and twenty-six. For that reason and some other minor ones I failed to sign the report.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I believe the Senate amendments increased this bill in the neighborhood of $260,000. We compromised on an increase of $80,000; that is, we reduced the increase by the Senate to that sum. And so far as the Treasury Department was concerned, the only basis of agreement which we could establish was that we would appropriate with reference to the law for the current year. The increase by the Senate was largely with reference to the Treasury Department. They insisted we ought not to attack the law of the present year, and when the day of adjournment was so near at hand, and with the absolute necessity there must be time for the enrollment of this very long bill or there would be a failure to pass it and therefore an extra session imminent, while we supported the view of the House on this question of collectors of internal revenue, we believed it was our duty to unite in this conference report and concur with this amendment in view of the large reduction made in the amounts carried by the Senate amendments. An extra session was altogether too threatening for us to hesitate on this question.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2156) for the relief of certain owners of the steamer Jackson; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 324) to provide for the deficiencies in the appropriations for salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the House after due consideration of the subject of these internal-revenue collectors, compromised with the opponents of the measure, and instead of reducing the number as contemplated by the original amendment, they accepted a compromise in the House fixing the number at eighty-two. Now, there does not seem to be any reason given why the Senate does not concur with us. The number of collectors is evidently too large, and I do not think the rejection of the conference report and the fact that the House insists upon its amendment will necessitate an extra session. I remember seven years ago, in 1876, when the number of internal-revenue collectors was reduced by the House we had the same trouble then and the same experience with the Senate we are undergoing now. The amendment was put on in the House, disagreed to by the Senate, and finally compromised and agreed to in the conference committee. Now, if the House means to stand by its action we can reject this conference report and ask for another conference. The Senate is bound to yield in this matter if we insist. And therefore I hope the House will insist and will reject this conference report, and insist on the Senate agreeing to our reasonable demands in the reduction of these internal-revenue collectors.

If I have any time left I will yield it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will insist on this amendment. I think it is somewhat singular that the power of the House should be disregarded in this instance, and especially by the Senate, when the Senate passes upon each one of these officers who may be nominated by the President, and each one of them is confirmed or rejected by the Senate; and the Senate, therefore, becomes, to a certain extent, a part of the appointing power. If it were not, moreover, for the fact which may be added to that, that it is well known that potent influences are exerted by Senators, with reference to the appointment of these officers as well as their confirmation, it might not be so indelicate on the part of the Senate to insist on this matter. But when we come to know, as we do know, that the House is the body which has the right to originate revenue measures; that it has in that connection to prescribe the mode by which that revenue may be raised; that it has in connection with that the greater interest of the two bodies in seeing that the raising of that revenue is adequately provided for—in the face of all these facts and in the face of the fact of supreme and certain necessity that these men are not necessary to the service, I think it is the duty of the House to stand by the proposition which it adopted and to refuse to consent to this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield for two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my entire approval of what has just been uttered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] and my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON]. We have here, sir, a great political power of large proportions, and it is growing larger daily. Its head is the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. We have in the last few months seen him taking a lively interest in making United States Senators. We see in the United States Senate to-day men, millionaires almost every one of them, who dictate to the President whom he shall appoint as collectors in their several States; and in terms they might also be said to dictate to the President, because they will not confirm one appointment unless he will make another appointment to suit this or that Senator. The time has come if we are going to have any real practical civil-service reform that we should begin the work of cutting down this army of useless internal-revenue collectors who are bossed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. HOGE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question. If we reduce the revenues $40,000,000 should we not reduce also the collectors of revenue in the same proportion?

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection to that. I think the great mistake of this Congress is that we have not wiped out the entire internal-revenue tax except upon whisky, and reduced the number of collectors to one-half the present force.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. A single word, Mr. Speaker, before I ask the previous question upon this conference report. I know there is much conflict in the House about internal-revenue taxation. I know there is much feeling in some parts of the country about the propriety of collecting the tax. I know further that the House did express the wish that these collectors should be reduced in number. I am not here to discuss the question as to whether the House was right or wrong. Gentlemen will recollect my own views about the matter when it was under discussion, and I need not stop to repeat those views at this time.

There is one difficulty, however, about gentlemen having their way in the House on everything in the shape of legislation. I am frank to say that I agree and ask sympathy with the views of the House. I am a part and a parcel of it, and want to enforce its views and wishes. But unfortunately, so far as having our own way is concerned in everything, the Constitution provides that there shall be a co-ordinate branch of the Legislature—the Senate.

It may be that the fathers when they made the Constitution made a great mistake in that; nevertheless we are living under that Constitution, and it is after all a fact that it requires the Senate to agree with the House before you can legislate. We have under the law one hundred and twenty-six internal-revenue collectors. The House says, "Let us cut them down." The Senate says, "We won't agree to it in any event." Now, then, it may be that it would be wise to send this report back and let the bill fail. I have frequently heard talk of that kind here. I have heard gentlemen in the last four days "thundering in the index" about letting bills fail, and yet I have seen them on the yea-and-nay vote take the back track when they were brought face to face with the question of letting it fail. I want to say that under the law the President has the power to consolidate these districts in the event we should amend the internal-revenue law, and he has the power anyhow when the good of the public service requires it.

Mr. BAYNE. But he will not do it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says he will not do it. If my friend from Pennsylvania was the House or Senate or the President, then things would be fixed about right. [Laughter.] I demand the previous question upon the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The question was taken,

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Let us have a division.

Mr. WHITE. I demand tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. We had better have the yeas and nays.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 111, not voting 59; as follows:

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to present a privileged report. I present the report of the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7314) "making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 20, 30, 35, 42, and 68.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 31, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 70, 71, 73, and 75, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Hereafter only one-half of the vacancies in the various grades in the staff corps of the Navy shall be filled by promotion until such grades shall be reduced to the numbers fixed for the several grades of the staff corps of the Navy by the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, and at the end of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give any additional pay to any such officer during the time of his service in the volunteer army or navy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 26, 27, and 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For the purchase and manufacture after full investigation and test in the United States under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy of torpedoes adapted to naval warfare, or of the right to manufacture the same, and for the fixtures and machinery necessary for operating the same, $100,000: Provided, That no part of said money shall be expended for the purchase or manufacture of any torpedo or of the right to manufacture the same until the same shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Navy after a favorable report to be made to him by a board of naval officers to be created by him to examine and test said torpedoes and inventions."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 12 of the bill, in line 12, after the word "dollars," insert the words: "of which sum $64,000 shall be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"But nothing herein contained shall prevent the repair or building of boilers for wooden ships, the hulls of which can be fully repaired for 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and material."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "dollars," insert the following:

"The execution of no contract shall be entered upon for the completion of the engines and machinery of either of these vessels until the terms thereof shall be approved by said board, who shall approve only contracts which may be to the best advantage of the Government, and fair and reasonable according to the lowest market price for similar work."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 18, strike out all after the word "report," in line 9, down to and including the word "under," in line 10 of the bill; and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"And in the event that such vessels or any of them shall be built by contract, such building shall be under."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 26, in line 12, before the word "ranges," insert the word "and;" and in the same line strike out the words "and so forth;" and the Senate agree to the same.

GEO. M. ROBESON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the naval appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the report, if adopted:

On amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6: Except some verbal changes, leaves the first paragraph of the bill as it passed the House, dropping out the following:

"Provided, That when vacancies occur hereafter in the Paymaster's Corps there shall be no original appointments to fill such vacancies, but promotions may be made according to existing regulations from those remaining in said corps. Officers in the line shall be detailed to perform the duties of paymasters under the same rules and regulations as are now required of paymasters, but such officers shall not be entitled to increased compensation in consequence of performing such duties."

On amendment 7: In lieu of the legislation in the bill in reference to examinations for promotion and filling vacancies in the line and staff of the Navy, provides that one-half of the vacancies in the staff corps may be filled by promotion until said corps is reduced below the number fixed by law.

On amendments 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13: Strikes out provision relative to promotions to the rank of rear-admiral and abolition of the grade of commodore, makes some verbal changes in the text of the bill, and provides for the care of Paul Hamilton's grave.

On amendments 14 to 21, inclusive: Verbal changes are made to perfect text of the bill.

On amendments 22 to 25: Provides for a board of six officers to examine and report to Congress which of the navy-yards is best adapted for a Government foundery, and makes verbal changes in text of the bill.

On amendments 26, 27, and 28: In lieu of the paragraph in the bill in reference to torpedoes inserts the following:

"For the purchase and manufacture, after full investigation and test, in the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, of torpedoes adapted to naval warfare, and for the fixtures and machinery necessary for operating the same, $100,000: Provided, That no part of said money shall be expended for the purchase or manufacture of any torpedo until the same shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Navy, after a favorable report to be made to him by a board of naval officers to be created by him to examine and test said torpedoes and inventions."

On amendments 29 and 30: Provides $800,000 for Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, and restores the clause relative to life-saving dress.

On amendments 31 to 37, inclusive: Appropriates $264,000 for maintenance of yards and docks, and makes $64,000 of the sum immediately available; gives $20,000 for contingent expenses and $24,000 for the civil establishment of the Bureau of Yards and Docks; appropriates $25,000 for contingent expenses of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and makes certain necessary verbal corrections in the text of the bill.

On amendments 38 to 41: Appropriates $1,100,000 for Bureau of Construction and Repair, and limits repairs on wooden ships to 20 per cent. of estimated cost of new ships.

On amendments 42 to 44: Limits cost of repairs to engines and machinery to 20 per cent. of estimated cost of new engines and machinery, except in wooden vessels, the hulls of which can be repaired for 20 per cent. of estimated cost of new ships of same character and size.

On amendments 45 and 46: Is an increase of $550,000 to complete the engines and machinery of all the double-turreted monitors, to which the House managers acceded with the proviso that the contracts for the same should be first approved by the naval advisory board and should be found to be for the advantage of the Government and fair and reasonable according to the lowest market price for similar work.

On amendments 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, and 52: Makes certain necessary verbal corrections in the text of the paragraph relative to the construction of the new steel cruisers, and provides that in the event they, or any of them, are built by contract, such building shall be under contracts with the lowest and best responsible bidders.

On amendments 53, 54, and 55: Provides for payment of civilian expert members of the naval advisory board, and that the appropriation for testing deflective turrets be immediately available.

On amendments 56 to 72, inclusive: Make slight verbal and other unimportant changes in the provisions relative to the Naval Academy and Marine Corps, which in the main decrease the appropriations for both.

On amendments 73 to 75: Makes verbal changes in section 2 of the bill and drops out the third and last section of the bill as it passed the House.

The total of the bill as agreed upon is $15,894,434.23, being $1,063,957.43 greater than the appropriations for the current year and $7,494,453.31 less than the estimates.

GEO. M. ROBESON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] moves that the House concur in the conference report.

The question was put on concurring in the report.

Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to be heard on this motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rose too late.

Mr. HISCOCK. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] will give an explanation. And I hope the House will not concur in this report, at least until an explanation is given.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask to be heard on the motion.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to know who moved to concur in the conference report?

The SPEAKER. The conference report was submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON].

Mr. ATKINS. Did the gentleman from New Jersey make any motion after the statement was read?

The SPEAKER. No, sir.

Mr. ROBESON. If I can be heard for a moment I wish to say, at the time the reading of the statement was concluded I was conversing with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS]. Neither of us knew the Clerk had concluded the reading. I desire the vote shall not be taken until an explanation is made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROBESON. A large majority of the amendments in this conference report are merely verbal. In some cases the Engrossing Clerk was not very accurate in his spelling, and errors of that kind have been corrected.

With regard to the legislation on the bill, the conferees on the part of the House receded from their disagreement to the Senate amendment striking out our provision with regard to commodores. The conferees on the part of the Senate receded from their provision with regard to the promotions. And we provided by an amendment that the engineers and staff corps should have the same rights of promotion that the line officers had.

With regard to the torpedo corps, Mr. Speaker, we have provided that no torpedo shall be purchased without full experiment and test in American waters. We have stricken out from the bill the name of Mr. Weeks, but we have given him a chance to compete and have a test; and if his torpedo is found to be the best, he will get the provision the House made for him.

The important change with regard to this bill is this: That whereas we in the House provided for the completion of the engines and machinery for one of the monitors, while the Senate thought we should not be particular, as they said, and select but one, in favor perhaps of one special contractor, and that parties in California, in Delaware, and in Philadelphia had equal rights, we agreed to provide an addition of $550,000 to complete the engines and machinery of all of them.

I now yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee, my colleague on the committee of conference [Mr. ATKINS].

Mr. ATKINS. I desire only two or three minutes.

I declined to sign the conference report, because I did not feel I was justified in doing so after the decided vote of the House upon the monitors. The engines and machinery of only one monitor were provided for, and $450,000 was appropriated for that purpose. This bill appropriates $1,000,000 to finish the engines and machinery of three of the monitors.

Mr. HOLMAN. Three?

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; three. It will take $350,000 or $375,000, on an average, to complete the engines and machinery for each monitor. I do not feel at liberty, representing the minority side of this House upon that bill, knowing as well as I did the opinions of the minority upon that subject, to sign this report. But for the fact that this appropriation is increased to $1,000,000 I should have signed the report so far as anything else in the bill is concerned. But, sir, I was not willing myself to sign the report, nor did I feel I would represent the wishes of the minority on this side of the House if I should do so. Consequently I withheld my signature.

I shall not argue the question. It is not necessary I should argue it.

Mr. RANDALL. How will you vote?

Mr. ATKINS. The question has been time and time again argued exhaustively in the House. It is for the House to decide now what it will do. So far as I am concerned, I shall not vote for the conference report, for the reason I have assigned; and that is the increase of the appropriation to the amount of $1,000,000 for the completion of the engines and machinery of three of the monitors.

Mr. ROBESON. I now yield to the gentleman from New York. How much time does he want?

Mr. HISCOCK. Five minutes.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe that so important a matter as the increase proposed of the appropriations in this bill of $550,000 for the completion of the engines and the machinery of the monitors is entitled to some little consideration from this House.

After the fullest discussion of this question, when this subject was under consideration in the House, it was resolved that we would give $450,000 for the completion of the engines and the machinery of one monitor. It was then asserted on the floor that to some extent this work was experimental. It was also said here that a certain amount ought to be given for the maintenance of the Navy; but there was no need that this work should proceed in connection with the other.

Now, the conference report comes in here seeking to start the work upon two, and I do not know but upon all the monitors, and the proposition is to increase the appropriation for that purpose $550,000. I for one am opposed to it. I believe that this proposition has never had the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations. It has only had such consideration as could be given to it by two members of the conference committee; or I should say two members of the committee of conference on the part of the House have concurred in it.

I do not complain of that, because it is usual upon questions of this kind for the conferees to take the responsibility of deciding. But I do say that because of the reason that it has had the consideration of only three members of this House, and as it involves an expenditure of $550,000, it should now receive a passing moment's consideration from the entire House.

I do not know but what upon this question we may be compelled to recede. I will say that I do not believe there is any danger of the failure of this bill if we pause a moment to consider this question. And I do not believe there is any danger of the failure of this bill if we do not adopt this conference report. The subject will then go back to the Senate and there will be a further consultation on it.

Although the finances of the country are now in a good condition, I believe that upon this branch of the service the money which the House bill originally appropriated for expenditures for that purpose is all that is required, or at least all that should be given for the next year. I am not entirely sure that all of that money can be expended during the next fiscal year; I doubt very much if it can be.

But I repeat what I said once before on this floor, that I am opposed to making appropriations for any branch of the service for fear that the party which will come into power in the next Congress may fail to give it.

Mr. ROBESON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I did not intend at any time during this session to participate in any controversy about the monitors. Rather than the monitors shall remain any longer, as they are and have been, a stumbling block to the American Navy, I would be willing, if the Committee on Appropriations think they know all about it, to have them bring in a bill providing that the monitors shall be taken out into mid-ocean and sunk out of sight forever.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is right.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. But when the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] rises here in his place and says that only three members of this House, and they members of the Committee on Appropriations, know anything about that matter, I beg to differ with him.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. I said that only three members of this House, so far as I know, were consulted with reference to this increase of appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I beg to say that the gentleman stated, as I understood him, that only three members of this House had investigated this subject.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I say that the Committee on Naval Affairs, though entitled to very little consideration here I know and feel, understand this subject quite as well as does the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAZELTON. And a great deal better.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. In regard to these monitors, there has been a great deal of odium cast upon them, and in consequence of that odium they have been heretofore an obstruction to the progress of the American Navy. But I stand here and say that I believe that no better vessels were ever constructed in the world. They are perfect in workmanship; they have cost a vast sum of money, and they ought to be completed or entirely removed from sight; and I do not care personally which way you put it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the gentleman think it a matter of any consequence?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Yes, I do; for we have now no coast defense. We have fourteen little, weak, single-turreted monitors, mounted with fifteen-inch smooth-bore guns, hardly worthy the name of coast defenders. These monitors when finished may be found to be among the very first ships in the world. And yet during eight or ten years this Congress has been haggling over the question whether they should be finished or not. This report of the committee of conference proposes an appropriation of a million of dollars, and no more, for their engines and machinery. Do we need the vessels? Ought we as a nation to be prepared for our own defense? There is not a gun mounted in the American Navy worthy the name of a gun, and no ships to carry guns, even if we had them.

Yet when we come here after so long a consideration of the subject of these monitors, after having finished one and put it afloat and found that she was no experiment, after we have launched the Puritan and found that she is a better vessel than she was thought to be, that she floats higher out of the water than was expected, that she floats more armor than she was designed to carry, it seems to me to be too late for any gentleman to feel called upon to get up here and defend these vessels simply because popular clamor has assailed them heretofore.

Mr. Speaker, I have suffered personally in my relations to the Naval Committee on account of these vessels; I have no personal love for them; but if it were the last act of my official life I would declare that in my opinion they are worthy to be finished in the best possible manner, and they ought to be finished as soon as possible.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the House committee provided for the sum which was thought to be necessary for finishing the engines and machinery of the Puritan. When that provision went to the Senate Senators on both sides of the Chamber said, "That is not right; you must treat all these men in the same way; it is not right at this time, with an overflowing treasury, that you should single out a particular ship and appropriate apparently in the interest of a particular contractor. California and the Pacific Coast need a monitor; the gentlemen in Philadelphia and the gentlemen from Wilmington have had these ships on their hands as long as other people." No less than six boards have reported that they were all right; no member of any one of the boards has ever reported or said that the engines and machinery of any of them were not right.

Criticisms have been made by some one or two members of some of the boards as to whether these monitors would float, whether they were to be efficient; but every board and every expert that has examined any of them has said that the engines and machinery were perfect in workmanship, of good material, would accomplish the purposes for which they were designed, and that the prices were moderate. The Senate believed, and they insisted for two days, that this was the right thing to do. This amendment was put on in the Senate by the united votes of Democrats and Republicans, Senators from Delaware, from California, from Indiana, and other Democratic Senators voting for it. It was carried in the Senate two to one. Now, if we are to finish these monitors at all, let us be fair to everybody. I am willing to do it. I have for myself no personal feeling or pride about it in any manner. I have passed——

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for the purpose of avoiding a misapprehension.

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the amendment as reported by the conference committee strike out the word "completing" as applicable to one of the monitors and provide for the construction of the engines and machinery of all the monitors, adding a million dollars for that purpose?

Mr. ROBESON. I do not understand that the word "completing" is struck out; possibly it may be, but there was no intention of doing that. We may as well be frank about this matter; there is no dispute about it; this provision is intended to finish the engines and machinery of all the monitors. It adds $550,000 out of an overflowing Treasury to complete the engines and machinery of these vessels which are necessary for our defense and power on both coasts—work which will take a year to do, which, unless we commence it now, may not be done in time of need; whereas the more expensive but far more expeditious part of the work, the putting on of the armor, can be done in sixty days. That is not attempted at all under this provision.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to ask the gentlemen whether, if this amendment be adopted, it will complete the Monadnock on the Pacific coast?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, sir. That is included in the estimate.

Mr. ATKINS. May I call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey to the report of Commodore Shufeldt and the other officers of the naval board, who made the estimate of the cost of the engines and machinery of these monitors? The board fixes the amount, for instance, for the Amphitrite——

Mr. ROBESON. The whole amount estimated is $1,119,000.

Mr. ATKINS. That is true.

Mr. ROBESON. That is the whole amount. The Senate conferees said, "If this is not enough, we have given $1,000,000 for the construction fund; let the Secretary of the Navy take the money out of that fund and finish the work."

Mr. HOLMAN. This is not an appropriation for the completion of any one, but is to continue the work on all.

Mr. ROBESON. It is for completing such of them as the advisory board may recommend to be completed. The House conferees insisted upon the insertion of a provision that the execution of no contract for these engines and machinery should be entered into except——

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman will allow me to say I believe there is no law that allows the taking of any part of the construction fund and applying it to these engines and machinery.

Mr. ROBESON. I think the Secretary of the Navy would have perfect liberty to use that fund for this purpose.

Mr. ATKINS. I should think not. It would be clearly a violation of the law.

Mr. ROBESON. That may be. He would only finish such as the advisory board might recommend. We have provided that the execution of none of these contracts shall be entered upon unless the naval advisory board find that they are fair and reasonable for the Government and at the lowest market price for similar work, the object being to prevent any combination on the part of a few ship-builders of the country to put up the price on the Government. No provision could be more carefully guarded. No appropriation is more needed. If it should turn out that these engines and machinery should not be needed for these monitors they will be suitable for any ship that we may have of that size.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say to the gentleman that I advised with the Secretary of the Navy on that subject and he told me this machinery and these vessels would be constructed—I can not tell how, but for vessels of this size there would be the concentration in the space in which they could be used.

Mr. ROBESON. All naval engines and machinery are concentrated in space.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have the authority of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. ROBESON. I consulted the Secretary of the Navy, too. I know he knew it exactly. These engines and this machinery, the more concentrated they are the better. The less room they take, the more concentrated and compact they are to develop power, so much the better. Then they are superior to others, and they will fit any ship and can be used in any ship of the same size. I know all about that thoroughly. This is just the sum that this House voted last year for these things, $1,000,000; and then the Senate said "No; we will not vote it now. We will send it to the advisory board to examine and wait until they report." And when the thing came back into the House I, on consultation with the Appropriations Committee, its chairman, and all its members, agreed to that, and I said in my place on the floor I did not care anything about it; it might be submitted to a thousand boards if necessary; but when that report came in approving of them, I would stand by it. It has come in approving them unqualifiedly, pronouncing them the best ships of their kind in the world, pronouncing these engines perfect and available for all naval purposes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman's remarks to the committee this evening convey to me the first intimation I have ever had this appropriates any money to build the engines and machinery of any one ship. I did understand we appropriated money to build a ship, but I did not understand there was anything in the bill which designated any one.

Mr. ROBESON. There is nothing in the bill, and I did not say so. I said that was the claim of the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I see no reason why that should be made,

Mr. ROBESON. I said it was made and that is all. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question recurred on the adoption of the report.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 54.

Mr. HISCOCK demanded tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. HISCOCK. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 103, nays 91, not voting 97; as follows:

Mr. CRAPO with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, with Mr. DEUSTER.

Mr. KELLEY with Mr. HEWITT of Alabama.

Mr. MASON with Mr. FORNEY.

Mr. CANNON with Mr. MOULTON.

Mr. BURROWS, of Missouri, with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. ALDRICH with Mr. UPSON.

Mr. WAIT with Mr. COVINGTON.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, with Mr. REAGAN.

On motion of Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ROBESON moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to submit a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the Senate bill No. 1821, prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home, located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The statement accompanying the report will be read.

The statement was read. It is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon Senate bill 1821, prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home, located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the report if adopted:

The conferees recommend that the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 10, the effect of which is to retain the board of commissioners in the management of the home.

Also, that the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 9, the effect of which will be to allow 3 per cent. instead of 4 per cent. to be paid upon funds of the home deposited in the Treasury.

Also, that the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 8, with an amendment the effect of which would be to require all of the officers of the home to be selected by the President of the United States.

Also, from its disagreement to amendment numbered 11, with an amendment the effect of which is to provide that the board of commissioners shall consist of the General-in-Chief, commanding the Army, the Surgeon-General, the Commissary-General, the Adjutant-General, the Quartermaster-General, the Judge-Advocate-General, and the governor of the home.

Also, that the House recede from its amendment numbered 12, with an amendment, the effect of which will be to extend the appropriation to the adjustment of all accounts in the Treasury Department belonging to the home.

The managers also agree to section 2 with amendment, the effect of which is to require the Inspector-General of the Army to make the inspection of the home provided for by law in person.

THOS. J. HENDERSON,
ANSON G. McCOOK,
EDW. S. BRAGG.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1821) entitled "An act prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home, located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 10.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 9.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 8 with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 7. That the governor and all other officers of the home shall be selected by the President of the United States, and the treasurer of the home shall be required to give a bond in the penal sum of $20,000 for the faithful performance of his duty."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendment numbered 11, with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 10. That the board of commissioners of the Soldiers' Home shall hereafter consist of the General-in-Chief commanding the Army, the Surgeon-General, the Commissary-General, the Adjutant-General, the Quartermaster-General, the Judge-Advocate-General, and the Governor of the Home; and the General-in-Chief shall be president of the board, and any four of them shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business."

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 12, with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 12. That the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury in the employment of additional clerical force to be used in adjusting the accounts in the Treasury Department of those funds which under the law belong to the Soldiers' Home."

That the House agree to section 2 with an amendment.

"SEC. 2. That the Inspector-General of the Army shall in person once in each year further inspect the home, its records, accounts, management, discipline, and sanitary condition, and shall report thereon in writing, together with such suggestions as he desires to make."

And agree to the same.

THOMAS J. HENDERSON,
ANSON G. McCOOK,
EDWARD S. BRAGG,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
W. J. SEWELL,
WADE HAMPTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to concur in the report of the committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The statement will be read.

It is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Army appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the conference report:

As agreed in conference the bill appropriates $24,681,350, being $1,734,104.10 less than the appropriations for the current year and $3,694,243.44 less than the estimates for 1884.

BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. C. BURROWS,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that there will be some statement of this matter. That report furnishes no information.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order against that report that it does not conform to the rules of the House. Under the rules the report should refer to each amendment and indicate the result of its adoption or rejection. Now, I know that in the action of the Senate there were a large number of amendments where legislation concerning the Army has been stricken out; and there is no allusion in the conference report to these facts.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have in my hand a written report at length in regard to this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directed the Clerk to read the accompanying statement, as is the custom. The report refers to the different numbers of the amendments.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to inquire of the Speaker if the place for that report is in the pocket of a member of the committee on conference instead of being submitted to the House?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The report which I hold in my hands contains all of the items on which there was a difference of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report if the gentleman desires it. The statement of the gentleman contains an intimation that is not true.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to say that that report has come from a member of the committee since the point of order was made; and when the Speaker says it is not true he is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submitted the report in the first instance.

Mr. BRAGG. I have seen just this moment the gentleman from Ohio pass the report over to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I went to the desk and got the report myself, when I found the Speaker had not directed it to be read, with the intention of explaining, if necessary, all of these points of difference. The gentleman is entirely in error.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; I am not. The report belongs there at the desk, and not in the pocket of a member.

The SPEAKER. This is taking the usual course in every respect.

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly this is taking the usual course to-night, when fifty are counted for no more than ten. I asked to have the report read and another paper was read in lieu of the report.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It was not read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. This is not in order. The statement accompanying the report has just been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand, the report of the conference committee has not yet been read.

Mr. BRAGG. Let the conference report be read.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee of conference will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7077) "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 7, 9, 18, 27, 30, 31, and 36.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 6, 8, 10, 12, 13, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 38; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$1,750;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment number 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed by said amendment, insert "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "line" in said amendment, insert the following: "And no more than thirty aids-de-camp shall be paid as such in addition to their regular pay in the line;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, insert the following:

"Provided, That vacancies that may hereafter occur in the Pay Corps of the Army in the grades of lieutenant-colonel and major by reason of death, resignation, dismissal, or retirement, shall not be filled by original appointment until the Pay Corps shall by such vacancies be reduced to forty paymasters, and the number of the Pay Corps shall then be established at forty and no more, and hereafter vacancies occurring in the Quartermaster's and Commissary's Departments of the Army may, in the discretion of the President, be filled from civil life."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "employés," where it occurs in said amendment, and in lieu thereof insert the word "clerks;" and the Senate agree to the same.

BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. C. BURROWS,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
P. B. PLUMB,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now I move the adoption of the report, and I will say a word in regard to it.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order against that report.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BRAGG. Will not the Speaker hear the point of order? My point of order is that the report does not show the changes made in the bill. It says in lieu of what is stricken out, particularly in reference to the Pay Corps, there shall be inserted as follows, but it does not state what is stricken out. It does not explain what has been taken from the bill and what has been substituted for it in the bill, so as to show how the bill will read after the change is made. The point of order is that it does not comply with the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not quote the rule. The rule provides that the statement accompanying a report of a committee of conference shall show the effect of the changes. The Chair is unable to discriminate against the report in that respect, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to call attention to a particular clause of the report. I know you have got the power, but I have the right to ask that the particular clause in the report be read in order to show the Speaker that he is mistaken in the decision he has made.

I refer to that part of the report which relates to the Pay Corps. The report gives no information whatever with reference to the amendment in regard to that. Neither does it give any information with regard to that part of the bill wherein we provided in the House that certain officers should no longer remain absent from their commands who have been absent more than three years.

There is another provision which provides that the number of aids-de-camp shall be reduced, and provides that the pay of the aids-de-camp shall not exceed a particular sum.

There is no allusion in that report anywhere to these provisions in the bill which were stricken out. They are only referred to as something having been stricken out, and in lieu thereof it is stated that something is inserted as follows.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] moves concurrence in the conference report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under Rule XXIX this report of the conference committee is required to be accompanied with—

A detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

My point of order is this: that the statement is expressed in merely general terms, and is not a compliance with the rule.

The SPEAKER. The same point of order was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG], and the Chair can not hear the same point of order repeated. The gentleman from Ohio moves to concur in the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. Under Rule XXIX, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read, I make the point of order that the statement read at the Clerk's desk is not a compliance with the rule.

The SPEAKER. That point of order the Chair has already heard and disposed of.

The question was put on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 42.

Mr. BRAGG and Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. The rule to which I refer—[cries of "Regular order!" "Object!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not be heard on that. Objection is made. The point of order ought not to be made more than three times at least.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 111, noes 38.

So the report of the committee of conference was concurred in.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

ELECTION CONTEST—COOK VS. CUTTS.

Mr. CALKINS. I now call up the contested election case of Cook vs. Cutts from the sixth Congressional district of Iowa.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order to move to adjourn now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too early to adjourn. [Laughter].

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the Clerk to read the resolutions reported from the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That M. E. Cutts was not elected as Representative from the sixth district of Iowa, and is not entitled to a seat on the floor of this House.

Resolved, That John C. Cook was duly elected as Representative from the sixth district of Iowa, and is entitled to a seat on the floor of this House.

Mr. CALKINS. In regard to this case, I desire to state that the Committee on Elections, after entering upon its investigation, came to the House with a resolution asking that the time be extended in order to enable the contestant to take further testimony, which was granted by the House. That testimony was not completed until July last. That accounts for the delay in the decision of this case.

The delay in the decision of the Frost and Sessinghaus case, which has just been decided by the House, was in consequence of the voluminous record, and, as was well stated, in consequence of the fight that was made, step by step, throughout the case.

Those two cases, with one other, that of Lee against Richardson, from the State of South Carolina, in which the majority of the committee have reported in favor of the sitting member, complete the work of the Committee on Elections for this Congress.

I now yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PAUL].

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALKINS. My entire time.

Mr. HAZELTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, as a member of the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAZELTON. I desire to inquire whether, if we should adjourn now, this case would not come up in the morning as unfinished business, to be disposed of at that time?

The SPEAKER. It would come up when called up.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire now, with the permission of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PAUL], to ask whether any arrangement can be made with reference to the time desired for debate on either side of this case.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I will answer the gentleman that on our side we will be willing to conclude this discussion in fifteen minutes for and fifteen minutes against the report.

Mr. CALKINS. I will ask my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY], what time he will want?

Mr. RANNEY. I will have to take an hour, and there are two other gentlemen on the committee who will want from half an hour to an hour each.

Mr. CALKINS. I will submit to the House and to my colleagues on the Committee on Elections whether or not an hour on each side, which was the time granted in the other case decided to-night——

Mr. RANNEY. That time was extended an hour.

Mr. CALKINS. Whether an hour on each side will not be sufficient.

Mr. RANNEY. It would be impossible for us to present our side in less than two hours. It would be cruelty to animals to ask us to do so to-night.

Mr. CALKINS. I think that an hour on each side is enough, and I give notice that as at present inclined I shall call the previous question at the end of that time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Allow me to make a suggestion.

Mr. CALKINS. What is it?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is that an hour on each side be allowed for debate, with the understanding that no vote shall be taken on this question until to-morrow morning.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; decide it to-night.

Mr. CALKINS. As for the present it does not seem possible to arrive at any understanding in reference to the time to be allowed for this case, I will yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PAUL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, fortunately this case admits of comparatively little discussion; it is narrowed down to one point. In the short time which I shall ask the attention of the House I shall address my remarks to the single point on which this case turns.

There is nothing in this case similar to what we have had in other contested-election cases. There is no charge here of ballot-box stuffing or of dishonest counting. The whole case turns on the single question as to the legality of about 20 or 23 votes.

Mr. Cutts, the contestee in this case, was declared elected and received the certificate on a majority of 9 votes. The contestant, Mr. Cook, served notice of contest on Mr. Cutts, and claimed that there were certain votes which had been cast for Mr. Cutts that were illegal and fraudulent. Mr. Cutts filed his answer and claimed that certain votes that had been cast for the contestant were illegal and fraudulent.

The result of that part of the contest is about this: The contestant shows that there were 7 illegal votes cast for the contestee, and the contestee shows that there were 7 or 8 votes cast for the contestant that were illegal. In the consideration of this question these fraudulent votes were excluded by the committee; and the case, as I said before, turns upon the 15 or 20 illegal votes claimed to have been cast for the contestee.

Those illegal votes were cast in this wise: at one of the polling precincts, Muchachinock, there was a coal-mine, and in that coal-mine were employed a number of colored men from the State of Virginia. They went there in different lots. One crowd went in March, 1880; another went in April, 1880; another went in May, 1880; another in July, and another in September, and another in October of the same year. Now, the laws of the State of Iowa require a residence of six months in order to give a man the right to vote.

All the men who went there prior to May, 1880, had a right to vote. All who went there after the 1st day of May had no right to vote. The testimony in this case shows that of those men who went there twenty-three arrived after the 1st of May, 1880, and they were voted at the election in November following, not having been there six months. Therefore they had no right to vote. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is a fair statement of the case. That is the issue involved here.

I do not know what position will be taken by the minority of the committee who make a report in this case. I believe there are but two. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] has made a report, and an able report, because he is an able man; but he will be unable to show this House that the votes which were cast by these men who went to Iowa after the 1st of May, 1880, are legal votes.

Mr. RANNEY. You had better show that they are illegal.

Mr. PAUL. We do show that they are illegal; and as to the proof, we prove by the man who took these people to Iowa, Major Shumate, that twenty-three of them went there after the 1st day of May, 1880. Not only is this proof given by Major Shumate, but he is corroborated and sustained by overwhelming testimony in the cause. We show he is correct in his statement by the letters which he wrote to his family after the arrival of these people. We show it by the testimony of the railroad companies who carried them to Iowa. What is stronger still, not a single witness is brought to contradict Major Shumate as to the time these people went there. When we sent out subpœnas to bring in witnesses to show the time that these men went to Iowa we could not find any of them except two; but when we asked them the question, "Did you vote in the last election?" they said, "We prefer not to answer that question." They not only refused to tell how they had voted, but whether they had voted at all.

An attempt has been made in this case to break down the testimony of this chief witness, Major Shumate, but it utterly and completely failed. He is corroborated by facts and circumstances which could not be falsified. He is sustained by letters which he wrote home to his wife as to the time these people arrived. He is sustained by testimony of the railroad officers; he is sustained by the records of the railroad office; he is sustained by the drafts he drew to pay the fare of these people; drafts which he drew on Mr. Cutts's own bank. And he is sustained by the fact that not one witness was called to contradict him. There is a feeble attempt made to break him down on his general reputation for veracity. You know what that amounts to. Twenty or thirty colored people were called to testify to the fact that Major Shumate was not a man of veracity. Twenty or thirty colored men came up and said that he was a man of veracity. In addition to that, eighteen white men of Oscaloosa, the town in Iowa in which he lived, came up and said he is a reputable man, a man of veracity, a man to be believed.

Now, I can anticipate from the report made by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] the points that he is going to make in this case in order to break down Major Shumate's testimony. The first point he makes is that Major Shumate's memory is a bad one, that he is inaccurate in his statement of dates. Well, a man may not be able to fix a certain day; and Major Shumate does not profess to fix in his testimony any date when these people left Virginia; but he tells you that a certain man left in March, certain other men in April, certain other men in May, others in July, and others in September, others in October. If he had undertaken to fix a certain date you might have suspected the inaccuracy of his testimony; but he was so cautious and prudent as only to declare the month in which these people arrived. Then the books of the coal company, this company for whom these men were employed, show the month in which they arrived. There can not be in my judgment any question as to the fact that these men had not lived in Iowa a sufficient length of time to be allowed to vote in November, 1880.

At the risk of reputation let me say that Major Shumate is supported by letters written to his wife at the time of his arrival. The contestant here claims that the first installment of these people landed in Iowa on the 15th of May, 1880, fourteen days too late to make them legal voters at the November election following. The railroad records show that this crowd of colored people landed there on the 15th day of May.

Mr. RANNEY. I can save the gentleman and the House half an hour's talk perhaps. If he will look at my report and will remember what I said in committee he must understand that I concede six men who came in a crowd on the 15th of May, because that matter is of no consequence to the case.

Mr. PAUL. There were seven in that crowd. The gentleman concedes them, as I understand.

Mr. RANNEY. If the gentleman will look at my report he will see how I put it.

Mr. PAUL. The gentleman has made several reports. Does he refer to the supplemental report or to the other?

Mr. RANNEY. Both.

Mr. PAUL. I am glad the gentleman concedes that point. Then the only question between us is as to the time when the other sixteen arrived. And the testimony on that point is overwhelming that they arrived not with this crowd in May, but came in July, came in September, came in October, all of them arrived in Iowa after the seven men arrived there on the 15th day of May. I am glad to know you conceded that much.

Mr. RANNEY. You can not have read my report if you did not know it before.

Mr. PAUL. Why, that was the fight—that was the issue you made before the committee. That was the only point you made. When we showed you these people arrived on the 15th of May, then you said there were two crowds; one got there, you said, on the 1st day of May and the other on the 15th of May. Now you come in and concede these men got there on the 15th of May, but were not legal voters. Then let those seven stand aside, and that reduces Mr. Cutts's majority down to 2. But what are you going to do with the other 16 which arrived there in July, and in September, and in October? What is the proof? We narrow it down to 16 votes, 2 majority you have for Cutts. What are you going to do with the other 16? There is Shumate's testimony, the man who gathered these people up in Virginia and carried them out to Iowa, swearing they went in July and in September and in October, all after the 15th of May, 1880. What testimony do you bring to contradict him? When we called for these people themselves to come and testify we could not find them. Subpœnas were returned non est inventus. You know we got after all of them; we found but two and put them on the stand and asked them, "How did you vote in the last election?" And they said, "I prefer not to answer that question."

And you never tried to contradict Major Shumate except as to the May crowd. You called all these people as witnesses who had voted illegally, and knew they had no right to vote, and every mother's son swore they got there on the 1st day of May. A nice calculation, because if they got there on the 2d day of May they would not have been there six months to entitle them to vote. You called all of that May crowd, but you never called a single witness as to anybody who came in July or September or October. You had them all there—your own partisans—under your own control, but not a man did you bring to contradict the statement of Major Shumate as to the time they got there.

Now I will leave this case here with this, the opening statement. I do not desire to discuss it any further. This case was thoroughly discussed before the committee. It was carefully examined. I do not wish to detain the House longer in this discussion, if I were so disposed—but I will not do that. I will not trespass upon the sense of justice and of right that has marked the Republican side of this House in these contested-election cases. I will not offend your sense of justice by asking you to apply the same rules to Northern contested-election cases that you have applied to the Southern people. I have stood here by you in your policy of investigating these election cases, because it was right; not because it was the policy of the Republican party, but because it was the policy of justice and of honesty. And I have assumed as much responsibility in these contests as any man on this floor, and I do not regret it. I rather like responsibility, and the brief record I have made in this Congress I am proud of; prouder of the votes I cast on this floor to seat men whom I believe to be honestly elected than of anything else connected with my short Congressional career, except one thing, and that is the indorsement that my constituents gave me in the last campaign, because I had stood up for honest election and an honest count.

It may be the dream of a visionary, but I indulge the hope that I shall live to see the day when the claims of a Representative to a seat in this House shall be determined independent of partisan feeling and partisan bias, when it shall be the eager, earnest, honest desire of those who are to pass judgment upon conflicting claims to the right of representation on this floor, to ascertain the legally-expressed will of the constituent body, and to voice that will with an honesty and purity of determination that shall leave no doubt of its justice. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I leave this question with you. It is your concern as much as it is mine. Here is a case in which I believe that Mr. Cook was honestly elected; that there were illegal votes cast for Mr. Cutts that ought to be excluded I think; and I say it is the crowning honor of the Republican party in this Congress that it has stood up for fair elections, and has declared before the country there shall be honest elections throughout this Union. This is the first case that has been presented from the North, and I expect the Republican side of this House to apply the same rules to a Northern case they did so rigidly, and I say so justly, enforce in Southern elections. [Applause.]

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would be the last man in this world to stand here and advocate the cause of this contestee [Mr. CUTTS] if I did not believe that he was duly elected and is entitled to retain his seat. It is undoubtedly true that this contestant if he was elected should now be given his seat, whatever may be the consequence. But if he has to be given a seat at all it must be given to him as a matter of right, of strict right, and not as a matter of grace or favor. If I wanted to oblige my good friend from Virginia, and I could feel that I was doing right when I did so, I would be glad to seat the contestant; but I can not do it, and I do not believe the House can do it. I do not believe the House can do it, because it is not right, and for one I am not willing to put myself on the record as sustaining the case presented here by the contestant. I do not believe that if a jury had found the facts as stated in the majority report there is any court under Heaven, certainly in this country, that would not in the exercise of its conservative power set it aside as against evidence and without evidence.

Now, sir, to come at once to the case in hand: The contestee was awarded his certificate on a majority of 101. It appears that in two townships the returns were defective, but the actual vote has been proved as it was cast, and being allowed, the majority of contestee is reduced to 9.

That is the position in which it stands on conceded facts to this point. The contestant concedes and the evidence shows 8 illegal votes at least cast for the contestant. Eight are conceded, and the names are given in the majority report. I pass to the controverted issues.

The majority report shows this: They find 32 illegal votes to have been cast for the contestee, twenty-three of them are the votes of colored persons, seven of them are in a miscellaneous class, one of them was an alleged imbecile, another one is said not to have resided in the township where he voted, but in another township within the same district, and five of them are said not to have been citizens because not naturalized, and then there are said to have been two colored voters more who came from the Albia mines. The majority report finds only a majority of fourteen for contestant, and the report which I have presented in behalf of the minority finds a majority of fourteen the other way. So that the case comes down to close quarters.

Unfortunately the everlasting negro is brought into it, but there is no pretense that the colored men were taken to Iowa for any improper purpose, but for legitimate business and for laudable purposes as laborers in mines.

Mr. MOULTON. And were used fraudulently after you got them there.

Mr. RANNEY. Wait until I get through and see, and the House will judge as to that. It is not so.

There is, however, another question that meets us on the very threshold of the case, not considered or reported upon in the majority report. In my judgment this question determines the case of itself. But before treating that issue I wish to say, as preliminary to that consideration, I was on the sub-committee that investigated this case. My associate from Iowa [Mr. THOMPSON] who is absent now on account of illness of some relative, as I understand, was also upon that sub-committee. We tried no less than six times to get a quorum of that committee together to hear this case, but rarely ever got more than one or two members. In addition to that we did not ever succeed in getting a full hearing of the case. The contestee was ill and had no counsel; but finally the case had to be brought before the whole committee for decision, without any formal report from the sub-committee. When it was taken up and decided there, five members were absent or did not vote, and a bare majority passed upon the case there. Mr. THOMPSON, who was to make a report of the case to the committee, had been compelled to leave and was not present.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Let me ask the gentleman, how did the vote stand in the committee?

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri. I was just about to ask the same question.

Mr. RANNEY. Eight in the majority.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. But eight voted for the majority report, and two against it, and one declined to vote. That is not a bare majority.

Mr. RANNEY. My statement is correct, that in the committee a bare majority voted in favor of the contestant. There are fifteen members in all and it took eight to make a majority of the whole committee. I did not undertake to say anything else. Seven would not have been a majority. There were two on the other side that voted, and the rest were not there and did not vote at all.

Mr. AIKEN. How would they have voted?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know.

Mr. FLOWER. This is another question of eight to seven, I suppose?

Mr. RANNEY. I call it a majority vote, although, as I have said, it is a bare majority. Eight voted and the rest were not there, and you may discover for yourself how they would have voted. I know nothing about that. I am stating the facts as I know them.

I do not mean to reflect upon the absent ones because of their absence. They know what their reasons were; I do not. The point which I am now to consider was never argued or considered in committee and is not reported upon in the majority report at all. It is treated by me in the minority report. My friend [Mr. PAUL] has not touched upon it in what he has said. I invite the attention of the House to the same.

The facts are not in dispute. There were two precincts in which some 34 ballots were found in the wrong box, and which were counted for contestant; 25 were in one precinct and 8 in another. There was 1 ballot cast for Mr. Cutts, which was found in the wrong box also. There were three boxes—one designed for the ballots for State and county officers and member of Congress, they being all on one ticket; another for township officers; and another was for ballots cast upon the constitutional amendment, called the amendment box.

The ballot for Mr. Cutts alluded to was found in the amendment box. The others were found in the township box—25 in one precinct and 8 in another precinct. The managers excluded the vote cast for Mr. Cutts and counted those cast for contestant. If this was wrong contestee was elected at all events, and the other questions become immaterial.

In my opinion none of these votes found in the wrong box should have been counted, and that they should now be rejected.

Mr. HOOKER. Who put them in the box, the electors or the managers?

Mr. RANNEY. I will answer that when I come to it in order; but wish now to show what is the law, and what are the precedents in this House on the subject. Gentlemen must remember they are making precedents in this case for the future. We are deciding a question of law which is independent, important and independent of all. It is not a new question. There are two precedents on the records of the House and which have gone into the books, and there is a well-considered case decided by the highest court in Michigan.

The precedents and case referred to and considered are in McCrary on Elections, sections 130, 131, 132, 133. What was held in Washburn vs. Ripley is thus stated by Mr. McCrary. I will read only brief extracts:

> In the lower House of Congress it has been held that ballots deposited in the wrong box were lost and could not be changed to the right one, either by the voter or the officers of election. The same question again arose in the House in the more recent case of Newland vs. Graham. In that case one of the judges of election testified, he and the other judges finding a few ballots had been placed by mistake in the wrong box, had them changed. There was no doubt as to the mistake, or that the judges acted fairly and in good faith. The committee submitted to the House the question whether these ballots should be counted, at the same time, however, intimating very clearly what their opinion was. In this case that recommendation of the committee was not adopted by the House, or at least adopted only in part, the seat being declared vacant, while the committee recommended the seating of the contestant.

These are two precedents of long standing in this House; and there is not one that I can find to the contrary.

There is a well-considered case in the eleventh Michigan Reports, of The People on the relation of Michael Hayes vs. George Bates. I will read from the head-note. It was held as follows:

> Where a city and State election were both held at the same time, under the charge of the same inspectors, and 7 ballots for city officers were found at the closing of the poll in the "State" box, and the circumstances of the case made it reasonably certain that these ballots were in good faith put in by electors, who did not put in other ballots for city officers at the same election, it was held that they were properly counted by the inspectors.

Now, I will read one sentence more from the opinion of Judge Campbell—a dissenting opinion. I take the law, you will see in a moment, as held by the majority of the court in this case. I do not claim anything else. Judge Campbell says this:

> But the fact that such an occurrence has happened, either by the design or mistake of these voters, and that it is impossible by any means to ascertain who they were, illustrates to my mind the necessity of adhering to the rule of counting only such ballots as are cast into the proper ballot-box, without attempting to correct what can only be supposed to be an error by means purely conjectural.

Now, what does McCrary say? And it is a doctrine which I have adopted, that if the ballots are put into the wrong box by the design or fraud of the inspector the voter should not be deprived of his ballot; that I grant. And if it is a pure mistake of the voter, and it is so shown and proved affirmatively, then I grant the vote should be counted. I take the extreme view or the most favorable view, as intimated by Mr. McCrary, as you will see when I call your attention to the facts in this case. McCrary says:

> It should be shown that the ballots were handed in by legal voters and deposited in the wrong box by accident or mistake or fraud of the officer, and the facts and circumstances tending to establish or to go to disprove this proposition should be brought out in the evidence.

Mr. HOOKER. Your own authority puts you out of court.

Mr. RANNEY. No, it does not.

Mr. HOOKER. Go on; I will show you that it does.

Mr. RANNEY. If so, then I will yield the case. The point is this: if the ballots were put into the wrong box by the wrongful act of the inspector, they should be counted; and if they are put into the box by the innocent mistake of the voters they should be counted. But it is not enough that you should show the fact that the ballot appears in the wrong box; you must show the mistake, or the accident, or the fraud by which it was put into that box. If this is not proved affirmatively this House should reject the ballots counted for the contestant.

Mr. MOULTON. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. RANNEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOULTON. Is it not the rule that the presumption is that every officer performs his duty?

Mr. RANNEY. That is undoubtedly the rule of law, that the officers of election are presumed to act rightly and to do their duty. That is the case here. The evidence here is that the officers took the votes and put them into the boxes as the electors themselves directed.

Mr. MOULTON. I deny that.

Mr. RANNEY. It is true.

Mr. MOULTON. That is not in the evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. I thought you had not read the record when you made your report.

Mr. BREWER. Will the gentleman refer us to the page of the record that proves that fact?

Mr. RANNEY. One of the witnesses is asked the question and he states distinctly that the officer puts the votes in the box where the voter directs they shall be put. On page 220 of the testimony, cross-interrogatory 3, the witness is asked, "Does the voter or one of the judges place the voter's ticket in the box?" And the witness answers, "From what I have noticed one of the judges, by the direction of the voter, places the ballot in the box indicated by the voter."

Mr. MOULTON. That is a general rule which is followed in the election; that is not in this case.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is any evidence in this record that shows that these officers were guilty of any frauds, I would like to know it. The facts in question occurred in two precincts; in one of them the three inspectors were all Democrats, in the other there were two Democratic inspectors and one Republican, and all the four clerks were Democrats. Now, if you say that your Democratic friends, the officers at that election, fraudulently took those ballots and put them into the wrong boxes, then say so if you want to; I do not say it.

Mr. MOULTON. Or put them there by mistake.

Mr. RANNEY. By mistake! The fact is clear and the evidence undisputed that ballots were found in the wrong boxes. The evidence here is clear and undisputed that the way the votes were cast in this election was this: They have there the secret ballot; the voter approaches the box with his ballot folded, or if it is not folded he is required by the manager of the poll to fold it before it is deposited; when he has folded it he hands it to the manager, who puts it into the box designated. The manager has no right to open the ballot to see for whom it is cast. The ballot is secret, and the manager has no right to see or know who it is for. The manager could not determine from the ballot what box the ballot should go into unless he violated the rights of the voter. The process of voting is plain. There were three ballot-boxes, each labeled to show for what class of ballots they were designed, so the voter could see and know for himself.

The voter steps up with a folded ballot and hands that folded ballot to the man in charge of the box for the ballots for State ticket described, and it is put in that box. The voter may have in his other hand another ballot of the same kind, and hand that to the man in charge of the township box, and he must put it into that box; and he may have still another ballot of the same kind, and hand it up to be put into the constitutional-amendment box.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri. Tell us what were the facts, and not what might have been.

Mr. RANNEY. The facts are, first, these: there is nothing in this whole record to show any accident, mistake, or design in the case of the ballots that were found in the wrong box. There is nothing in the case except this: that when these boxes were opened there were twenty-five in one and twelve in another, the township box and the other box with Judge Cook's name on it, and the managers counted all of them as though they had all been in one box. Now, there is not a tittle of evidence in this case to explain how that happened. If there is I ask the gentleman to point it out.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does not the poll-list show that the ballots corresponded with the whole number of names on the list?

Mr. RANNEY. We have not the poll-lists.

Mr. HOOKER. Why did not you have them?

Mr. RANNEY. It was for contestant and not the contestee to show that it was by mistake, or accident, or design; otherwise the ballot is not to be counted under the law as cited.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. RANNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Does not every witness swear on that subject that the number of ballots in the boxes did not exceed the number of names on the poll-list—did not even reach the number?

Mr. JACOBS. There were two more on the poll-list.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is any such thing in the record I have not seen it. I am sure that no poll-list is in the record or its contents proved.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I can turn the gentleman to it without any trouble.

Mr. RANNEY. If the gentleman will let me alone, I will state what is in the record. I do not wish to be interrupted. I shall deal fairly with this question.

Remember it must be shown in proof affirmatively that these tickets got into the box by accident, mistake, or fraud. If you say there was fraud on the part of the managers, I have answered that assumption. Was it mistake on the part of the voter? No, so far as the evidence appears. In Warrington Township, where there were eight or twelve of these cases, there is not a particle of evidence on the subject except that in one instance a witness is asked if it is not a common thing to get a vote in the wrong box. He says, "I should not think it was a common occurrence." In case of the other precinct one witness answered, "It has been done." But are we to say that because it is a common thing to do wrong, therefore it is right, and changes the rule of law? Men may make mistakes; but it must be shown that there was a mistake. If the poll-list were produced, and it should appear how many men voted on that day, that would be one fact. But we have not got that at all as they had in the case from Michigan cited. The only evidence that can be relied upon at all is that of Mr. Baxter, one of the managers, to whom this question was put:

When you found State tickets in the township box, did you not find an equal number of township tickets in the State box?
Answer. No; we did not.

If a man made a mistake; if, when he went up to vote, he got his township ticket in the State box and his State ticket in the township box, you would say they had been interchanged possibly by mistake. But the evidence does not show that this was the case, but the contrary thereof.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but I have the testimony on this point.

Mr. RANNEY. If the gentleman will refer me to it I will read it,

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Page 214.

Mr. RANNEY. That is where I am reading.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Page 236, first cross-interrogatory, and page 265; then interrogatory 9 on page 214.

Mr. RANNEY. I have all those references, and will take up the evidence. Is there anything else the gentleman refers to.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Pages 215, 216, and 217.

Mr. RANNEY. What is the evidence?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. To answer that I would have to read the evidence in each case.

Mr. RANNEY. If those are your references, I am coming to all of them. The first fact I have shown is that there was not an accidental interchange of ballots, because there is no witness who says that any man going up to vote got his ticket into the wrong box. The presumption is that a man would vote both tickets. It is true that one witness gives the number of votes for Mr. Cook and the number of votes for Mr. Cutts; but that does not settle the question. A part of those votes may have been the double votes in question. If the poll-list were produced and the number of votes counted for Mr. Cook corresponded with that, what would it show? A man may have put one set of votes into one box and another set into the other and they may both have been counted. There would be but one name on the poll-list, though the votes would be doubled.

It may be said that if a man states what his vote was, that explains it; but it explains nothing. He might have put the same vote into three boxes, while only one man's name would appear on the poll-list. You have no right to conclude that a man would vote for only one set of candidates. The probability is that a man would feel as much interest in town officers as any other. If a man wanted to commit fraud, can you point out any easier way to do it than by voting for the same officer on three sets of tickets, one put in each box?

Mr. SPRINGER. But the aggregate vote would show more votes for Congressman than there were voters, which is not the fact in this case.

Mr. RANNEY. It does not appear how many voters there were.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does.

Mr. RANNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can read the evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. I now come to the ninth interrogatory. This is the next point I was going to consider; I am glad the gentleman is satisfied so far as I have gone. I can and will read now the only evidence which the learned gentleman can refer to:

Interrogatory 9. What were the entire number of votes in said precinct at said election?
Answer. Either 503 or 505. I am not positive about the exact vote.

He was not asked how many votes were cast or the highest number of votes cast for any one man; but he was asked how many votes there were in the precinct. He does not remember the exact vote in the precinct. But what does that prove? Suppose there were thirty-three men in that precinct who did not vote at all, and thirty-three Democrats who cast double votes. They could not have had a better opportunity to do that, and the only reasonable probability on the evidence is that this was so.

There is no poll-list or any evidence to show how many men voted that day at all except the number of votes counted. If there is any other evidence, let us see it.

You have not a single fact or circumstance to show accident or mistake; the mere fact that the ballot is in the wrong box is held to be no evidence or not enough. A guess or conjecture will not do, but the proof must be adduced to show affirmatively a mistake or fraud. The authorities are very clear. The precedents as they stand in this House are to the effect that even if the inspector knows there has been a mistake he has no right to take out the vote and change it, or let the voter take it and change it. The court of Michigan say that the fact of a vote being found in the wrong box is not sufficient; you must show affirmatively how the vote got there, and that there was a mistake on the part of the voter or a fraud on the part of the inspectors. There is not a particle of evidence of this kind in the present case. I have alluded to all that the gentlemen has pointed out.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I have not pointed out the fiftieth part of it, except by page, and the gentleman has not referred to any of that. I shall refer to it when I take the floor. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman. He has not read a fiftieth part of the evidence on this point.

Mr. RANNEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if this case is going to be determined on assertions and counter-assertions, we ought to know where we are. If gentlemen will read the testimony from pages 213 to 220, they will find all there is on the subject. There is not a particle of evidence tending to explain in the slightest degree as to the votes in Warren Township, or to show any mistake or fraud. There is no presumption about it. The presumption is that a voter intended to do what he did do. Accident or mistake is not to be presumed, but must be shown, as McCreary says in section 132:

The party who, in case of a contest, claims that ballots found in the wrong box should be counted, should be put to the proof that such ballots were fairly and honestly cast by legal voters.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. RANNEY. What time have I left? I am willing to go on to-night and finish, if that be the desire.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move the House do now adjourn. [Cries of "No!"]

Mr. WHITE. With the consent of the House, I will move we take a recess until 10 o'clock.

Mr. RANNEY. I am willing to yield to an adjournment if that be the wish of the House.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. How long does the gentleman desire?

Mr. RANNEY. There are three other gentleman who want half an hour apiece.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. How much time do you want?

Mr. RANNEY. An hour.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. How much time has the gentleman left?

The SPEAKER. He has thirty minutes. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BAYNE. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. ATHERTON. That is not good faith.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to a motion to adjourn?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, he does.

Mr. RANNEY. I yield to the motion to adjourn. I think the House ought to adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the House will not adjourn, but will settle this case to-night. To-morrow we will have the tariff bill up, and there will be no time to consider this case.

Mr. WHITE. Debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 49.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. RANNEY. If I am right, and I desire to be on the facts stated, taking the law to be in the most favorable light for contestant, the contestee was duly elected.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to indicate some time when he proposes to close his side of the case.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not hear what the honorable gentleman from Mississippi said. I propose to proceed in my own way and in my own time. If the House compels us to sit here to-night at this late hour, I must argue this case in the best way I can under the circumstances.

Now, to restate it: The fact that ballots are found in the wrong box standing alone is conclusively stated by the best authorities that they should be rejected. I repeat, you are not to presume it was by accident or mistake or fraud, but you must find it affirmatively proved to have been such. That is the most liberal doctrine as qualified by the author cited. The law is founded in reason as a safeguard in the interest of pure elections and to prevent fraud, and its principle is a vital one. I say again, there is nothing to show it was by accident or mistake, and not perfectly consistent with fraud; and, notwithstanding what is asserted, I respectfully challenge any man on this floor to cite anything from the record which relieves the case from the condemnation which the law imposes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I pass to another class of votes. We are coming to more minute detail, which may be important if the contestant is not already disposed of by the other, which I have discussed at such length. There is a miscellaneous class of votes. I see that the majority in their report state a man by the name of Patrick O'Connor, who voted for contestee, was an imbecile. What is the evidence? They call a farmer—not a physician, not an expert—and he says that he had the appearance of a man of unsound mind, that he stuttered and spluttered and did not seem to understand. And that is the only evidence they refer to, and that is about the whole substance of it. Another man of the same name in 1875 was under guardianship, we are told. There is no evidence he was the same man, but I presume he was. What is the state of the facts? Just think of it. A lawyer by the name of Bowles and another man by the name of Havens, respectable and intelligent men, took that alleged imbecile before Judge Blanchard, of the circuit court, in October, the month preceding this election, and signed as a witness and swore to the requisite certificate to get him naturalized, and the judge, Blanchard, administered the oath, and gave him his certificate of naturalization. These men who took him there were political friends of the contestant, Greenback Democrats. They knew him intimately and well, lived in the same town, and they took him before the judge of the circuit court and swore to the facts, and the judge administered the oath and naturalized him, and he received his certificate, and about a fortnight after that cast his vote, and no man in that township where he was so well known challenged his vote.

He voted for the contestee, and that, I presume, they think is sufficient evidence of his insanity or imbecility. If he had voted the other way contestant would not perhaps have set up this claim, and he would have been held to be a sound and a sane man. Indeed, the witnesses who got him naturalized do not swear that he was an imbecile.

Mr. BRUMM. Let me ask the gentleman if the question of insanity is a question pertinent in the naturalization of any person? That issue was not tried at all.

Mr. RANNEY. Imbecility. Do you suppose that any respectable man would take a driveling idiot, as you would have us believe this man to have been, before the judge of the circuit court and swear as they are required to swear in that case. I wish I had it here to show you what was required of the witnesses and the subject.

Mr. BRUMM. But the gentleman does not answer the question.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not believe that any man would take an insane person, an idiot, an imbecile to a judge to have him naturalized. And to get him naturalized for the purpose of getting him to vote for the contestant.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. He could not take the oath if he was insane.

Mr. RANNEY. He could not take the oath; an imbecile or an insane person could not take the oath because it would not be binding upon him. He could not understand it. The law presumes that a man is competent to understand the nature of an oath. An insane man or an imbecile could not be legally naturalized.

Mr. CURTIN. Was he adjudged to be insane?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know that he was. There is a record here made in May, 1875, and if he was insane then he could have got over it in the intervening time.

Mr. CURTIN. Unless he was adjudged insane the argument goes for nothing.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Let me ask the gentleman if the rule of law is not that where a state of facts is once shown to exist it is presumed to exist until the contrary is shown?

Mr. CURTIN. That is it exactly.

Mr. RANNEY. If he was competent to take an oath like that, and he did take it and then did as he was requested in the matter of voting, it is a good proof of his sanity. The fact that he voted for contestee is not evidence of insanity. The men who got him naturalized to vote must have seen and known that he was not an imbecile.

Mr. JACOBS. That is not quite fair, judge.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know whether it is or not, but it is a significant and competent fact; and there is no evidence whatever of his insanity except the testimony of a farmer in reference to it. There is no evidence of a physician or of an expert whose evidence would be competent to show the fact. There is no testimony whatever of a person competent to determine the fact.

That disposes of him, and the presumption that he was a qualified voter is almost conclusive. Besides, the judges of election, knowing the man, and being good citizens living in the same town with him, accepted his vote as a valid vote and allowed it without question. No one challenged him, but permitted him to vote and it was counted. Mere weakness of mind does not destroy a man's vote. If it did a great many would not have the opportunity of casting their votes.

The next alleged illegal voter is Mr. Gurnsey. They say he lived in Centreville, but he cast his vote in John's Township. The claim is based on Gurnsey's own testimony. He went when two years old to live in John's Township, and that became his home. He swears that he always lived there, and never intended to change his residence or home from there and that he had not done it. He was county superintendent of schools, and was away a part of the time spending it at Centreville. The January before the election he was working at Centreville on a newspaper, and went there and staid about half his time, but he still kept his home in John's Township. He recognized that as his home; kept his room there, his clothes and his library. Now, a man does not change his residence unless he actually moves away with the intention of changing his domicile to another place and does so. This man swears that he did not intend to leave John's Township; that he regarded it and retained it as his home, and yet his vote is rejected as illegal without a tithe of other evidence. Then there are four minors who had come to this country quite young. They say they were not naturalized. Now, if the father of these was naturalized, that was enough. They say, one of them said, that his father told him two or three years before he died that he had never been naturalized, and an inference drawn from that hearsay statement, not under oath, was that the father had never been naturalized. But there was time enough in those two or three years for him to secure his naturalization; and if the father was naturalized it was sufficient if the boy was a minor at the time. Another swears he was, or thinks he was, past 21 years of age when his father was naturalized. But he did not state what his age was or when his father was naturalized. That was the condition of some of these others.

I will not take the time of the House to allude to them all. But there were five votes standing in that position. The evidence is wholly inadequate. I state this, too, as a proposition which will not be denied: One man comes forward and swears that he was an illegal voter and voted for contestee illegally. He is presumed to know the law, and knew if he did what he says he did that he had violated it by voting when he had no right to vote. Now, I ask, if you will take and rely upon that man's uncorroborated evidence, alleging as he does his own turpitude and violation of the law? I state this as a fair proposition of law, that if a man shows by his own evidence that he violated the law and committed a criminal offense, he is not to be credited, as a general rule. If he swears to the commission of an act of moral and legal turpitude, to a violation of the law, that is sufficient to destroy his credit when he goes further and swears that he voted for the contestee.

Mr. BRUMM. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts contend you must prove a negative in a case of that kind?

Mr. RANNEY. The law presumes every vote cast is legal, and it is to be so taken until the contrary thereof is proved by competent and credible evidence.

Mr. BRUMM. Until the contrary is proven.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. Does not Hanson say this? I read from the testimony:

Interrogatory 7. Where is your father?
Answer. My father is dead.
Int. 8. Were you ever naturalized?
A. No, sir.
Int. 9. Was your father naturalized before you became of age?
A. No, sir; but he made his declaration of intention of becoming a citizen.
Int. 10. Was your father ever fully naturalized?
A. No, sir.

Then he goes on just in that same strain; and in regard to the others the evidence is just as plain as that.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not yield to the gentleman except for a question. What the gentleman says shows how men will get along who only read half of the evidence on a point.

Mr. BRUMM. I read what was essential. I do not want to take up time.

Mr. RANNEY. This man says he only knew his father was not naturalized because his father told him so two or three years before he died. He had no knowledge about it. It is mere hearsay at best.

Mr. BRAGG. What proof was there he was naturalized?

Mr. RANNEY. The record.

Mr. BRUMM. Here is what he says on that subject:

Interrogatory 12. In what year did your father die?
Answer. In the year 1879.
Int. 13. Was that after you became of age?
A. Yes, sir.
Int. 14. How old were you when he died?
A. I was twenty-three years of age.

It was after he became of age.

Mr. BRAGG. Where do they keep the records of those not naturalized?

Mr. RANNEY. I suppose where your party, the Democratic party, is accustomed to keep them. They keep the run of them at least pretty well, to say nothing more.

Now, I do not want to be interrupted if all this is to come out of my time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him just one question?

Mr. RANNEY. I will hear one more question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it an admitted fact that these men were foreign born? Is that admitted?

Mr. RANNEY. The only evidence in this whole matter as to each man's vote is his own oath—the oath of a man who is alleging his own turpitude, his own violation of law; an ignorant, an unknown man, an alleged foreign-born man, who swears to the commission of a serious offense.

Mr. BUCHANAN. When a man is foreign-born, then the burden of proof is on him to show naturalization either of himself or his father.

Mr. RANNEY. The law is very plain that when a man's vote is received he is presumed to have been naturalized, if need be. That is conceded as undoubted law. You start with that presumption and must meet it with proof of the contrary before the vote can be invalidated. In this case the only evidence in one instance is that this man's father told him two or three years before he died that he was not naturalized.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RANNEY. I will yield for one more question.

Mr. BRAGG. I want to know why the presumption did not obtain for those who cast their votes which the directors of election deposited in the wrong box—why the presumption is that they were illegal votes? Why does not the presumption attach that all things are presumed to be rightly done and properly received and that the man exercises the franchise properly, so that the man shall not be cheated of his franchise by an inspector depositing his vote in the wrong box?

Mr. RANNEY. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech. The gentleman is too good a lawyer to require an answer to a question like that.

Mr. BRAGG. That is the easiest way to answer the question.

Mr. RANNEY. When the fact is patent, when a man put these ballots in the wrong box, there is no presumption of law he put them in the right box.

Mr. BRAGG. But is it not the intent of the voter that should control, rather than the box in which his ballots are deposited?

Mr. RANNEY. The law is what I have stated it to be. If in the wrong box, it is no vote unless the same is made so by other independent evidence, and mistake or accident is not to be presumed. If we are to go upon presumption merely, you may commit any amount of fraud in that way and it will not be in the power of any one to prove it, and votes could be easily duplicated. That is a sufficient answer to that question.

Now, I was saying this, that other evidence than that of the flagrant violation of the law is necessary to satisfy me of the requisite facts. If a man is self-confessedly bad enough to commit such an offense, he is bad enough to falsify. The man who will commit such an offense as that and comes alleging his own turpitude in voting at all can not be believed when he goes further and says he voted for Mr. Cutts. He is more likely to have voted for the other party. At any rate I can not believe him when uncorroborated. Hence I say the seven alleged illegal votes cast for contestee are not sustained by competent and credible evidence.

Now, I have only one other point to present. If these votes are rejected, then there are ten clearly illegal votes proved here as cast for contestant as I have shown in this report, and that makes contestee's majority thus far 19. I now come to the alleged illegal votes of the colored men. We have been told that this is a fact, and I must discuss the issue in order to cover the case.

Mr. ATHERTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. RANNEY. Well, let us have it.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether, in the meeting of the Committee on Elections, the next meeting before the last one, the gentleman did not state in the presence of the full committee that in his opinion the only question that governed this contest was whether that colored vote was legal or not, and that in his opinion there was no other question worth considering?

Mr. RANNEY. If I said that, then I misled my friend.

Mr. ATHERTON. I ask the gentleman whether he said it or not?

Mr. RANNEY. I may have said about that, or something near it.

Mr. ATHERTON. Well, how near it?

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, keep quiet; do not get offended.

Mr. ATHERTON. Well, when I ask a question am I not entitled to an answer?

Mr. RANNEY. I will answer your question, but in my own way, and I will answer it fully and without evasion. Before the sub-committee had examined this case it had been alleged that the turning point in the case, and the main point, was the legality of the colored votes. And I did state, with my then knowledge of the case, that that question would determine the case; and it would have determined it if it had been found in favor of the contestee.

Mr. ATHERTON. Was not that said after you had met in your sub-committee at least six times, and was it not said just before the last meeting of the committee? And did not the gentleman's own colleagues, two of his own party, state that that was the only question they had considered, because the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] had said that was the only question worth considering?

Mr. RANNEY. The only trouble in this case is that my learned friend on the other side and a couple of gentlemen on my side who have not examined the case have been under a hallucination all the time. And if I said that, I was under the same mistake at that time. But it is not true; and upon further examination I so found it, and tried to show the gentleman the other issues in the case.

Mr. ATHERTON. Who was it that labored under a hallucination about it?

Mr. RANNEY. The hallucination is entirely on your side, as I am trying to demonstrate.

Mr. ATHERTON. What light has the gentleman got since that time?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think it is very proper for a gentleman to state what was done in the committee-room, to give the conversation between gentlemen discussing and arguing a question there in the course of the investigation, and quote that here in this House. I never have done it, and I never shall.

Mr. ATHERTON. The gentleman need not have answered the question if he did not want to. I wanted to see if he was frank enough to say frankly what he said.

Mr. RANNEY. I have said so, and if the case turns on that it will determine it; but I do not think it does. It matters not what any one gentleman of this committee may have said, or what I have said before or after a full examination and consideration. I say this, that this case was never thoroughly examined by myself in all its details until the committee voted upon it under the circumstances I have stated. The question is not what I have said, but what the facts are, and I shall not spend any time on that. If the gentleman was misled by any mistaken remarks of mine, I am sorry for it.

I come now directly to the point which I had reached when interrupted. What is the claim? It is that there were 23 illegal colored votes. Now, that matter has not been dealt with fairly. It is true there is a great conflict of evidence as to whether the crowd of colored people—they are called "a crowd" in the record, and I adopt your designation—went to Iowa on the 1st day of May or the 15th day of May. If they went there on the 1st day of May they were voters; if they went on the 15th day of May they were not voters.

It has been industriously circulated that there was a fraud on the part of men in getting colored people to Iowa; that they were colonizing, and all that, and the people began to think so. But when you examine it there proves to have been no truth in it. There were at best only seven men in the company which arrived in May.

I am not going to deal with the evidence as to this number, for I told the gentleman [Mr. PAUL] that he might leave that out of the case. I conceded those votes in my report, and if the gentleman had heard it he would have so found. There is evidence conflicting and contradictory, and it is impossible to get at the truth satisfactorily. There are twelve witnesses who have sworn to a falsehood and committed perjury if they did not come there on the 1st of May, or if there were not two crowds of them. But for the purpose of the argument I will concede that the six or seven of these voters—take the seven which they claim—were illegal. That reduces the seventeen majority, which is the majority on my theory to that extent, by seven. Now, I say there is no evidence beyond that that this House can rely on to prove any more illegal colored votes.

They found sixteen besides the said seven already conceded; but as to two of these men, Burks and Woodford, there is not a particle of evidence they ever came from Virginia when they came, and I challenge any gentleman to cite any. If gentlemen will turn to my report or to the record they will find that the only evidence on this point comes from Major Shumate.

Now, the value of evidence depends first upon whether the witness has personal knowledge of the facts he attempts to swear to; second, whether he recollects the facts; and third, whether he can be believed in what he says. The effort is made to show on the evidence of Major Shumate that there were twenty-three illegal votes cast in all. I want the House to see where Major Shumate stands. He had taken these parties of negroes from Virginia, each party embracing sixty or eighty, making three hundred or four hundred men. He took them to Iowa and located them in the mines. Only about one hundred of them voted. The uncontradicted evidence is that Major Shumate endeavored to induce three of them to go and vote illegally. He was a Democrat himself and there were several Democrats among the negroes. When he tried to induce them to vote they were more honest than he was, for they declined. He told them it did not make any difference if they had not been in Iowa more than a few days. This is the man who has tried to show that there were illegal voters. Major Shumate was at the mines when those men went in wagons to the polls to vote. He knew who went, because he was urging three or four more to go. After the election was over and the question arose whether any had voted illegally, he stated (I will read from the evidence of Major Shumate)——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CALKINS. I rise for the purpose of ascertaining whether we can have any understanding about the length of this debate. I address myself particularly in the first place to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY.]

Mr. RANNEY. I would be very glad if the gentleman would give me a few minutes of his time.

Mr. CALKINS. How much time altogether for your side?

Mr. RANNEY. I said two hours.

Mr. CALKINS. One hour has been exhausted.

Several MEMBERS. Let us vote now.

Mr. CALKINS. Let me make a counter proposition. If the previous question be now ordered there will be after that one hour, of which I am willing to yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Will that be sufficient?

Mr. RANNEY. Fifteen minutes will do for me; but there are two other gentlemen who wish to speak.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Who are they?

Mr. RANNEY. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCOID] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE].

Mr. BRUMM. Let us vote on the question now, without any more talk.

Mr. RANNEY. You can not crowd this case through in that way.

Mr. CALKINS. I wish to make a statement. This is the last seriously contested election case remaining undisposed of, except one. Now, I do think that if we are to dispose of this case we must make some arrangement about the time to be occupied in further discussion. I submit whether one hour longer will not be sufficient, I yielding fifteen minutes of that time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] after the previous question is ordered? That is the proposition I submit to the House and to the other side. I want to be perfectly fair.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I said when we started this discussion we were to conclude this case in one-half hour—that we were to take one-half hour against the gentleman's hour and a half. I am sure that should be satisfactory to the other side.

Mr. CALKINS. Suppose we yield thirty minutes—fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts and fifteen to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE].

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. We propose to give them all they want. We want but little time.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I will yield my half hour to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CALKINS. A half hour is the entire time.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I yield all my time to Judge RANNEY.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am willing to yield all the time but the half hour to conclude.

Mr. CALKINS. How will that do, Judge RANNEY—half of the hour after the previous question is ordered?

Mr. RANNEY. I will say this: As my associate, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THOMPSON], is not able to be here, I think his colleague [Mr. MCCOID] should have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. PETTIBONE. As I have said, I yield my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HAZELTON. How much do you claim?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Half an hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us close the debate in half an hour.

Mr. CALKINS. With that understanding will that be satisfactory to my colleague on the committee?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think this case ought to be crowded through in this way.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have to debate the tariff to-morrow.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. It is now 1 o'clock, and we will probably be up to-morrow night, and I suggest that we come to a vote and dispose of this question at once.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not wish to trespass upon the time of the House longer than I can help.

Mr. PAGE. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HAZELTON. Oh, no; let us settle this to-night.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to go on in the morning.

Mr. CALKINS. That is impossible. For the purpose of testing the sense of the House, and I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts seriously objects, I suggest that the previous question be considered as ordered after thirty minutes, to be disposed of as he sees fit.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. That leaves us thirty minutes.

Mr. HAZELTON. I want ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. CALKINS. I will yield it to you.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman propose to take a vote to-night?

Mr. CALKINS. I do not.

Mr. HAZELTON. Is there an hour left after the previous question is ordered?

Mr. CALKINS. I understand that half an hour is now to be taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and half an hour reserved for my colleagues on the committee.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to that.

Mr. CALKINS. I will demand the previous question, then.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think it fair to order the previous question now.

The SPEAKER. After the previous question is ordered no further debate will be allowed.

Mr. CALKINS. If we are not to be allowed an hour after the previous question I withdraw it. I am unwilling to do anything in this case that is not strictly honorable. I am under instruction by the committee to urge the decision of each of these cases. I must do it on honor. [Cries of "Vote!"] I am in honor bound to do it without regard to its political significance. [Applause.] I ask now in fairness and justice, because every gentleman on the floor knows if this case goes over until to-morrow that is the end of it, that before we adjourn this evening the previous question shall be ordered and the vote can then be taken to-morrow. I ask by unanimous consent that all further debate be closed in one hour.

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand that the gentleman proposes that three-quarters of an hour shall be allowed on this side.

Mr. MORRISON. I object to this arrangement; I do not like such bargains to put one man in and put another man out.

Mr. CALKINS. This is not a bargain——

Mr. HAZELTON. Suppose the chairman of the committee promises Mr. RANNEY and Mr. PETTIBONE each one-half hour to finish the argument on their side and then moves the previous question, leaving the hour to the other side.

Mr. CALKINS. I think this can be arranged now. The gentleman from Tennessee can take the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Let us adjourn and go home.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I propose to accord the time allowed to me, one-half hour, to my associate, Judge RANNEY.

Mr. RANNEY. I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, to detain the House, but desiring to cover the other branch of the case, I was proceeding to state that this contestant rests his case here exclusively on the evidence of Major Shumate as to the alleged twenty-three illegal colored votes. Conceding seven of them there would be still sixteen left, and I was calling attention to Mr. Shumate to see whether he was a credible witness. I wish to show exactly what he says himself and that he shows himself to be entirely unreliable. I have stated one fact already in reference to the matter. Now I shall proceed to read a portion of his testimony found on page 402 of this report, which I was about to read when my hour expired:

> Interrogatory. Did you say that those who voted were legal voters?
> Answer. No, sir; I did say repeatedly that there were more men than voted.
> Int. Do you know W. A. Lindly?
> A. I do, sir; cashier of the bank.
> Int. Did you have a conversation with him about the month of April, 1881, at the Oskaloosa National Bank and soon after you returned from Virginia in that month, in which you said to him in response to a question that you were acquainted with all of the colored men at the mines and that those who voted were legal voters and had a right to vote, and that the charge that any of them had voted illegally was entirely unfounded, or words to that effect?
> A. I had a conversation with Mr. Lindly with reference to the charge of illegal voting, to the effect that the charge of illegal voting was false, and from my information not all voted that had a right to vote, and from my information that the charge was false, for I never knew how many men did vote, but with reference to several conversations I had I have invariably made the same statement, according to the best of my information.

Here was a man who ought to know and who assumed to know, who stated after the election was over and the contest had begun that instead of those being illegal votes not all of the colored men voted who had a right to vote. He either falsified then or falsifies now. Standing alone he is discredited.

In the next place Major Shumate is impeached as to his recollection and impeached as to his truthfulness; and yet you seek on this man's evidence alone to prove the illegality of these votes. But he does not prove it. Gentlemen can not look at the evidence in this case or hear the discussion of it and place any credit in what he says at best. Gentlemen complain loudly on this floor about the fact that the evidence in the case is not examined by the committee or that the men who are to act upon the case do not hear the evidence. I wonder how many of you gentlemen here have read this evidence. How many of you have looked at it even to inform yourself about these facts? If you have not then I ask you to turn to this evidence of Mr. Shumate quoted in the record. You will find the evidence proves no such thing as is alleged. There are but two of these men out of the sixteen that he claims to have known at all. He did not pretend to know personally any more than those two of them; he could not swear when they came to Iowa, and there is not a tittle of proof in this case when these sixteen men came to Iowa except that his evidence covers six of them. That statement can be verified if gentlemen will take the trouble to examine the testimony for themselves.

In my report I take the case of Randolph Willis. They say he is one of those who did not come there with either of the first three parties. That is what Major Shumate says himself and that is all he says as to him. But he did not say that he came with any party that was brought there from Virginia. Another witness swears from personal knowledge that he came before April 4. So also of four others. He says they did not come in either of the first three parties. He does not say he ever knew them or ever had any acquaintance with them, or that they came to Iowa with any of the parties he knew. The evidence of Neill is that there were twelve or fifteen of the negroes there before any came from Virginia at all. And then there are seven out of the sixteen who did not appear to have been in Virginia in their lives, unless the man named Foster is relied on. He is impeached, and the other side will surely not claim anything from what he says, for I do not think contestant will want that part of the evidence referred to or discussed by anybody.

That is the only evidence then, Mr. Speaker, on which they rely for these sixteen votes. There is no evidence at all as to two of them. One came before April 4. No evidence covers them, except as to six, and they rest on the evidence of one discredited witness.

I have been obliged thus hurriedly to state what I regard as the salient points of this case. Necessarily the statement is curtailed in many important respects. I do not propose to take up the time of the House in discussing this matter in all of its details any further, but if any gentleman will take time to read this evidence as it is contained in my report there is not a member on this floor that would stake his reputation upon an assertion that the claim is sustained as to any one of the sixteen. Besides that the evidence shows that this man, Major Shumate, is contradicted and discredited through and through. And yet you seek to oust a man from his seat on testimony of such a man, contradicted time and time again by numerous witnesses, and when his own evidence at best is weak and flimsy. I only care to have this case properly presented to the House in behalf of this contestee.

It seems perfectly plain on this exhibition of facts that there is no evidence on which you can unseat him. Why, I believe that there is not a gentlemen on that side of the House who, if the position of the parties was reversed in this case, would ever think of voting in favor of unseating the sitting member. If the parties were reversed, and such a proposition had been reported as the majority report contains, we should have an outcry about partisanship and outrage such as comes from the other side always when one of their side of the House is to suffer.

It is all right when the sufferer is on the other side of the House, and curses turn to praise for any man who finds in their favor. I do not want gentlemen who disagree with me, or gentlemen upon the other side, to lose the opportunity of discussing the question if they wish, and to refute any one of my statements.

I must call the attention of the House, however, to some other things which contradict and serve to overthrow Major Shumate as a witness. All of these alleged illegal voters were challenged at the polls when they appeared to vote. They were challenged as not qualified. Every one was required to take an oath, and every one did take the oath under the statute, wherein he distinctly swore he was a legal voter and had resided in Iowa over six months. We have all the sixteen voters taking this oath solemnly and openly. You must find that every one of those men committed perjury, and this on the flimsiest kind of evidence of one man alone, who happens to have a white skin and is proved to be far from white otherwise. Besides being contradicted throughout, and to have been grossly in error as to most everything else, he is impeached as having a bad reputation for veracity. Twenty to thirty witnesses, white and black, so testify, from a town where he had lived two years.

He was a Democrat in politics and not friendly to the contestee. Unless he is a man of most wonderful memory, a prodigy that has got a system of mnemonics that should go into the books, it was utterly impossible for him to remember the names of all the 300 or 400 negroes whom he brought from Virginia. And he did not remember them, as is shown when he is put to the crucial test. The names were put into his mouth by a leading question in each case, and he is not asked if he knows such a man, what acquaintance he has had with him, whether he came from Virginia, and in what lot he came; but they take a man's name from a poll-list and say, "How about that name?" He says he did not come with the first, second, or third lot, for instance, without being able to tell when he came. And yet you are going to have that as proof that the man did come with him, when he does not swear that he ever came with him or ever saw him or had any acquaintance with him; and the man is only identified by a correspondence in name as taken from the poll-list. It is clear to my mind and must be clear to every fair-minded man that no one except him who only seeks some excuse for finding for contestant, or deems it better to do so as a matter of political policy, can say the claim of contestant is sustained by competent and credible proof sufficient to overcome the presumptions of law in favor of the legality of the sixteen votes in question, fortified as they are by the oaths of the voters themselves. It is not enough to leave the question in doubt, as contestee is protected by a formidable wall of presumptions. It can not be done, for other reasons already urged, without ignoring the law and precedents as held and set in this House.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCOID].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate (at 12.45 a. m., Saturday), by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal taxation.

ELECTION CONTEST—COOK VS. CUTTS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCOID] is entitled to the remainder of the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts, which is twenty minutes.

Mr. MCCOID. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to attempt to follow the gentleman from Massachusetts in discussing that part of the evidence in this case outside of the colored vote.

I do not see how this House can find for the contestee with these three conceded facts: First, that it is the law, as laid down by the gentleman from Massachusetts, of which there is not any question, that when votes are found in the wrong box they shall not be counted, unless there is evidence affirmatively that it was a mistake. I ask to enforce that one point for a moment. There is not any evidence here of the number of voters at those precincts of Keota and Douglas. Nobody in this House knows how many men voted at those polls. The tally-lists are not in evidence. If you allow the votes to be counted in this case that were found in the township box then you adopt a precedent that will clearly allow illegal votes to be counted in every election; because the elector coming up to the box might vote for Congress in a State box, might vote for Congress in a township box, and vote for Congress in a constitutional-amendment box, as they had one at that election.

Now, I ask anybody who claims these votes ought to be counted how do you know that they were all cast by men who voted for Congress in the State box? What evidence have you for it? What evidence have you that these men who voted the tickets put in the township box did not also vote the same tickets in the State box and the constitutional-amendment box, if put there? There is not any evidence. You have not got the tally-list. You do not know how many men voted. You can not compare it there.

If one vote might have been duplicated in a State box and another in a township box by the same person and you counted them illegally, all of these might have been the same. Not only is this view of the law sustained by the two precedents in the House and the decision in Michigan, but it is good, sound doctrine and must be sustained if you want to protect the ballot-box from illegal votes.

Again, that it was duplicate voting by design is evidenced by one fact. In the election in the sixth Congressional district of Iowa there were found in the wrong box only two ballots for the contestee, Mr. Cutts; only two in the whole district, I believe. If I am wrong I would like to be corrected. One or two ballots are the only ballots found for Cutts in the wrong ballot-box in all that district. There were found thirty-three Congressional ballots in the township boxes in that district for the contestant, Cook. That shows that those on that side of the case made these mistakes, and in townships where the election officers were all of that political party. That, therefore, would tend to prove that it was not a mistake, but a designed duplicate voting in the wrong boxes.

Now, you ought to throw out all the Congressional votes found in the township boxes, as the law directs. This House can not on principle vote to count the thirty-three Congressional votes for Cook found in the township boxes; and that would settle the whole case.

Now, if that is not correct on the law and the evidence in this case, let some one answer it by evidence read here to-night from the testimony in this case, proving that there were enough voters at these polls to account not only for the votes found in the State box but for the Congressional votes found in the township boxes also. But that can not be done; there is no evidence of that. I therefore say that every man on both sides of this House can conscientiously vote to exclude the thirty-three Congressional votes found in the township boxes.

Now, as to other votes: I find in the evidence here on the part of the contestant, Mr. Cook, that he states that there was 1 vote cast in Keokuk County for "Cutts," without any more of his name, which nobody will dispute should be counted for Cutts. Then there are also conceded votes by Joseph Fisher, William Dines, B. S. Pearson, C. F. Renaud, A. W. Mattox, and two others that were illegal. The contestant agrees that those 7 votes should be deducted from his vote. Those, with the votes that are proved to be illegal, make 22 votes that should be taken from his total official vote. That is conceded in the argument, and that will make 18,109, leaving a majority for Mr. Cutts of 27 votes.

Now, the rest of this case depends upon the colored vote at Muchachinock and Albia coal-mines. Nobody of course claims in this case, I am glad to state that, that there was any such thing as an importation of colored votes in the district and State to affect the election. The testimony is clear on that point.

Every colored man who was there moved into the State with his family to become a bona fide resident, and under the laws of the State he would become a voter after the proper length of residence—six months.

Now I state this, and I think that gentlemen on the other side will not dispute it, that the question in regard to this colored vote is simply one of a conflict of evidence; a case of conflict of evidence alone.

For instance, Major Shumate went to Staunton, Virginia, to get some colored laborers, and he brought them on or sent them on as was convenient, about the 3d of April, 1880. And it is proved, and I agree to it, that on the 15th of May he returned with a party of negro laborers. The records of the railroad company show that they came upon certain cars to Marshall, and from Marshall down to Muchachinock, where they worked.

Now, of that party that came on the 15th of May—the names are given in evidence—most of them were women; but few of them were men. Now, consider the period of time and the distance of the journeyings of this Major Shumate, who was importing these laborers as fast as he could go to and come from Staunton, Virginia, and the time, the 3d of April to the 15th of May.

The theory I have in this case, and I think it is fully sustained by the evidence, and no jury would reject it, is that there was an intermediate party which came from Staunton, Virginia. Let us see. Twenty-three colored men went to the polls that fall. They were instructed that they should live in the State six months before they would become voters; they knew what was required of them. And they held up their hands and swore that they had been residents of Iowa for six months, arriving in Iowa, as they necessarily must have done, by the 1st of May, or before that time.

Major Shumate, who attended to this business for the railroad company, in giving his testimony about a year after the event, having, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] has said, shipped or sent to Iowa about six hundred men, testifying from memory alone, says at one point in his testimony that he thinks it was on the 15th of May that these men came to Iowa; because he went to Virginia and happened to be there at the May term of the court. He found these men in town attending court, and engaged them and sent them to Iowa, making a quicker trip than usual, because of finding these men in town attending court. He fixes the 15th of May as the date when he brought these people to Iowa; and the whole case on the other side rests upon that. Now, the courts in Staunton, Virginia, are held on the third Monday of the month; and if he got these colored men at the May term of the court he got them after the 15th of May, and could not have arrived with them in Iowa on the 15th.

No doubt Major Shumate did get the men, according to his recollection, at court time, but it was the court of April instead of May, and the date was about the 25th or the 27th. It would thus appear there was an intermediate visit of Major Shumate to Staunton between the 3d of April and the 15th of May. He went down to Staunton, found the men attending court, gathered them in, and sent them to Iowa perhaps the 27th of April, arriving in Iowa on or about the 1st of May; and when he had taken that party to Iowa he returned to Staunton, got another party ready and returned to Iowa the 15th of May. It is perfectly reasonable and logical to suppose that this was the fact.

Now, I assert—and I challenge anybody to produce evidence to the contrary—that there is nothing in this testimony which contradicts that theory of the case. If there was an intermediate visit to Staunton by Major Shumate the evidence is reconciled. On this hypothesis the men who swore at the polls that they were electors, having arrived in Iowa on or before the 1st of May, told the truth. Major Shumate told the truth, but simply omitted one of his numerous visits to Staunton, Virginia. Upon this view of the case also the men who came upon the witness stand and swore that they arrived in Iowa on the 1st of May told the truth. The coincidence of there being a court held in Virginia at the time the party was collected to go to Iowa is a stubborn fact testified by your own witness. He says that he was there in court time, and you can not contradict him. This is better than all the rest of his testimony; it is a coincidence which he recollects; and it is a circumstance which could not be true upon the theory of the 15th of May being the time when he arrived in Iowa with his party.

Now, I have said this is a case of conflict of evidence. What is the conflict? It is Major Shumate against forty men, all men who swore their votes in at the polls against Major Shumate. Some of them came on the stand in this case and contradicted the testimony of Major Shumate that they arrived in Iowa on the 1st of May.

Major Shumate says that he took a party to Iowa on the 15th of May, and that they could not have been there sooner, yet the pay-rolls of the coal company in Iowa who hired them show that some of the women who are named as being in the party of the 15th of May—I do not know how many; five or six of them—worked twenty-four days in May and were paid by the coal company for twenty-four days in that month. This could not be true and at the same time the testimony of Major Shumate be true. If this is disputed, I invite anybody to contradict me to show the evidence which controverts my statement.

Mr. JACOBS. Is there any evidence whatever when those women came?

Mr. McCOID. They are named in the list of the party that he says arrived on the 15th of May. It is shown that some of the women named as belonging to this party worked for the coal company twenty-four days in May. Therefore they could not have arrived, as he says, on the 15th. In this direct conflict of evidence you can not believe one man against the testimony of almost forty.

Mr. JACOBS. Did Major Shumate name a single woman who arrived on the 15th of May?

Mr. McCOID. I will give you the names.

Mr. JACOBS. Did he name a solitary woman?

Mr. McCOID. I will give you the names of the women: Annie Carter——

Mr. JACOBS. Is that Shumate's testimony?

Mr. McCOID. These are women who are identified by others as being in the party that Major Shumate says arrived on the 15th of May: Annie Carter, Grace Maupin, Mary Carter, Julia Bess, Linzea Robinson, Mary Robinson, Minnie Garrison, Mary Ella Garrison, Mary E. Erwine——

Mr. JACOBS. Who testifies when they came?

Mr. McCOID. I am reading from the report of the committee, which states that these women arrived on the 15th of May. This report is the basis of your case. Yet the testimony shows that some of these women worked twenty-four days in that month for the coal company. This Major Shumate, whose testimony must be taken as true or the case of the contestant falls, is impeached by almost forty witnesses on the question of his truth and veracity.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. McCOID. I wish to say this one thing on the part of the Iowa delegation——

Mr. MOULTON. You have had two hours, and we have not had any time.

Mr. McCOID. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say on the part of the Iowa delegation that we feel it to be our duty to oppose the report of this committee, because we believe that Mr. Cutts was elected by a majority of the legal votes of his district, and on the law and evidence is entitled to the seat accorded to him by the canvassing board of that State.

Mr. CALKINS. I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that in thirty minutes from this time I will call for the previous question. I yield now fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBS].

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, of all the election cases that have been deliberated upon by the Elections Committee during the last two sessions of Congress, this perhaps is the most remarkable. It seems to me that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] is more intent as a lawyer to stand by and maintain his position than he is to do justice in the case.

In the first place I desire to call the attention of the committee to page 1 of his brief, in which he says:

> I allow for the contestee the 2 votes cast for "Cutts." Also, 1 vote which got into the wrong box in Washington Township, and was rejected.

And, although that vote was in the wrong box, he claims it for the contestee. Yet when he makes his second brief he claims that 25 votes put into the wrong box should be rejected from the count.

It was remarked by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Frost] in defense of his seat on the floor to-day that probably there was no member of the committee who had read the evidence in that case and was familiar with the facts. That is very true; we can not read cases covering six or seven thousand folios; and the consequence was when the mantle of Thompson fell on the shoulders of my white-plumed friend from Boston he took upon himself the responsibility of making himself familiar with the evidence. His known character as a lawyer, and as a gentleman led the committee to trust the case exclusively and entirely to him. We were ready to take his word for it. When he came in with this first report he admitted the pivotal fact was the coming of these negroes from Virginia. We were ready to take that as the issue, and the opinion of the committee swept over his head like a deluge upon that evidence, and that evidence alone.

Now, sir, I say that where a case like this has been submitted to a man of his ability and his known integrity we have a right to require of him his statements shall be accurate and his law shall be sound.

In the few minutes allotted to me I propose to show that my friend, when he found at that meeting of the committee he could no longer stand on the May crowd—he could no longer rely upon those facts—he immediately went back into the miscellaneous vote, which up to that period, as I understand it, he called even. Then, in addition to that, like a bird in the toils, he flutters on until at last he resorts to this claim that the 25 votes cast for Cook which fell into the wrong box should be rejected and Cutts declared elected.

It seems to me a most remarkable thing that our friend, Brother RANNEY, should resort to so many changes of position upon the very same facts. When in the meeting of the committee he brought his first report he claimed to be familiar with the facts of the case, and there and here arrogated to himself more familiarity, as he has a right to do, than ourselves. I call attention to the fact that in writing this report he made haste to claim the vote which was cast for Cook in the wrong box in Washington Township for M. E. Cutts, but he had not then anticipated the position he was afterward to take, placing himself in a desperate position. After he discovered a point might be made of the 25 votes cast for Cook in the wrong box, then I suppose he would be willing to give us this one vote which was cast in Washington Township.

Now I desire, in the few minutes remaining, to point out the fact that Brother RANNEY has gone off with the passion and fury of a lawyer and has not decided or written his report as a judge. It seeems to me if anything was needed to illustrate the desperation of his effort to get around this difficulty, it is in the testimony offered by Valentine Rader and C. F. Renaud. I am surprised at this fact. In an unguarded moment he exposes himself to a terrible criticism. I hold in my hand the evidence of two men claimed not to be naturalized. Now here is the evidence of one of them:

> Valentine Rader, being produced, sworn, and examined on the part of contestant, deposed as follows:
> Question. Did you vote at the last election, held on the 2d day of November, 1880?
> Answer. Yes, sir.
> Q. Did you vote for a member of Congress for the sixth Congressional district of Iowa?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. Who did you vote for?
> A. For M. E. Cutts; voted the straight Republican ticket.
> Q. At what voting precinct did you vote?
> A. In Malaka Township, Jasper County, Iowa.
> Q. Where were you born?
> A. In Germany.
> Q. Of what nationality are you?
> A. I am a German.
> Q. When did you come to this country?
> A. In the year 1850 or 1851.
> Q. Were you ever naturalized?
> A. No; I got my first paper.
> Q. State your reasons for voting at the last election.

A. I supposed I had a right to vote. I took out my first paper in Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, and voted there.
Q. Before whom did you go to make your declaration of intention of becoming a citizen of the United States?
A. County clerk.
Q. The paper you then received from the county clerk at the time you made your declaration of becoming a citizen of the United States, was it the only paper of naturalization you ever took out?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did your father ever live in this country?
A. No; he died in the old country.

Mr. RANNEY claims that Mr. Cutts is entitled to that vote. I will now read the evidence relating to another foreigner, unnaturalized voter:

C. F. Renaud, of lawful age, being produced, sworn, and examined on the part of the incumbent, deposed as follows:
Question. State your name, age, occupation, and place of residence.
Answer. Charles F. Renaud; age, 36; occupation, farmer; Lynngrove Township, Jasper County, Iowa.
Q. In what country was you born, and when?
A. In France; year 1844.
Q. When did you come to this country?
A. In the year 1853.
Q. What naturalization papers have you taken out, and where and when?
A. I have only taken out one paper.

One paper; the evidence in this case runs along pari passu with the evidence in the other case.

I have only taken one paper in Mauston, Juneau County, Wisconsin, either in 1864 or 1865.
Question. For whom did you vote for member of Congress, at the last general election in Iowa?
Answer. John C. Cook.

That vote Mr. RANNEY says should be rejected, but the other should be counted for Mr. Cutts. That is consistency.

I only mention this, Mr. Speaker, briefly; I have not time in this brief argument to discuss the question presented by Judge RANNEY with regard to these two parallel cases. He would count one of these votes and reject the other.

Mr. RANNEY. If that is your understanding of what I said you ought not to call it your argument; for I said no such thing.

Mr. JACOBS. Well, I think I can show that you did; the report is here before me.

Mr. ATHERTON. Did not you count one vote one way and want to reject the other on exactly the same conditions?

Mr. JACOBS. Precisely; and on the same state of facts. Now, it seems to me that my able and eminent friend from Boston has certainly been carried away by his professional enthusiasm. Since the first presentation of the case to the committee he has made a new case, and everything occurring since the report that he made before to the committee is an afterthought supplied by a shrewd special pleader and technical lawyer for the purpose of defeating the force of the facts.

Now, again, there were several other witnesses who were claimed not to have been naturalized, and my friend Judge RANNEY takes the position that no admissions or declarations of the party against whom the charge is made is competent evidence to prove that he was an alien, and not entitled to a vote. I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, that so good a lawyer should take such ground. It is well settled in law that the admissions of a voter that his father was not naturalized, and that he had never received his papers, that such evidence of all that class of persons is held in McCreery as perfectly competent testimony upon the question of whether he was himself entitled to vote. In these election cases the technical rules that apply to trials in a court of law are not observed or enforced.

Again, he says that we claim that one poor creature here was crazy; and he says we prove it by the evidence of people who were not experts; by the evidence of people who are not doctors, not skilled in the science of the brain. What is the proof here? Patrick O'Connor voted the Republican ticket. He is shown by several witnesses to be an idiot, who did not know enough to eat at the table or to understand when he was in the presence of his father or mother. He had been adjudged an imbecile. Now, my friend Judge RANNEY takes the ground that the evidence of common people upon such a question is not competent to prove the absolute mental imbecility of the party offering to vote. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that he will adhere to that opinion. I do not think he will maintain that opinion since the court of appeals in the State of New York has laid down the doctrine and has enforced it in case of murder, upon the trial of the party, that the witness testifying to the mental condition of the accused was competent if he stated the facts upon which he based his opinion, whether he was an expert or not; and that is the prevailing law of this country to-day, from one end of the country to the other.

Now, as to this man, who had no residence there, I say it was clearly proved he had no right to vote. I have simply extracted from the gentleman's brief such facts and such conclusions of law as I thought were unsound and untrue, and in the few minutes I have had have tried to call attention to some portion of them. But when I see a man come before the Committee on Elections or before the House and claim to be the only man familiar with the record, and that he is absolutely bound to have our confidence, it is necessary his facts should be accurate and his law should be thoroughly sound.

Upon the question of Shumate's evidence, my friend from Iowa says that Shumate's evidence is evidence put in against the evidence of forty people who swear they were there on the 1st day of May. Now I ask this House to judge as to the probability of those darkies swearing to the truth. Look at it. We do not claim these men were brought away from Virginia to colonize for the purposes of this election. It was too long before. But they were there; they came in droves; they came in separately in May, June, September, and October; and Shumate testified who they were.

When election came along we all understand how it is. Mr. Cutts said to his friends, "The country here is full of darkies; most of them have come since the 1st of May, and are not voters; you go and pick up those darkies." And the evidence in the record shows that the darkies were told they could vote—as my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] said, they could vote if they had been one single day in the State of Iowa. The darkies thought it would be a good thing to do, and relying on the statements made to them they rushed to the polls and gave in their votes.

Then came up the question of a contest, and Mr. Cutts and his friends went to the darkies and said "You are in a devil of a scrape here, and must swear yourselves back into the notch of May 1, or else you are good for the penitentiary." And the darkies swore, not that they came two days or three days before the 1st, but all swore that they came on that particular day six months before. There is not a white man in this House to-night who could recollect with the accuracy they did, and they did it under dictation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CALKINS. I yield now to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON], the chairman of the sub-committee.

Mr. HAZELTON. How much time is left?

The SPEAKER. There are fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. HAZELTON. I do not know that I want the entire fifteen minutes. I want just time enough to present what I deem to be a few controlling facts in this case. Election cases do not turn on long arguments or long reports or a great volume of testimony. They turn and they are to be decided, if they are decided at all, upon a few straightforward, prominent, controlling facts, and upon settled principles of law as applied to those facts.

This case upon the evidence is somewhat close, but to my mind, upon fair examination and frank consideration, the evidence is in favor of seating Mr. Cook. His title is clear upon that evidence. It rests upon the testimony of Shumate. It is admitted by all that if Shumate's testimony stands, Cook must be seated, if this House is honest. If Shumate can not be impeached, then the argument of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] falls to the ground, because he builds his entire fabric upon the assumption and upon the charge that Shumate's testimony is false. All the facts in this case were within the knowledge of this man Shumate.

In Iowa they had mines, in Albia and Muchachinock. They wanted cheaper labor in the mines than they could get in the State of Iowa. They employed Shumate to go down to Virginia to his home and bring colored men to work in the mines. They paid him for so doing. He went down where he knew and where he could identify men, women, and children—every one that he took from the soil of Virginia on the cars to the Muchachinock mine. Nay more, he had an inventory of every man, woman, and child that he took there; the age, the time they started from Virginia, the time they arrived at the Muchachinock mine, every one of them. Nay more, when he reached there he gave to this company a memorandum of these facts as exactly stated as they could be, and which were to be stated exactly on account of the business which he was transacting for that company. He took seven men on the 15th of May, and he swears to them and gives their names. I have them here. Now, if they arrived with the May party on the 15th of May, in the one car that went there in May, then these seven men were illegal voters.

Then he swears that he took other lots of these negroes there down to October. He swears to thirteen others directly, of whose ages, names, the time of their coming and everything about them he took a memorandum, who came there from the 15th of May down to September and October. So that there are twenty-one illegal votes, on the testimony of this man Shumate, as against the nine illegal votes which all admit this man received, without considering Muchachinock. Of our committee, twelve members, Mr. RANNEY himself admits that there were only nine any way.

Now, against those nine stand the twenty-one sworn to from memorandum in the charge of the man whom this company employed to go to his old house, among his acquaintances, to their very hearthstones and get there negroes whom he had known all his lifetime and bring them out there. And now will you impeach the testimony of Mr. Shumate? Will you bring on three or four darkies to swear to something? I will show you, and it is a controlling fact in this case, how they might have impeached Shumate if they had wanted to impeach him. It will take but a moment. Mr. O'Neal, the foreman and manager of this company, was a witness called on the part of Mr. Cutts.

Mr. STEELE. What were his politics?

Mr. HAZELTON. I do not know his politics, and I do not care.

He was a Republican, so far as we can get at it, and he would have to swear to the truth, would he not?

He was the manager of this company; kept the books of the company; received the memoranda from Shumate as he came from Virginia in the cars with these negroes. Now, what does he say? Let me read it, for it is controlling in this case:

Q. Have your company any record or memorandum of these colored men who came from Virginia, containing the name, age, or time of commencing work for your company, that were brought during the months of March, April, and May, 1880? And, if so, is said record or memorandum accessible to you or under your control?

A. We have such a record, except to age, and the same is accessible to me, but not under my immediate control.

Mr. RANNEY. Allow me to call attention——

Mr. HAZELTON. No; you had an hour and a half. You do not seem to be contented with an hour and a half. I can not understand the intense desire of the gentleman to make a speech beyond the hour and a half he has already had.

Now, as I have said, this very company had the evidence within its control by which to impeach Shumate, if he could be impeached. They did not have to swear negroes on the loose. They had the record, the memorandum, which their manager admits contained the record of the time every one of these colored men came there, their names, everything but their ages. This man O'Neal was put on the stand and invoked to put that record in this case, which, if it had been put in and had proved that Shumate was a liar, would have elected Cutts, and not Cook. Yet they suppressed the whole of it, and until this hour——

Mr. RANNEY. They were all put in.

Mr. MOULTON. They were put in by force.

Mr. HAZELTON. Do not interrupt me. As I was saying, until this hour this memorandum of which I have read has never been put in this case. You put in rolls and rosters. You have talked here to-night about women who were connected with these men. But on the very edge of that roster which you put in was a memorandum in writing—a mistake as to these women; they did not come until the 15th, or words to that effect.

Therefore this case is in a nutshell. You can not overcome that record. It is like a mountain in the way of a traveler. He may go around and around it, but he must meet it and see it. They quibbled and worked on this thing and finally said, "Have you not a memorandum or a paper in your office that shows exactly when these twenty-one men came who voted illegally?" And they said they had. "Why can not you produce it?" This manager of the company wanted a very honest ballot, and yet he could not produce it, although it was only across the street. My God! the Republican party was never made for that kind of business. [Applause.]

Mr. RANNEY. The gentleman does not want to misrepresent.

Mr. HAZELTON. The Republican party must stand higher than that; it must suppress nothing that opens the way to an honest ballot-box. It has placed its feet, or undertaken to do so, for twenty years now on ballot-box stuffing. It has made declarations in favor of a free and honest ballot, grander than any ever made by any party before. It has declared its adherence to principle and to an honest ballot-box.

And yet after three months, four months, six months, the contestee had to come back here and beg a supplemental order of the House to enable him to go over this ground again to see if he could not find this testimony, and he could not get it. [Here the hammer fell.] One word more. I say that the Republican party owes it to itself, we owe it to ourselves, all of us, to be simply fair and honest and square on this one case and seat Mr. Cook.

Mr. BRAGG. And see how it will feel to be honest once. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRISON. If you owe that to yourselves, you owe more than you can ever pay.

Mr. CALKINS. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. I move that the House adjourn.

PRINTING.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks unanimous consent to lay before the House certain bills and resolutions of the Senate relating to printing connected with Congress.

There being no objection, the bill and joint resolutions of the following titles were severally taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

A bill (S. 2433) to amend sections 6 and 7 of the act providing for the publication of the Revised Statutes and the laws of the United States, approved June 20, 1876;

Joint resolution (S. R. 143) authorizing the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer relative to the maps, &c., for the census reports;

Joint resolution (S. R. 95) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 64) authorizing the sale of the Congressional Directory and the current numbers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. KLOTZ, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on House bill No. 7135. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent to have passed at this time a Senate pension bill. It has passed the Senate three times.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is too late to-night to pass bills. There will be ample time for the gentleman to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks the present consideration of a Senate bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CALKINS, that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 30, noes 15; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes a. m., Saturday, March 3) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CORNELL: The petition of Dewitt C. Gow and others, of Cobleskill, New York, for the speedy enactment of a national bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JACOBS: Six petitions of citizens of New York, for a material reduction of the duty on sugar—severally to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PEELLE: The petition of Murphy, Hibben & Co. and others, merchants of Indianapolis, Indiana, against an increase of duty on fashioned cotton hosiery—to the same committee.

By Mr. J. D. TAYLOR: The resolutions adopted by the Farmers' Club of Belmont County, Ohio, protesting against any reduction of the duty on wool—to the same committee.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: Papers relating to the pension claim of David L. Pool—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLITS: The petition of Mrs. G. W. Owen and 2,078 others, of Michigan, in relation to the treatment of Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The following petitions, protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy Department, were presented and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

By Mr. HUBBS: Of citizens of Beaufort, North Carolina.

By Mr. LORD: Of the board of trade of Detroit, Michigan.

By Mr. MACKEY: Of owners and masters of vessels of Charleston, South Carolina.

By Mr. MURCH: Of merchants and owners of vessels of Cherryfield, and of 90 citizens of Rockland, Maine.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 3, 1883.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceeding was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. BROWN presented the credentials of Alfred H. Colquitt, chosen by the Legislature of Georgia a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1883; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. TABOR presented the credentials of Thomas M. Bowen, chosen by the Legislature of Colorado a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1883; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. WINDOM presented the credentials of Dwight M. Sabin, chosen by the Legislature of Minnesota a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1883; which were read and ordered to be filed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 338) in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made, was read the second time by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that that resolution lie on the table in the hope that it may possibly be reached.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is quite impossible to pass it without a reference.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not impossible; it is unusual.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is quite impossible to pass it to-day without a reference.

Mr. MORGAN. I expect that after 12 o'clock it will be possible. I do not know how it may be before that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps it will be easier to do it after 12 than before; but you can not do it before 12, you may count on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota in favor of an appropriation for the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River nearly opposite the village of Saint Croix Falls; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota in favor of an appropriation for the construction of a light-house at Grand Marais, on Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of citizens of Fernandina, Florida, praying for the preservation and prosecution of the work upon the jetties at the entrance of Cumberland Sound; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented a memorial of merchants, owners, and masters of vessels of the States of Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware, remonstrating against the proposition to transfer the revenue-marine and the Life-Saving Service to the control of the Navy and against the establishment of a bureau of merchant marine in the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of keepers and surfmen of the United States Live-Saving Service now employed on the coasts of Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia, remonstrating against the proposed transfer of the revenue-marine and the Life-Saving Service from the control of the Treasury Department to that of the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SLATER, it was Ordered, That James Coffey have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

THE LYTLE MONUMENT.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 6408, which is a bill appropriating some condemned cannon for a monument to General Lytle, of Ohio. I feel, Mr. President, that I need only mention the name of William H. Lytle to enlist the interest and sympathy of every Western man in behalf of my request.

He was a gallant soldier, an able and distinguished commander, an eminent poet, and a cultivated lawyer. His memory is cherished by all the people of Ohio, by all our countrymen with whom he served in the war. A fitting monument is being erected, and the trustees having it in charge request this contribution of condemned cannon. The bill has passed the House of Representatives.

I am informed on good authority that if the bill shall pass, the condemned cannon can be had; and if it shall prove otherwise, as I know it will not, no harm can possibly be done.

Mr. INGALLS. We have had a great many bills for this same purpose reported adversely by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENDLETON. This bill was reported adversely, but with the consent of the Senator who had charge of it I had it reinstated on the Calendar, in order that I might make an investigation as to condemned cannon.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from Missouri on this point whether there are available condemned cannon?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir, there are no condemned cannon.

Mr. INGALLS. Then why should this bill pass?

Mr. PENDLETON. I hope it will pass. If the condemned cannon can be had, they will be furnished; if not, not.

Mr. INGALLS. I think that is invidious. There have been several requests from associations in my neighborhood which have been refused and the bills reported adversely, on the ground that there were no cannon available for this purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the pending motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to take up the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are no cannon to be furnished. That has been reported half a dozen times by the Military Committee.

Mr. PENDLETON. I hope the Senate will consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas object?

Mr. INGALLS. I think it very unjust.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no man in the world whom I would oblige sooner than the Senator from Ohio; but here are two or three Grand Army Posts, composed of friends of mine, who have been refused this very thing. I suppose there are a few condemned cannon; but there are none of the proper size for these purposes. There are some old thirty-two's and sixty-four's; but the Government does not transport them, and the people will not take them when they have a bill passed and find out what they are. The committee are obliged as a matter of common sense to report against these applications, and I have refused to accommodate some of my own friends.

Mr. INGALLS. I make no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to accommodate gentlemen, but this matter has been intrusted to me, and I have reported against one of these measures from the State of Iowa, and against most earnest protest the Senator from Iowa got his bill put on the Calendar. I say if the Senate proposes at this session to take up this bill and pass it, I intend to move to reconsider in connection with it every bill on that subject and pass them all and make the farce complete.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can not be taken up without unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Consent is not given.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Missouri objects.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, except that I gave notice that I shall move to take up all the other bills.

Mr. MCDILL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VANCE. I move to take up Senate bill 2504.

Mr. MORGAN. I must call for the regular order.

Mr. INGALLS. Regular order.

Mr. CALL. I desire to call up a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina is on the floor.

Mr. CALL. I thought calling up a resolution was part of the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not a resolution heretofore offered.

Mr. VANCE. Senate bill 2504 is reported from the Naval Committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We must have the regular order according to the order of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VEST. I move to take up the bill (S. 2504) to amend the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that under the rule adopted we must stick to House bills in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has construed that to apply after the morning hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then first you must postpone the Calendar. We are on the Calendar under the Anthony rule for the first hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from North Carolina has the floor and has moved to take up a bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He must first move to postpone the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is not in order till the morning business is over. The morning hour is subject to the disposition of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is understood that this is a field open to everybody, all right.

Mr. INGALLS. Not at the end of the morning hour, but at the conclusion of morning business, whether it is 1 o'clock or any other period of time, at the conclusion of morning business the consideration of the Calendar begins under what is known as the Anthony rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That applies at the conclusion of morning business each day. That being so the Senator from North Carolina has no right to make his motion now.

H. B. LITTLEPAGE.

Mr. CALL. I call for the consideration of a resolution offered by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks for the consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

Mr. CALL. It is a resolution heretofore offered by me.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That H. B. Littlepage be reinstated to the messenger-roll of the Senate with compensation from the date of his removal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are the grounds of that?

Mr. INGALLS. Why was he removed? Can the Senator inform the Senate? Has the resolution been acted upon by any committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. I move its reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The matter is now before the Committee on Contingent Expenses, I think.

Mr. INGALLS. It had better stay there.

Mr. CALL. This resolution has been recommended by the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. A very proper committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALL. It has been reported by that committee and recommended.

Mr. INGALLS. I have moved that the resolution be committed to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The merits of a question are not to be discussed on a motion to refer.

Mr. CALL. This resolution has been reported by the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and therefore it is not in order to make a reference of it to another committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us have the report read.

Mr. CALL. I must correct my statement. The resolution, as it stands, has not been reported by the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, but they recommend compensation to this man. The motion of the Senator from Kansas is not in order while I am occupying the floor. When I am done he may renew it.

This is a case of extraordinary hardship; and if the Senator from Kansas and the Senate see fit to be entirely indifferent to what is just, what is right, what is fair, what is honorable, and to that which is honest, and a proper regard for the rules of the Senate, then the Senate and the Senator from Kansas can deny the relief asked by this resolution and dispose of it in any form they please; but I undertake to say that they can not do it, nor can the Senator from Kansas move it consistently with honorable and just conduct on the part of the Senate, or consistently with an observance of the rules of the Senate or the practice of the Senate.

Now I will state the facts of the case. When the Democrats came into power in this body they assigned by a resolution and by general agreement among the members of the party three minority committees to the Republicans. They gave them the appointment of the clerks and messengers to those committees, for the purpose of emancipating them from the control of the Democratic Sergeant-at-Arms, the Democratic control of the Senate. When the Republicans again came into power these committees were transferred again to the minority, then the Democrats. Among those committees was the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, of which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] was and is the chairman. The Sergeant-at-Arms detailed as messenger to that committee the person mentioned in this resolution, Mr. Littlepage, who was appointed by Mr. JOHNSTON and placed upon the rolls by the Sergeant-at-Arms in pursuance of the understanding and of the purpose for which the committee was assigned to the minority.

In the month of August last year Mr. Littlepage, an acceptable person, discharging the duties of the position to the satisfaction of the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the committee, met with a very great affliction. His wife and two children died from extreme illness. He obtained leave of absence to go to them while they were sick and remain with them. Two of his children died, and his wife lingered in extreme illness for a long period of time. Under these peculiar circumstances he was discharged from his position by the Sergeant-at-Arms against the consent, against the protest of the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of that committee, and he has refused to recognize that discharge; he has protested against it; he has kept Mr. Littlepage in the performance of those duties. His statement is here signed by himself to that effect. It has been exhibited to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] and to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], members of the committee with him, and has received their sanction. He has appealed to them, and he appeals to the Senate that the condition which was attached by the consent and agreement of both parties to the assignment to that committee shall be observed. He insists that the Sergeant-at-Arms had no right to withdraw this messenger and leave his committee without a messenger against the general understanding and against the uniform custom of the Senate.

I happen to know that upon the Committee on Engrossed Bills, of which I am a member, by the advice of this body the chairman of that committee has the appointment of the messenger, and his appointment is observed and the Sergeant-at-Arms has never interfered with it; on the contrary, against the wishes of two of that committee the Sergeant-at-Arms appointed the messenger at the dictation of the chairman of that committee, and we submitted and consented to it.

Now, this young man, discharged at a time of great distress, in comparative destitution almost, without means has been kept in service by the committee and in the performance of these duties, the Senator from Virginia advising him that his discharge was without authority, that it was against the custom of the Senate; that it was against the understanding upon the subject, and he has been performing the duties of the position from that time to this. He asks, therefore, that this resolution be passed and that he may be reinstated upon the roll.

The resolution of the Senate of December 11, 1879, was:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to appoint three additional messengers to the Senate, who shall be assigned to the Committees on Revolutionary Claims, Private Land Claims, and Engrossed Bills.

I have stated the object of that resolution. It is not denied that it was to place the control of the clerks and messengers to those committees with the minority. It will not be denied that when a Republican majority came here they extended the same courtesy to the Democratic minority and that the purpose and the uniform understanding and the constant practice of all the committees assigned to each minority was that the chairman of the committee itself should control the appointment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I make a suggestion to my friend? I was in Democratic times the chairman of one of the committees named, and the Sergeant-at-Arms did appoint a gentleman that he thought would be agreeable to the Republican members of the committee; but he always exerted the authority, and as we supposed rightly, of when it was necessary calling that messenger from attending on that committee-room and putting him at a door or doing anything else with him; so that he was just as much under the control of the Sergeant-at-Arms at that time as any other messenger, only that whenever it was convenient and proper for him to do duty for that committee he was the messenger assigned to that committee because it was supposed he was of the same political ideas as the majority of the committee, so that if we were having a little political consultation as to what we would do about some bill or something of that kind the conference could go on without embarrassing our Democratic messenger, if we had one, by hearing something he would not like to hear and that we might perhaps not wish to have him hear. But that was all we ever understood the relation of the messenger was to us. It was a courtesy to appoint a Republican messenger and assign him to that room; but, like every other messenger that is assigned to the rooms all around, the practice and as I always supposed the law was that he was just as much a part of the Sergeant-at-Arms's force and subject to his directions as anybody else.

Mr. CALL. Do I understand the distinguished Senator from Vermont to say that he thinks it would have been right for the majority to have allowed the Democratic Sergeant-at-Arms to deprive that committee of its messenger?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would have been a question depending upon the exigency of the public service. If there were a large number of people at the Capitol, and it was necessary to preserve order at all the doors, then I should hold that that committee like every other committee must go without its messenger for that day or for that week.

Mr. CALL. But I assure the Senator frankly this is a case in which there has been no messenger whatever assigned to that committee.

Mr. PLUMB. Allow me to interrupt the Senator from Florida. Let me appeal to him to consider that this is Saturday, the last day of the session; that it is now almost 11 o'clock, and that this matter should come up in some effective way on some bill yet to be considered. We have a great many matters of public importance to act on. I have no doubt that he will be perfectly willing himself to pay out of his own pocket the little balance of salary that may be due this person rather than embarrass the business of this country to the amount perhaps of hundreds of thousands of dollars by this unseemly delay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on Contingent Expenses can provide for the case.

Mr. PLUMB. I think we ought to go to public business rather than attend to private grievances of people about this Capitol, who after all get as much as they are entitled to.

Mr. CALL. I do not agree with my friend from Kansas. I think the preservation of the dignity of the Senate, I think the protection of the rights of a private individual is just as necessary as any public business. I think it is public business, and I think no more arrant piece of humbuggery can be propounded than that which the Senator from Kansas has just affirmed. The interests of private individuals, who are here as citizens of this country, as officers of this Senate, have a right to be attended to. The Sergeant-at-Arms had no right, and the Senator from Vermont will admit it, to discharge a messenger assigned to a minority committee, and particularly in a case of great personal distress and calamity.

I have no interest in this. I scarcely know this gentleman or his family; but when this case of wrong came to my knowledge I was not unwilling to identify myself with the protection even of an obscure and an unknown person here.

Mr. INGALLS. I think there is no parallel to this performance since the time when Nero fiddled while Rome was burning. Here are hundreds of public measures pending and our time is consumed in the frivolous consideration of a question whether a messenger shall be put back on the rolls or not. I understand this man was discharged for cause, and if we intend to preserve the discipline of the official staff of the Senate and give the Sergeant-at-Arms the power for which we hold him responsible we must not for any nonsense of this kind rescind the orders he makes and interfere with the discipline that he tries to enforce. I move to lay this resolution on the table.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Kansas will allow me to say a word.

Mr. FRYE. I object to debate.

Mr. INGALLS. I have moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CALL. The Senator is taking an unfair advantage, as he often does.

Mr. INGALLS. I have moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CALL. Why, Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. Order, order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not allowable. The question is on laying the resolution on the table.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 23, noes 7.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Bayard,	Groome,	Lapham,	Platt,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	McDill,	Plumb,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Pugh,
Davis of Ill.,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Rollins,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Morgan,	Sawyer,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Sewell.
Frye,	Lamar,	Pendleton,

NAYS—13.

So the motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (H. R. 5543) to confirm certain entries on the public lands was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. A bill similar to that, identical with it in fact, has been favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator let this bill be referred to the committee? It can be reported back. Of course it is subject to an objection now and it will be then. It will not do it any more harm to refer it than to keep it here.

Mr. PLUMB. This bill has been reported from the committee, and one in precisely the same terms is now on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senator from Wisconsin examined it?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have examined it.

Mr. PLUMB. This is precisely the same bill that we reported. I examined it yesterday myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin ask for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that in all cases where lands reduced in price to $1.25 per acre by the act of June 15, 1880, but which have not been offered at public sale at such reduced price, were inadvertently sold at private entry by the officers of the Land Department between the date of the passage of that act and the date of the receipt at the local offices of the instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative thereto of October 10, 1881, the entries so inadvertently permitted to be made by innocent purchasers, and which are regular in all respects except as to time of entry, shall be confirmed as of the dates of entry, respectively, where no valid adverse claim to any of such lands had attached prior to the date of such entry. Where lands have been entered since the approval of the act, and a greater price paid therefor than the reduced price, such excess is to be refunded to the purchaser or his legal representatives in the same manner as repayments of excess purchase-money are made in other cases under existing law.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL CADETS AND CADET-ENGINEERS.

Mr. VANCE. If it is in order now I move once more to take up the bill which I have tried so long to get up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order unless the regular order is called for, which is the unfinished business.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If nobody objects the Senator from North Carolina asks to have a bill considered.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 2504.

Mr. SHERMAN. I insist on the regular order; at least half a dozen Senators here call for it, and I think it ought to be gone on with.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the Senator from Ohio will give way. This bill will provoke no discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I desire is the regular order. The Senator will have his opportunity.

Mr. VANCE. Let me appeal to the Senator. It is a bill to relieve from the operation of the law passed last year the cadets at the Naval Academy who have already graduated, and if the relief is not afforded now they will all be dismissed in June, and it will be too late to do anything for them. If the Senator will take the responsibility of saying this injustice shall stand, very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the statement of a Senator before me that this is an urgent matter for immediate consideration, I withdraw my objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2504) to amend the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service. It declares that the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service, and for other purposes, shall not apply to any naval cadet or cadet-engineer who had been appointed to the Naval Academy before the passage of that act.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLINTON D. SMITH.

Mr. PLATT. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Pensions. I am instructed by that committee to report back the bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Clinton D. Smith favorably, and I ask for its present consideration. It is probably the last bill that will be reported from the Committee on Pensions at this session.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Clinton D. Smith, late of Company C, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension of $18 per month now allowed him.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH A. HENDRICKSON.

Mr. WALKER. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 3258) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hendrickson.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am told there is an adverse report in that case; so that it does not come within the rule, I think. Under the circumstances it ought not to be taken up.

Mr. WALKER. There is an adverse report and a minority report. I simply ask that the two reports be read, and will submit the case upon their reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would inform the Senator from Ohio that the rule was to consider all pension cases, but yesterday by unanimous consent all cases that were reported adversely were postponed.

Mr. SHERMAN. While there are so many favorable reports to be considered, I do not think time ought to be taken up in considering adverse reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. This is a peculiar case. This woman is 66 years of age; her husband served in the United States service for sixty years. He was promoted for meritorious service in the Mexican war, served in the late war, and died without means, leaving this woman without means of support. I wish the bill taken up. I desire to make no argument upon it, but will submit it upon the two reports—the report of the minority and of the majority. They are short. It will not take three minutes to read them. I hope the Senator from Ohio will withdraw the objection and let the bill be considered. The Senate will feel better after passing such a bill as this.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is for the Pensions Committee to manage their own affairs. I will not interfere.

Mr. PLATT. As I reported from the minority of the committee in favor of the bill I can hardly object to it myself.

Mr. WALKER. I hope it may be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3258) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hendrickson. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hendrickson, widow of Thomas Hendrickson, late a retired colonel in the United States Army, at the rate of $25 per month.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL July 8, 1882:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3258) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hendrickson, examined the same and report:

That it does not appear that the cause of death of Colonel Hendrickson resulted from disease or injury which arose in service in line of duty. The claim of the widow was rejected at the Pension Office, as stated in the record, "for the reason that the death of Colonel Hendrickson, October 24, 1878, at the age of 78 years, had no connection with service in the line of duty." Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The Acting Secretary read the views of the minority, submitted by Mr. PLATT July 8, 1882, as follows:

The minority of the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3258) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hendrickson, have examined the same, and submit their views in favor of the passage of the House bill, adopting the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, correctly stating the facts in the case, as follows:

"Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 3258:

"In the matter of the bill (H. R. 3258) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hendrickson, your committee, to whom said bill was referred, have investigated and found as follows:

"The petitioner states that she is the widow of the late Colonel Thomas Hendrickson, of the United States Army; that her husband died in Saint Louis, October 24, 1878, leaving her so little that she has been obliged to run in debt in order to live, her only son being unable to support her; and that her prayer for a pension is based on the consideration of the long and faithful service of her husband.

"This claim was rejected, according to records of the Pension Office (file No. 19055), 'for the reason that the death of Major Hendrickson, October 24, 1878, at the age of 78 years, had no connection with service in the line of duty.'

"The official military history of Thomas Hendrickson, which accompanies the bill, is as follows: He first enlisted December 13, 1819, in the Fourth Battalion of Artillery, and was discharged July 18, 1821, for disability. He enlisted again July 20, 1823, and was assigned to Company F, Third Infantry, as sergeant; made first sergeant May, 1824, sergeant-major January 22, 1827, and discharged as such July 20, 1828, by expiration of service. He re-enlisted July 28, 1828; was made sergeant-major of regiment June 14, 1829; transferred to Company G, Sixth Infanty, as sergeant, April 15, 1831; appointed ordnance sergeant April 25, 1833; discharged as such and re-enlisted June 10, 1833; discharged June 10, 1836, by expiration of service. Appointed second lieutenant, Sixth Infantry, July 31, 1838; promoted first lieutenant December 3, 1840; promoted captain January 27, 1853; promoted major, Third Infantry, June 27, 1862. He was brevetted captain August 20, 1847, for gallant and meritorious conduct at the battles of Churubusco and Contreras, Mexico, in which he was severely wounded; brevetted lieutenant-colonel July 1, 1862, for gallant and meritorious conduct at the battle of Malvern Hill, Virginia, and brevetted colonel March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious services during the war. He served in the quartermaster's department at Baltimore up to May 7, 1869, with which his active service closed.

"Accompanying the petition is a letter from Major-General W. S. Hancock, who served in the same company with him, and relieved him from command when he was wounded in the Mexican war. General Hancock says that Hendrickson also served under General Jackson at Pensacola, and that his entire service covers sixty years. Also, that his horse was shot from under him at Gaines's Mills, Virginia, and that he was subsequently retired by an examining board 'on account of incapability, the result of long and faithful service, and of wounds and injuries received in the line of duty.' General Hancock further says that he understands the petitioner to be in straitened circumstances, and that her case is one of the most meritorious known to him.

"In view of all the circumstances above set forth, your committee present a favorable report on the bill."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD BELLOWS.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MILLER, of California. One moment. I wish to call up House bill 5674. It is reported unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Alabama give way?

Mr. MORGAN. Temporarily.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5674) for the relief of Edward Bellows.

The preamble recites that Edward Bellows, upon the 18th of July, 1866, was by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, duly appointed and commissioned a paymaster in the Navy of the United States from the 20th of February, 1866; that on the 28th of January, 1869, the Secretary of the Navy issued an order declaring that Bellows was dismissed the naval service, declared in such order of dismissal to be "in consequence of the facts appearing upon the record of the naval court-martial before which he was tried in November, 1868;" that on the 22d of January, 1880, the President, through the Secretary of the Navy, after investigation of the facts in the case, determined and issued an order declaring the order of dismissal illegal and void, and annulled and revoked it, because issued contrary to the provisions of section 1624, article 36, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the name of Edward Bellows was thereupon, by order of the President, restored to the list of paymaster on the Naval Register, next after that of Paymaster George A. Lyon, being the original relative position held by him on that list, and to which he is entitled by virtue of his commission; that on the 16th of March, 1869, while the order of dismissal remained upon the records unrevoked, the President, under the mistaken belief that the order was valid and according to law, and that the same caused a vacancy in the list of paymasters, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appointed Leonard A. Frailey, paymaster in the Navy, declaring such appointment to be "vice Bellows, dismissed;" that by a recent decision and judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Charles M. Blake vs. The United States (13 Otto, page 227) the right of said Bellows to hold the office is questionable; and that including Bellows the present number of paymasters does not exceed the number now allowed by law.

The bill therefore proposes to authorize the President to nominate and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Edward Bellows paymaster in the Navy of the United States, to take rank and position on the list of such paymasters in the position where his name now stands on the Register as above stated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

ALABAMA MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. MORGAN. Now I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McDILL. I appeal to the Senator from Alabama if he will not allow me to ask unanimous consent to pass a House bill relative to District of Columbia affairs. It is a very important matter, and I do not think it will give rise to any debate.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall not occupy more than five minutes on this bill, and then ask the Senate to vote on it. I merely wish to make a statement of the facts. I should like to oblige my friend very much, especially as this is his last day in the Senate; but I have been interrupted ever since yesterday morning, and I hope he will not press his request.

I will not venture to explain even what the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] yesterday evening stated to the Senate. I assure the Senate of the United States that this matter has been under the most mature consideration, and my colleague and I have really been resisting this bill, but we have yielded to popular sentiment and demand in our country, which is beyond any comparison to be comprehended outside of the State. I will therefore submit it to the vote of the Senate without taking the time of the Senate to explain it further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be reported to the Senate if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill ought to be read now. The Senator from Vermont stated objections to it yesterday. I wish to hear it exactly.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator from Vermont desired to discuss this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He discussed it last night.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Vermont made his full opposition yesterday, and in order to get forward with the bill I have declined to reply, although I was anxious to do so.

Mr. HOAR. I know nothing about the Senator's bill, but I had some idea that the Senator from Vermont desired to discuss it further.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the question will be put.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. We are on a conference committee and shall be for some time.

Mr. SLATER (after having voted in the negative). I ask to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Barrow,	Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Fair,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Garland,	Lapham,	Sawyer,
Call,	George,	McDill,	Vance,

So the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senate has just disposed of Order of Business No. 1029 in considering unobjected House cases. House bill No. 4676, for the relief of certain officers of the Army, was passed over by mistake as a Senate bill. It is Order of Business No. 868. It is a bill in which there are officers from every State in the Union interested. It is simply to enable the Secretary of War to adjust and pay the commissioned officers from the date of their commission and their entry upon the discharge of duty, and embraces those classes of officers for whose relief Congress always passes special relief bills. It has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and I hope will now be considered.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope it will be considered. It is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. FRYE. Is it a Senate bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a House bill.

Mr. FRYE. Then there is a mistake on the Calendar?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a mistake in printing it on the Calendar as a Senate bill. It is a House bill reported with an amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Then it is in order?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to have the order read under which we are acting.

Mr. COCKRELL. This comes under the order. It is a House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know. I have no objection to the motion; but I should like the order to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair). The order will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate proceed to the consideration of pending pension bills after the unfinished business is disposed of; second, to House bills reported favorably, commencing at the point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. What I wish to propose for the unanimous consent of the Senate is that in the consideration of these bills the five-minute or Anthony rule of debate be applied. ["All right!"]

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection. There is no objection.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator mean by that? Does he mean that the Anthony rule is to apply?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. All right.

Several SENATORS. Five minutes, and no Senator to speak more than twice.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senate will not consider it invidious if some of us insist upon the enforcement of this rule and object to special cases being brought up out of time.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the entire Anthony rule is included in the Senator's motion. Let there be no mistake about that.

Mr. SHERMAN. As to House bills.

Mr. VOORHEES. We have not heard the proposition of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. We are now acting upon a rule which gives preference to House bills. I suggest, for the unanimous approbation of the Senate, that we adopt what is called the Anthony rule, the five-minute rule, so that we may go through these bills as rapidly as possible, and clear the docket, if we can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to that proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. I mean to apply the rule just as it is. That is perfectly well understood, so that bills shall be subject to objection, and also subject to limited debate to the extent of five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding.

THANKS TO PRESIDENT DAVIS.

Mr. BAYARD. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate of the United States are due, and hereby are tendered, to Hon. DAVID DAVIS, a Senator from the State of Illinois, for the courteous, impartial, and able manner in which he has presided over their deliberations and fulfilled the duties of President pro tempore of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted unanimously.

RELIEF OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, I call for consideration of House bill 4676, Order of Business 868.

Mr. PLUMB. Why should not that take its turn? I observe a bill right before it on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Objection was made to that, but objection was never made to this.

Mr. PLUMB. Not to-day. Let us see if that can not be passed also. I ask the Senator from Missouri to let us see if that can not be passed without objection. It is a matter of great moment. It has passed the Senate twice before. It is a bill in regard to the adjustment of salaries of certain postmasters.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must insist on the rule, whatever that is.

Mr. PLUMB. This comes under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it has been passed over and objected to.

Mr. PLUMB. It has not been objected to this morning.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of the bill of the Senator from Missouri?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is now pending.

Mr. HOAR. That comes up of right.

Mr. PLUMB. I insist on the rule.

Mr. GARLAND. That was the point reached before.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the bill named by the Senator from Missouri was passed over because there was a misprint on the Calendar, printing it as a Senate bill when in fact it is a House bill. It has, therefore, the right of precedence under the rule as it seems to me.

Mr. GARLAND. That is true; but then I think there are some House bills that precede that.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. GARLAND. At what point did we leave off? That is what I want to get at. Will the Secretary please announce where we left off?

The ACTING SECRETARY. Order of Business No. 1029.

Mr. GARLAND. Now, if we go back I want to go to the first case under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. This case was not taken up when called because there was an erroneous print.

Mr. GARLAND. But although it is an erroneous print, it is not the first case; it is not at the point where we left off. We ought to go on regularly.

Mr. SHERMAN. We ought to commence wherever we left off.

Mr. GARLAND. That is what I want.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri was recognized by the permanent presiding officer, and his bill taken up.

Mr. GARLAND. It was taken up as I understand under the impression that it was the point at which we left off with the cases on the Calendar, but that is not the fact. There are one or two cases before that as I understand.

Mr. PLATT. It was not taken up under the supposition that it was following the point where we left off, because the Senator from Missouri explained that it had been passed over by mistake.

Mr. FRYE. We can not get at it unless we go on.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask where we ought to commence under the rule?

Mr. GARLAND. At the point where we left off.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where was that?

Mr. ROLLINS. I think we had better begin somewhere.

Mr. GARLAND. I agree to that.

Mr. MORRILL. As the Chair has decided that this bill is before the Senate we might have passed it before this time if we had not discussed other matters. I hope now that this bill is before the Senate it will be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate in the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let it be read.

The bill (H. R. 4676) for the relief of certain officers of the Army was read, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will only say to the Senate that the amendment of the committee is to strike out the House bill and insert a substitute. It is useless to consume the time of the Senate in reading the portion to be stricken out. I think the reading of the portion to be substituted will be satisfactory to everybody.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the joint resolution approved July 11, 1870, entitled "Joint resolution a mendatory of 'Joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army,'" approved July 26, 1866, is hereby so amended and shall be so construed that in all cases arising under the same any person who was d uly appointed and commissioned, whether his commission was actually received by him or not, shall be considered as commissioned to the grade therein named from the date when his commission was actually issued by competent authority, and shall be entitled to all pay and emoluments as if actually mustered at such date: Provided, That at the date of his commission he was actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was so commissioned, or, if not so performing such duties, then from such time after the date of his commission as he may have actually entered upon such duties: And provided further, That any person held as a prisoner of war, or who may have been in hospital by reason of wounds or disability received in the service in the line of duty at the date of his commission, shall be entitled to the same pay and emoluments as if actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was commissioned and actually mustered at such date: And provided further, That this act and the resolution so amended shall not be construed to apply to any cases in which, under the laws and Army regulations existing at the time, there could have been no legal muster into the service at the date of his commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers;

A bill (S. 729) for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins of the United States Army; and

A bill (S. 964) for the relief of Joseph C. Irwin.

SAMUEL CHASE BARNEY.

Mr. GROOME. When we were upon this call some days ago, Order of Business 1022, being House bill No. 660, for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney——

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the business in order? I ask the Chair what is the next business in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the next order.

The ACTING SECRETARY. Order of Business 848.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it is Order of Business 1032.

Mr. PLUMB. That has not been reported favorably from the committee, I understand. That does not come within the rule.

PATRICK HORAN.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill (H. R. 6501) granting a pension to Patrick Horan was indefinitely postponed yesterday. He is a constituent of mine whom I know something about. I was not in at the time, and I desire to have a motion entered to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely. Of course as I was not here I can not enter the motion but I ask some other Senator who was here to enter it.

Mr. PLUMB. I will enter a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is entered.

Mr. LOGAN. I would be very glad to have the motion to reconsider acted on now, so that the bill may be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the vote be reconsidered and the bill be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what I desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely will be regarded as reconsidered. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is some confusion as to the order of business. The next bill according to my understanding is the one following the bill relating to public lands in Alabama, that is, House bill 2033. That is where we ended.

Mr. PLUMB. I insist that the rule shall be carried out; and that we shall take up the bill at the point where the Calendar was last under consideration from the date of the adoption of the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely what we are doing.

Mr. PLUMB. Let us have the decision of the Chair on that point. I insist that under the rule Order of Business 866, House bill No. 5200, should be first considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Chair has already decided this, because the Senate took up order of business No. 1029, relating to public lands in Alabama.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think that was decided. It was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When the bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands was taking up yesterday I was under the same impression with the Senator from Kansas that it was too far down on the list, but I had an inspection made at the Secretary's office, as I was not fond of the Alabama bill, to stop it on that ground if I could, in order to have fair play on the Calendar. It turned out on inquiry at the Secretary's office that was the bill last under consideration, and we had reached that number on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. Let us have the matter decided on the case now presented.

Mr. FRYE. Let the Chair decide it.

Mr. BROWN. Was not the Alabama lands bill the unfinished business when we adjourned last night?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; we have just disposed of that, and now the Senator from Kansas wishes to go back to an old Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. March 3 is the date of the Calendar I hold in my hand.

Mr. SHERMAN. He wishes to go back to what was the unfinished business under an old order. We commenced acting upon an order disposing of House bills, and reached the bill relating to lands in Alabama.

Mr. PLUMB. The proceedings of the Senate upon the bill to which I refer will show that when it was reached it was passed over without prejudice, and under the rule of the Senate that leaves it in order whenever it is called up for consideration under the rule which requires us to consider bills in the order in which they are reached.

Mr. HOAR. Will my friend from Kansas pardon me one moment while I make a suggestion? If we go back, the bill which will then be in order is a bill which is under my charge, and I shall ask the Senate to indefinitely postpone it. It is a House bill relating to House elections, intended when passed to operate on the last election cases, and as that is gone by there is no necessity for passing it. So if the Senate will give unanimous consent to indefinitely postpone the bill, Order of Business 848, a bill (H. R. 4666) relating to contested elections, it will cut the knot so far.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill be indefinitely postponed? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the order of business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. 848. The order of business under the rule introduced by the Senator from Ohio is No. 1033, a bill (H. R. 4958) making it an offense to personate a post-office inspector.

Mr. PLUMB. It is immaterial entirely for the purpose of House bill No. 5200, but when it was reached before for consideration it went over without prejudice, and under the unvaried rule of the Senate that leaves the bill practically to be considered whenever it may be called up by any member of the Senate, and it is in order to call it up at any time under the operation of that rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was under the impression that the bill called up by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] had been passed over informally without prejudice.

Mr. SHERMAN. The order was introduced by me at a time when we were disposing of House bills. It was agreed to unanimously. At that time the question arose as to where it commenced to operate, and the presiding officer then in the chair decided that it commenced with the bill relating to public lands in Alabama. We spent a day upon that, Order of Business No. 1020. The order was put in operation and commenced at that point. I simply ask that that order be adhered to, and that we go on from that time forward and take up the House bills unobjected to, and after those are gone through with, we can go back to the beginning of the Calendar and consider the other bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it has been the invariable custom to call up at any time bills passed over without prejudice. Bills passed over without prejudice may be considered under both rules.

Mr. SHERMAN. But no bill has been passed over without prejudice under the new rule. The rule was adopted since that time by which we were to commence at a certain place, and we actually commenced at that place, and I think we ought to go on. As I understand the Chair has properly announced that the bill next in order is Order of Business 1033, and if so we ought to proceed with that.

Mr. FRYE. Let us commence somewhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such having been the decision of the former occupant of the chair the Chair will conform to it; but it is the opinion of the Chair as at present occupied that bills passed over without prejudice may come up under both rules, and can be called up at any time.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is this case. The bill referred to by the Senator from Kansas was passed over without prejudice, and I insist that not only under the Anthony rule but under the rule we adopted the other day that bill is next in order.

Mr. GARLAND. If I had not been satisfied that we should have gone back I should have objected to its being passed over at the time because it is a very important bill. I was under the impression that we should go back at the proper time to it. There is no more important bill on the Calendar, according to my judgment, than that bill. I hope the rule will be enforced, and that we shall go back to that according to the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. GROOME. I simply wish to say in addition that the words "without prejudice" have some meaning or they do not. If they have any meaning whatever it must be that the bill can be taken up on the vote of a majority of the Senate whenever we proceed to the order of business on the Calendar. If the words do not have any meaning, then those of us who consented that that bill and other bills should be passed over without prejudice have been deceived as to the meaning of the rule under the former practice of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I understand that the Chair has decided the question.

Mr. BROWN. As I understand it we adopted a rule day before yesterday that should govern us for the residue of the session in taking up bills that have been favorably reported, and we then determined that we would commence where we last left off on the Calendar. That was the ruling yesterday, as I understand it, by the then presiding officer. If any bill has been passed over without prejudice since that rule was established, then we ought to go back to that bill, but not to all the bills that may have been heretofore passed over without prejudice under the Anthony rule.

Mr. GROOME. Nobody proposes to do that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No bill has been passed over without prejudice since the rule proposed by the Senator from Ohio was adopted.

Mr. BROWN. I say that bills which have been passed over without prejudice since the rule was adopted should be considered under it. Under the rule adopted a few days ago we should stick to the Calendar as it now is and go forward.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the reading of Order of Business 866.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the reading of Order of Business 1033.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The difficulty with the Senator from Ohio is that the Chair has decided against him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair it is the right of the Senator from Kansas to bring up a bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BROWN. Does that apply to cases that were passed over before we established the new rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does. The Senate is now acting under both rules.

Mr. BROWN. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair if that is the ruling. If the ruling is that we may go back to all the bills that we passed over without prejudice under the Anthony rule before we adopted the late rule, then I appeal from that decision. If the ruling is that we may go back and take up cases passed over without prejudice since we adopted the late rule, then I have no appeal to make.

Mr. PLUMB. Order of Business 866 is the only bill in that category.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that it is in order to take up bills that have been passed over without prejudice. From this decision the Senator from Georgia appeals, and the question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the Senator from Georgia will withdraw the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. BROWN. I will not call for the yeas and nays. That would take too long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ayes have it, and the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate.

POSTMASTERS' SALARIES.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for Order of Business 866, House bill 5200.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5200) authorizing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads were agreed to at a former sitting of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report from the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no printed report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have a statement at least from somebody to know how much this will involve.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And how many years it goes back.

Mr. PLUMB. A similar bill has been passed twice by the Senate heretofore. This bill is now here on its passage, having passed the House. It has been considered by the members of the Post-Office Committee. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] I have no doubt is more familiar with it than I am. I only know that having given the matter investigation two or three years ago, it seems to me to be a bill that ought to be passed.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. In regard to the amount this bill is expected to take from the Treasury, I will say that the estimates were originally that it would take about $500,000, but the amendments made by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which have been agreed to by the Senate, are of such a nature that it is believed by the committee that sum will be considerably reduced, and that the amount finally to be taken from the Treasury under it will be considerably less than $500,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF DANIEL CARROLL.

The bill (H. R. 6405) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh, executrices of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased, by the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736 in the city of Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the devisees under the will of the late Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, deceased, their heirs or assigns, may prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims, according to the rules of practice and proceedings in said court, against the District of Columbia, to recover such damages, if any, as they have sustained by reason of the change of grade and the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736 in the city of Washington; and the said court, if it shall appear that said claim for damages has not heretofore been presented or prosecuted before any board of audit established by the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, is hereby authorized to hear and determine the said suit; and in ascertaining the damages sustained by the plaintiffs, the court is directed to take into consideration the advantages, if any, to the said square numbered 736, resulting from the change of grade and regrading aforesaid. It shall be the duty of the attorney for the District to defend the said suit.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the said plaintiffs such sum as the Court of Claims may adjudge to be due them, or any or either of them, one-half of which sum shall be chargeable to the revenue derived from taxation within the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. Was that bill passed over without prejudice?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the committee who reported the bill whether there is any existing general law authorizing persons injured by changes in grade and changes in streets in the District of Columbia to recover damages?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is not.

Mr. HOAR. Then I must certainly object to the consideration of the bill. There are a great many persons who have sustained like damages who have no claim against the District of Columbia, if that be true.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is a very hard case of two old ladies, who have been seriously damaged. I think each case of this character ought to stand upon its own merit. We can hardly afford to pass a general law, I think. This is certainly a case where relief is demanded by every consideration, and I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts not to object.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it is a general rule of the common law that no land-owner is entitled to damages by reason of anything that an adjacent proprietor does on his own land unless it actually destroys the natural support of the soil. The United States owns the fee in the streets and all the public highways within the limits of the city of Washington, and it has a right to raise or lower the grade on that land at its pleasure. It has a right to appropriate it for the purpose of a public way or for any other purpose it shall see fit, and no claim for damages accrues.

This is not the case which exists in many of our States where the Government has merely taken an easement and the adjacent proprietor owns the fee over which it passes. The Government has been proceeding here upon the principle that no right of damages accrues. I admit it is a hard principle that when a person has acquired property with the understanding that a convenient way passes it, that way should be lowered or raised so as to make it inaccessible without great expenditure and regrading, but that is the existing general law. I remember an old gentleman from my own State who was compelled to come here for his health, who sustained damage in this way and was advised by his counsel that he had no redress. I do not think that it is fair to pick out two old ladies who happen to be very worthy and excellent people and make them exceptions to the entire rule. I therefore must object.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does one objection carry the bill over?

Mr. FRYE. It does under the Anthony rule, under which we are also acting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the Chair supposes that the bill can not be considered if it is objected to.

Mr. INGALLS. The injustice of the course that has been pursued by the Senator from Massachusetts in making a speech against the merits of this bill and then objecting to its consideration under a technical rule seems very obvious.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to explain.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not want any explanation. It explains itself.

Mr. HOAR. As the hour for the election of a President pro tempore has approached I will waive my objection, if the Senator wants to reply; but in view of the time, I stopped in my own speech in the middle; so that the Senator's criticism is not just.

RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois). Senators, gratitude fails to express the feeling which moves me in responding to the generous expressions in the resolution you have adopted. As the presiding officer of this honored body, I have received courteous cooperation from both sides, and constant kindness in the discharge of official duties and in personal intercourse.

I ought to be, and I believe I am, fully sensible of the obligations imposed by these acts, the more so as I entered upon the duties of the Chair almost a stranger to parliamentary practices. Six years have passed away since the Legislature of Illinois conferred upon me the trust which is about to expire by constitutional limitation. I neither sought nor expected an election, which was brought about by a union of different elements.

Political convictions have separated me from the two great parties, and have subjected my action here and elsewhere to the criticisms of organs of both organizations.

A public man who steps outside of regular party lines is exposed to misrepresentation of his motives and to the charge of weakness in his conduct. He gets little credit for the moral courage of self-assertion, and none for casting aside ambition in defense of his principles.

In legislating I have striven to consider measures solely with reference to the public good and without the least regard to their political paternity. Above and beyond all other objects, my great aim has been to extinguish the strife of sections, and to see the Union restored in all its integrity, with refreshed and increased grandeur.

Thank God, that happy day has at last come. North and South are only geographical expressions. Fifty millions of free, happy, and prosperous people rejoice in a reunited country, strengthened by the sternest of human trials.

I shall carry away with me, and cherish as a solace in private life, the cordial friendships formed here. It will be a constant pleasure to reflect upon, that no jar has disturbed the administration of the high office I now resign, bidding an affectionate farewell to every member of the Senate, and to every officer connected with it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, retired from the chair and took a seat on the floor.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Secretary, pursuant to the order adopted yes terday I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its present consideration.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] offers the following resolution:

Resolved, That GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont, is hereby chosen President pro tempore of the Senate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Secretary, I move to strike out the words "GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont," and to insert "THOMAS F. BAYARD, a Senator from the State of Delaware."

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is moved by the Senator from Ohio that the words "GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont," be stricken from the resolution, and that the words "THOMAS F. BAYARD, a Senator from the State of Delaware," be inserted in lieu thereof. Is the Senate ready for the question? ["Question."] As many as are in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will say "ay;" those of a contrary opinion will say "no." [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it; the "noes" have it. The amendment is rejected. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY].

The resolution was agreed to.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] are requested to conduct the President pro tempore elect to the chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS advanced to the Secretary's desk, escorted by Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. BAYARD, and said:

Senators, I beg to thank the Senate sincerely for the honor it has conferred upon me, and to say that I shall endeavor to discharge the duties imposed with fidelity. But I think under the law I ought to take an oath of office. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY], he being the oldest Senator present, to administer it.

The oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, having been administered to Mr. EDMUNDS, he took the chair as President pro tempore of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Acting Secretary of the Senate inform the President of the United States that the Senate has chosen Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont, President pro tempore of the Senate in the place of Hon. DAVID DAVIS, resigned.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Acting Secretary of the Senate inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has chosen Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont, President pro tempore of the Senate in the place of Hon. DAVID DAVIS, resigned.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 331) for the printing of the Agricultural Report for the year 1883.

HEIRS OF DANIEL CARROLL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the bill under consideration is House bill 6405, which will be announced.

The ACTING SECRETARY. "A bill (H. R. 6405) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by Ann C. Carroll and Mariah C. Fitzhugh, executrices of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased, by the regrading of the streets around square No. 736 in the city of Washington."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the Chair understands, has the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who has charge of the pending bill. It would not do to have the bill passed in the shape it is in. It is contrary to all the precedents of bills of this character.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood that the Senator from Massachusetts objected to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. That I did not know. Has the bill gone over?

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand so, very much to my regret.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not understand the Senator from Massachusetts to interpose a peremptory objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the Senator from Massachusetts did object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I withdrew the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to offer an amendment. In line 21, at the end of section 1, after the work "suit," I move to add:

And each party shall have the right to appeal from any final decision in such case to the Supreme Court of the United States under the existing rules of practice in such court.

This bill makes the decision in the Court of Claims final. That is contrary to all the precedents we have ever enacted in Congress. Important questions of law, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, will come up in this case, and it should be subject to review by the court of last resort. The amendment I have offered is the usual provision in all such cases.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am quite willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. I think it is very proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas offers the amendment. It can not be accepted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out all the words from the beginning of the third line to the word "six" in the tenth line, in the following words:

That the devisees under the will of the late Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, deceased, their heirs or assigns, may prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims, according to the rules of practice and proceedings in said court, against the District of Columbia, to recover such damages, if any, as they have sustained by reason of the change of grade and the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736.

And insert:

That all persons who have sustained damage by reason of change of grade or regrading of any street in the city of Washington may prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims to recover such damages as they have sustained thereby, according to the rules of practice and proceedings in said court, against the District of Columbia.

Then I wish to amend by striking out, in lines 17, 18, and 19, the words:

To the said square numbered 736, resulting from the change of grade and regrading aforesaid.

And inserting:

Which have accrued to the real estate of the petitioners thereby.

So as to read:

And in ascertaining the damages sustained by the plaintiffs, the court is directed to take into consideration the advantages, if any, which have accrued to the real estate of the petitioners thereby.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the amendments of the Senator from Massachusetts would make this a general law involving a magnitude of interest so great that we certainly ought not to consider it now. I shall object to the bill without any disparagement to its merits.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator withdraw the objection one moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on the District of Columbia have long had the subject of remedies for damages to real estate in this District resulting from change of grades and other operations in engineering before them for consideration. It is impossible to pass a general law bearing upon this subject that will not result in great injustice to the community and to the Government. It is necessary that these matters should be dealt with as they arise.

I suppose that most Senators who have been in the city of Washington long are familiar with the real estate affected by this bill. It is known as Duddington, a fragment of a very large estate that belonged to Daniel Carroll, of Carrollton, one of the original proprietors of the city of Washington. It is in the southeastern portion of the city. A large brick mansion, erected in the early part of the century, exists there, and the property is surrounded by a brick wall that has fallen away in consequence of the grading of the streets that surround the block. The ladies living there are the last survivors of that historic character. They have been reduced to comparative indigence. The property is unsalable in consequence of the operations of the Government in grading the streets around it.

I have never known a case that appealed more strongly not only to justice but to generosity. I am aware, and so is the Senator from Massachusetts, that these amendments will strangle the bill. I do not say that that is the intent or the design or the purpose, but such will be the result. Unless this bill can be passed as it came from the House it can not be passed at all, and these victims of the injustice of the Government will continue to have their claim unsatisfied, and it may be that their lives will close before justice can be done. One of them has died already since this measure has been pending. I shall have discharged what I conceive to be a solemn duty when I have called the attention of Congress to the meritoriousness of this claim and pointed out the fact that if these amendments are adopted and the measure is returned to the House it there will die.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Ohio to object to the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Massachusetts insists on his amendments I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts insist on his amendments?

Mr. HOAR. I do. I know it is a very hard case——

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for a vote on the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio objects to the further consideration of the bill and it goes over.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Ohio said if the Senator from Massachusetts insisted on the amendments, that is, of course if there was to be debate, he would object.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts does insist on them.

Mr. INGALLS. Then we can vote, for there will be no further debate, I think.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the Senator from Massachusetts wants to cite cases, and under the rule he can not take the time.

SAMUEL CHASE BARNEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next House bill on the Calendar favorably reported will be announced.

The bill (H. R. 660) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It restores Samuel Chase Barney, late a lieutenant in the United States Navy, to the retired-list; and entitles him to the pay of a retired Navy officer of the grade which he held at the date of his dismissal; but he is not to receive any pay or allowance for the period between his dismissal and the date of the passage of the act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the bill is not in the usual form.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report in this case?

Mr. GROOME. There is a House report, and a very full one. I wish to say that I have anticipated the objection of the Senator from Missouri to the form of the bill, and I think that the objection is well taken. I have consequently prepared an amendment to meet his point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "that," in line 3, to the word "but," in line 7; and to insert:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Samuel Chase Barney, late a lieutenant in the United States Navy, to be a lieutenant of the Navy on the retired-list, and from and after his appointment he shall be entitled to the pay of a retired lieutenant of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there a report in that matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Senator from Maryland that there is not a Senate report but a House report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Something ought to be said about this claim before it passes. I ask the Chair also whether this bill was passed over without prejudice, so as to be in order?

Mr. GROOME. Such was the fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it was reached when the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY], who reported it, was out of his seat, and on account of his necessary absence it was passed over.

Mr. GROOME. The Senator from Ohio, I understand, desires a statement of the facts upon which the bill is based. I will state them briefly.

Samuel Chase Barney was a lieutenant in the United States Navy. In the Seminole war in 1841 he contracted incipient deafness, which was increased in the Mexican war and necessitated his being placed on the retired-list of the Navy.

He married; the seas of matrimony proved tempestuous, and shipwreck resulted. His wife applied to an Iowa court and obtained a divorce, with the custody of the children of the marriage and the exclusive control of her property. She died, and an officious intermeddler supposing that inasmuch as the custody of the children had been given to the mother the father had no right to resume it after her death, applied to the orphans' court of this District for letters of guardianship, and obtained a decision to that effect. From that decision an appeal was taken to the circuit court, which reversed it and directed the orphans' court, upon the father giving a suitable bond, to appoint him guardian of the persons and property of his children. From that decree in turn an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, which dismissed it upon the ground that it had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and declared the decree of the circuit court to be in full force, and issued a certificate to that effect to the circuit court. When this was done the intermeddler applied to the circuit court for an injunction to restrain Lieutenant Barney from exercising any control over the persons or estate of his children, with a view to defeating the former decree of that court. The bill asking for this relief was not sworn to nor was the process prayed for served upon the defendant, Lieutenant Barney.

Under these circumstances Walter D. Davidge, a leading lawyer of this District, advised Lieutenant Barney that he was entitled to resume the custody of his children. He took possession of them and placed them at schools near Catonsville, Maryland. This act was misrepresented to the President of the United States as an act of contempt of the circuit court of this District and an outrage upon law and decency. Upon that representation the President summarily dismissed Lieutenant Barney. Lieutenant Barney was never able to ascertain until 1876 the cause of his dismissal, although he demanded to be informed of it within two days after it occurred.

Mr. SHERMAN. What President dismissed him?

Mr. GROOME. President Lincoln.

Mr. LOGAN. What was the cause?

Mr. GROOME. The cause was that he had taken the control and custody of his own children under the advice of his counsel, Mr. Davidge, of this District, and when other people, who had no more claim upon them than the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from Illinois, were attempting to defeat the father's right to their guardianship.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator say that was the cause of his dismissal?

Mr. GROOME. That was the cause, as is plainly shown by the House report, in which is printed the series of letters which led to the dismissal of Lieutenant Barney.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator must be in error. That can not have been the cause.

Mr. GROOME. The Senator from Illinois will permit me to say that of course the facts were so represented to the President that he was led to believe that this gentleman was guilty of a gross contempt of court, and possibly in view of the fact that the bill was filed, although it was unsworn to and although no process had been served upon him, Mr. Barney ought not to have attempted to resume the custody of his children until he had first procured its dismissal. But he afterward brought his children into this District and placed them under the jurisdiction of the court. Their removal beyond the District was the cause of his offending, and I have no doubt that the facts were grossly misrepresented to the President of the United States, otherwise Lieutenant Barney never would have been dismissed. I think, therefore, having been thus dismissed because the real character of his act was misepresented and misunderstood, that this tardy measure of justice ought to be done him by placing him again on the retired-list.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland a question.

Mr. GROOME. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. Did this man apply to Congress?

Mr. GROOME. He was dismissed March 6, 1863.

Mr. LOGAN. Never mind that. I do not want to take time. Has he ever applied to Congress to be restored to the Navy?

Mr. GROOME. He has attempted to secure such restoration.

Mr. LOGAN. When?

Mr. GROOME. Within a short time after he ascertained the cause of his dismissal, which as I said was in 1876.

Mr. LOGAN. He now applies to be put on the retired-list?

Mr. GROOME. He does.

Mr. LOGAN. Has the Senator concluded the remarks he wished to make?

Mr. GROOME. I will hear what the Senator has to say.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want the Senator to yield. I have a motion to make.

Mr. GROOME. I will only add that he applies to be placed on the retired-list for the reason that was his position at the time of his dismissal.

M. LOGAN. I object to the consideration of this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois objects to the further consideration of the bill, and it goes over.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 26th ultimo, a list of officers of the United States Army on duty in Washington, moved that it be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

THE JEANNETTE INQUIRY.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the letter of the Secretary of the Navy transmitting proceedings of a court of inquiry concerning the loss of the steamer Jeannette, and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Before proceeding to the next case on the Calendar I ask leave to make a report on the river and harbor bill from the Committee on Commerce. I ask that the report be read. I make the report subject to any point of order that may lie.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving the report at this time? The Chair hears none, and the report is received.

Mr. CONGER. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to which was referred House bill 7631, "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," beg leave to submit the following report:

The bill came from the House of Representatives to the Senate at a late hour night before last, but its reference to the committee was prevented by the interposition of parliamentary objections until 2 o'clock yesterday, less than forty-eight hours before the close of the present session of Congress.

The bill contains two hundred and three items of appropriation, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $8,000,000 in round numbers. It is manifest that a satisfactory examination of these items of appropriation, in connection with the statements of the Chief of Engineers and his subordinates in charge of the works, communicated to Congress by the Secretary of War, and upon which we are authorized to rely, can not be made in time to report the bill at the present session of Congress; much less can it be done in time for action by the Senate at this session; yet without such examination, which it has heretofore been the custom of the committee to make, the committee do not feel justified in recommending the passage of the bill.

The importance of the annual appropriation for rivers and harbors can not be overestimated. The water channels of communication between the different parts of the country and the facilities afforded by safe and commodious harbors are the great securities of commerce against oppressive rates of transportation by railroad companies.

We are deeply impressed with the importance of continuing the works and repairs in our rivers and harbors already commenced and of the danger of great loss to the Government if these works are interrupted.

While, therefore, we are prevented by want of time from making such an examination of the bill as will enable us to make a positive recommendation of the passage of the bill, we do not feel at liberty to retain it in committee, and thus prevent action upon it by the Senate.

We therefore report the bill back to the Senate for such action as it deems proper.

S. J. R. McMILLAN.
W. P. KELLOGG.
JOHN P. JONES.
O. D. CONGER.
WARNER MILLER.
M. W. RANSOM.
RICHARD COKE.
J. T. FARLEY.
G. G. VEST.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow, under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed in the RECORD, having been read.

Mr. CONGER. And also printed as a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The usual order to print will be made. The next bill on the Calendar under the existing order will be stated.

CAPITOL POLICE.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay was announced as the next in order.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that lie over until the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who reported it comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice for the time being. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

PERSONATION OF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR.

The bill (H. R. 4958) making it an offense to personate a post-office inspector was announced as next in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. GARLAND. On inspecting that bill I find that it is already embraced in a bill that was reported from the Judiciary Committee last Monday, which was passed. This bill makes it an offense to personate a certain officer. That bill was a general one, making it an offense to personate an officer or agent of the Government in any capacity. I move the indefinite postponement of this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a House bill, and if we strike out the text of this bill and substitute the one which we passed on the report of the Judiciary Committee, it will go back to the House and the Senate amendment will be concurred in there.

Mr. GARLAND. I am willing to accept that suggestion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the bill to which the Senator from Arkansas referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes that that bill is not at the Secretary's desk at this moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that ought to be done, because that bill covers the case of fraudulent representation as to pensioners.

Mr. SHERMAN. Any amendment on the bill now sending it back to the House would naturally defeat it. It is scarcely possible that it could become a law.

Mr. COCKRELL. The House may be able to concur in our amendment. It is a very important matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside informally, if there is no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. It would do no harm to pass the bill even if the Senate bill becomes a law. The greater contains the less, and inasmuch as there is a necessity for some action on the subject, it appears to me to be wise to pass this bill; but then I have no special interest in the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside if there be no objection, and the next bill on the Calendar under the existing order will be reported.

FORGING POSTAL MONEY-ORDERS.

The bill (H. R. 4962) to amend section 5463 of the Revised Statutes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It amends the section by inserting after the word "indorsement," in the seventh line, the words "or receipt."

Mr. HILL. This bill is not one of pressing importance. There has been reported from the same committee a joint resolution (H. Res. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General, which is of great importance, embracing only a few lines. I ask that the joint resolution be considered in place of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. We shall come to the joint resolution in a little while.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that for Order of Business 1034, now before the Senate, Order of Business 1226 be substituted in its place for present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. We shall reach that directly. I hope the Senator will not interpose now in the order of business.

Mr. HILL. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not object.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not like to have the regular order interfered with in this way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana object?

Mr. BECK. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky object?

Mr. BECK. I object. I want to have the Calendar considered regularly if I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the section of the statute read which it proposes to amend.

Mr. GARLAND. I was going to make the suggestion that the true way is to follow what appears in the bill by saying that the section will read as follows. I move to amend the bill in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill so that the section will read:

SEC. 5463. Any person who shall, with intent to defraud, falsely make, forge, counterfeit, engrave, or print, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, counterfeited, engraved, or printed, or willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, counterfeiting, engraving, or printing, any order in imitation of or purporting to be a money-order issued by the Post-Office Department, or any of its postmasters or agents, or any material signature or indorsement thereon; any person who shall falsely alter, or cause or procure to be altered, or willingly aid or assist in falsely altering any such money-order; any person who shall, with intent to defraud, pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish, as true, any such false, forged, counterfeited, or altered money-order, knowing the same, or any signature or indorsement or receipt thereon, to be false, forged, counterfeited, or altered, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than two years and not more than five years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SECTION 5480, REVISED STATUTES.

The bill (H. R. 4961) to amend section 5480 of the Revised Statutes was announced as next in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. GARLAND. I move the like amendment to that, so that the section shall read as follows——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas proposes an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. MILLER, of California. May I have permission to make a report at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it if there be no objection.

DAVID S. BOOTH.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 151) for the relief of David S. Booth, doctor of medicine, to report the same favorably and without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask, if there be no objection, that that bill be acted on. It is a matter that probably will not be reached if it goes on the Calendar, and it will take but a moment to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill just reported be now considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is in violation of the rule we are acting under.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent now to take up the deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The next bill in order on the Calendar is Order of Business 1047, being the bill (H. R. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government. I hope my friend from Maine will not ask to take up the deficiency bill until that bill can be acted on.

Mr. HALE. Where does the bill the Senator speaks of stand on the Calendar?

Mr. COCKRELL. The third one from where we are now.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are two intermediate bills which I shall ask to have considered.

Mr. HALE. I find that there is a conflict between Senators here as to which will come up next. The Senator from Rhode Island objects to the bill of the Senator from Wisconsin being next considered.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I do not object; but I say there are other bills which ought to be considered before that is reached.

Mr. BECK. They will only take the time required to read them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the appropriation bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope the Senator from Maine will not insist on it just now.

Mr. BECK. Will not the Senator from Maine give us ten minutes to see if we can not pass these bills?

Mr. HALE. I will give ten minutes, and then I will call up the appropriation bill. Let it be laid aside for that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the appropriation bill just taken up be laid aside informally for ten minutes.

Mr. INGALLS. Say until 1 o'clock. ["Yes."]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until 1 o'clock. The Chair hears no objection.

SECTION 5480 REVISED STATUTES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4961) to amend section 5480 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the proposed amendment to the bill.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] to make the bill read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 5480 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "or," where the same occurs between the words "defraud" and "be," in the second line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "to."

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 5480. If any person having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, to be effected by either opening or intending to open correspondence or communication with any other person, whether resident within or outside of the United States, by means of the Post-Office Establishment of the United States, or by inciting such other person to open communication with the person so devising or intending, shall, in and for executing such scheme or artifice, or attempting so to do, place any letter or packet in any post-office of the United States, or take or receive any therefrom, such person so misusing the Post-Office Establishment shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500, and by imprisonment for not more than eighteen months, or by both such punishment. The indictment, information, or complaint may severally charge offenses to the number of three when committed within the same six calendar months; but the court thereupon shall give a single sentence, and shall proportion the punishment especially to the degree in which the abuse of the Post-Office Establishment enters as an instrument into such fraudulent scheme and device.

Mr. GARLAND. These bills which we have been considering are bills that come from the Post-Office Committee in reference to postal crimes. They reported them entirely out of order, and it will take some little time to put these bills in shape. I shall be compelled to object to the further consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is objected to, and it goes over. The next House bill on the Calendar will be stated.

GERMAN NATIONAL BANK OF LOUISVILLE.

The bill (H. R. 2911) for the relief of the German National Bank of Louisville, Kentucky, was announced as next in order, and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $313.50 to the German National Bank of Louisville, Kentucky, being the amount of United States 5-20 coupons inclosed in a registered letter and destroyed while in custody of the postal authorities; but a satisfactory bond of indemnity is to be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury before the payment shall be made.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. ALDRICH. A unanimous report of the Finance Committee. It is to pay for some coupons lost in transit through the mail. There is ample proof furnished the committee that they were lost. The bill provides for a bond of indemnity to the Government in case they should ever turn up.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM W. THOMAS.

The bill (H. R. 604) for the relief of William W. Thomas was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to William W. Thomas, of Portland, Maine, of $450, being the amount of coupons of United States bonds lost by him, and now unpaid, upon his giving a bond of indemnity in double the amount to be paid, with sureties, satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$450" and insert "$309;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to William W. Thomas, of Portland, in the State of Maine, the sum of $309, being the amount of coupons of United States bonds lost by him, and now unpaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 28, after "Thomas," to insert "furnishing to the Secretary of the Treasury satisfactory proof of the loss and destruction thereof, and;" in line 31, before "Secretary," to insert "said," and after "Secretary" to strike out "of the Treasury;" so as to read:

Upon said Thomas furnishing to the Secretary of the Treasury satisfactory proof of the loss and destruction thereof, and giving a bond of indemnity in double the amount to be paid, with sureties satisfactory to said Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Printing have leave to sit during the recess of Congress.

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

The bill (H. R. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. JACKSON. That bill will lead to considerable discussion. There are various amendments to be offered to it; and I suggest that it had better go over.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JACKSON. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

JUSTICE IN TUNIS.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 303) respecting the administration of justice in Tunis was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment after "Tunis," in line 5, to strike out "by the Government of France;" so as to read:

Be it resolved, &c., That when the President of the United States shall be satisfied that a system for the administration of justice shall be established in Tunis in accordance with the usage of civilized and Christian nations, under which all rights of person and property of the citizens of the United States may be fully and permanently protected, he shall be, and is hereby, authorized, by proclamation, to declare that the right on the part of the United States and its citizens to claim extra-territorial jurisdiction within said territory of Tunis, as secured by existing treaties and laws, has ceased, and will no longer be claimed or exercised.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

J. J. COFFEY AND REBECCA S. LEWIS.

The bill (H. R. 2638) for the relief of J. J. Coffey and Rebecca S. Lewis, mother of Burge Rawle Lewis, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $2,000 each to J. J. Coffey and Rebecca S. Lewis, mother of Burge Rawle Lewis, being in full compensation for salary while J. J. Coffey and Burge Rawle Lewis were kept out of their positions as clerks in the consulate-general at Shanghai, China, upon their return after testifying in the Seward investigation before the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, in 1878 and 1879.

Mr. LOGAN. Is there a report with that bill?

Mr. WINDOM. There is a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. WINDOM. The bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; I do not care for the reading if that is the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGIA REVOLUTIONARY CLAIM.

The bill (H. R. 110) to refund to the State of Georgia certain money expended by said State for the common defense in 1777 was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROLLINS. I object under the belief that that bill will lead to pretty thorough debate.

Mr. BROWN. There will be no debate. I think if the Senator from New Hampshire will hear the report read there will be no debate, and I am sure my friend will not object. It is an important matter to my State. I appeal to him not to make any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire insist on his objection?

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator hears the report, I am sure he will not object. It will not take five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his objection?

Mr. ROLLINS. Not at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire insists upon his objection and the bill goes over.

RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (H. R. 1926) to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes so as not to exclude retired Army officers from holding civil office in the Territories was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An objection carries the bill over.

WILLIAM BOWEN.

The bill (H. R. 1768) for the relief of William Bowen was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. That has been acted on. It ought to be passed over. It has been indefinitely postponed once.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly; let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion to reconsider pending. Would that come under the rule?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGIA REVOLUTIONARY CLAIM.

Mr. BROWN. My friend from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] withdraws his objection to the little bill I had up just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his objection to the consideration of House bill 110?

Mr. ROLLINS. Yes, sir.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 110) to refund to the State of Georgia certain money expended by said State for the common defense in 1777. It proposes to require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the State of Georgia, or its lawfully authorized agent, $35,555.42, being for money paid by the State for supplies for the troops in 1777, under the command of General James Jackson, engaged in local defense for the common cause of Independence, and which sum was not included in the account of the State of Georgia in the settlement with the General Government under the assumption act of 1790.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear the report in that case.

Mr. BROWN. I am perfectly willing to submit the case on the report if Senators will pay attention to the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. BARROW January 6, 1882.

At 1 o'clock p. m.,

Mr. INGALLS. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the regular order will be laid before the Senate, being the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that this bill be disposed of.

Mr. INGALLS. Not until the appropriation bill is out of the way.

Mr. BROWN. The reading of the report has commenced.

Mr. BARROW. I hope my friend from Kansas will allow us to have a vote on this bill. It is a short bill, and has been three times reported favorably.

Mr. INGALLS. We have but a fraction of a day remaining in which to complete our business, and the most important thing before us is the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill. After we have got through with that we can take this up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill will be the pending order after that. The deficiency bill will be laid before the Senate.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be acted on as they are reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the order of the Senate, if there be no objection.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 37 of section 1, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of State to pay Mrs. Caroline C. Marsh, widow of the late George P. Marsh, minister of the United States to Italy, the balance of one year's salary, said year to be reckoned from June 23, A. D. 1882; and to enable said Secretary to pay the necessary expenses of the funeral and burial of the late Mr. Marsh, and of erecting a suitable stone at his grave in Rome, $12,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 45, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of State to pay E. J. Mallet, of New York, late consul-general to Italy, his unpaid salary for the two years he served as such consul-general, $6,000; and to enable said Secretary to reimburse the official expenses of said consul-general, the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Secretary of State shall, on examination, find this sum or any part thereof is legally due.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 53, to insert:

For salary of consul of the United States at Tangier, Barbary States, $1,000, being additional to his salary as provided for in the consular and diplomatic act approved July 1, 1882.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," after line 86, to insert:

For payment of assessments to city of Des Moines, Iowa, upon streets adjacent to the United States court-house and post-office building in said city, as audited at the Treasury Department, $2,087.30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "miscellaneous," after line 112, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War to remove all claims and pretensions in respect of the property in the State of Virginia known as Arlington, on which a cemetery for the burial of deceased soldiers of the United States has been established, and which property was taken by the United States for public use in the year A. D. 1864, $150,000; but this appropriation shall not be paid out of the Treasury until the Attorney-General shall be satisfied, and so certify to the Secretary of War, that the deed or deeds to be given to the United States to the end aforesaid will convey a complete title and contain covenants of general warranty and covenants against every manner of claim against or in respect of said property, whether in rem or in personam, and also against all and every claim for damages in respect of, or the use and occupation of said property, and also a release by every person entitled of all claim for and to the amount bid, or any part thereof, in behalf of the United States, on the tax sale of said property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 131, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War to pay to J. C. Burdick $820, to E. M. Wadsworth $820, and to C. A. Peck $820, commissioners appointed under the authority of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to aid in the improvement of Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin," for services in ascertaining and awarding the amount of damages by reason of the flowage of lands caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interior Department," in line 135, to reduce the appropriation "for photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Official Gazette" from $4,500 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 157, to reduce appropriation "for photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of the weekly issues of drawings of patents, designs, and trade-marks" from $20,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 157, to insert:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses, Pension Office, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 159, to insert:

Howard University: For repairs to buildings, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 164, to insert:

For incidental expenses of the several land offices, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 171, to insert:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to feed a number of Piute and other Indians in Nevada, now in a destitute condition, to be available immediately, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 175, to insert:

For completing the new census-roll of the Cherokee Indians residing east of the Mississippi River, as required by law, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 185, to strike out the following clause:

This amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to continue the investigation of Cherokee Indian matters named in the act of Congress approved August 7, 1882, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to strike out all in the bill between lines 191 and 239. I will also object to the portion of the bill contained in the reported amendments between lines 240 and 271, on the ground that it is general legislation. The matter has already been acted upon on a previous bill by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] moves to strike out from line 191 to line 239. The question is on that amendment. The Secretary will first read the lines proposed to be stricken out.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians is hereby authorized to institute a suit in the Court of Claims against the United States to determine the rights of the said band in and to the moneys, stocks, and bonds, held by the United States in trust for the Cherokee Indians, arising out of the sales of lands lying west of the Mississippi River, and also in certain other fund, commonly called the permanent annuity fund, to which suit the Cherokee Nation, commonly called the Cherokee Nation West, shall be made a party defendant. The said Eastern Band shall within three months after the passage of this act file a petition in said court, verified by the principal chief of said band, setting forth the facts upon which said claim is based. The said Cherokee Nation West shall within six months after the passage of this act file its answer to said petition, and said cause shall proceed to final determination pursuant to the practice in said court, and such rules or orders as the said court may make in that behalf.

The Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to said court, for the consideration of said court, copies duly certified of all records, reports, papers, and other documents on file in the Department of the Interior which he may deem necessary to said cause or which may be requested by either of the parties hereinbefore referred to, and the said parties, respectively, may take and submit to said court such additional competent testimony as they may desire. And jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to hear and determine what, if any, interest, legal or equitable, the said Eastern Band has in said moneys, stocks, bonds so held in trust as aforesaid by the United States, and shall enter a decree specifically defining the rights and interests of the said Eastern Band therein, and in any moneys hereafter to be derived from sources similar to those out of which the existing fund arose.

When the interest, if any of the said Eastern Band has been ascertained as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of the portion of said fund adjudged to said parties, respectively, pay all the proper costs and expenses of said respective parties of the proceedings herein provided for, each party, except the United States, to be liable for its own costs and expenses, and the remainder shall be placed to credit of the said Eastern Band and of the said Cherokee Nation, in accordance with their respective rights as ascertained by the said judgment and decree of said court.

In the said proceeding the Attorney-General, or such of his assistants as he may designate, shall appear on behalf of the United States. Either of the parties to said cause may appeal from any judgment rendered by said Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the said courts shall give such cause precedence.

Mr. HALE. These are old controverted subjects that have interested these Indians for years. They have been buffeted about from one place to another, and at last the House of Representatives has inserted this clause and passed it, sending them to the Court of Claims under restrictions and safeguards that the Committee on Appropriations deem to be good and wise. It is not subject to a point of order, of course, because the House has adopted it, and it rests entirely with the Senate whether the provision shall remain in or out.

I do not care to discuss it further except to say that the committee think the provision is well guarded.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the Senate will not strike this out. It is not subject to a point of order. We are not responsible for the fact that it is in this appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. We are responsible for its staying in it.

Mr. DAWES. To begin with, it is a matter in which the United States has no pecuniary interest. It is a question arising between the different bands of Cherokee Indians; those in the Indian Territory and those who have not gone there, an old claim that they have found no way to settle themselves. They have been here and asked Congress a great many times and in a great many ways to aid them in settling this claim between themselves. Now both sides are willing to go into the Court of Claims to let it be settled there. I hope, now that it is in the bill, that this claim will be finally disposed of and for the best interest of the Indians themselves. It is doing them great injury to be continually contending among themselves over this fund, and one side claiming that the other has got more than its share. I do not know myself which is in the right. The Committee on Indian Affairs, who have had this subject before them year after year, would be exceedingly obliged to the Senate if it would relieve them and refer the matter to the Court of Claims where both parties are willing to go.

Mr. CONGER. There are two amendments to this clause of the bill that should be acted on before the motion to strike out is put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not observe that.

Mr. CONGER. On lines 193 and 194.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The Committee on Appropriations propose after the word "United," in line 192, to insert "States;" in line 194, after "stocks," to insert "and," and in the same line, after "bonds," to strike out "and so forth;" so as to read:

The Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians is hereby authorized to institute a suit in the Court of Claims against the United States to determine the rights of the said band in and to the moneys, stocks, and bonds held by the United States in trust for the Cherokee Indians, arising out of the sales of lands lying west of the Mississippi River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These amendments will be regarded as agreed to if there be no objection. These amendments being made, the question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to strike out the lines which have been read.

The motion was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 239, to insert:

That that portion of the Cherokee Nation of Indians residing west of the Mississippi River, and known and designated as "Western Cherokees" or "Old Settlers," by and under the name and style of the "Old Settler Cherokee Indians," be, and they are hereby, authorized to present their claims against the United States, by petition to the Court of Claims of the United States, within one year next after the passage of this act, to recover whatever balance, if any, is justly and equitably due them from the United States under the Cherokee treaties of 1828, 1833, 1835, 1836, and 1846, according to the tenor and effect of said treaties at the dates of their respective ratifications; and to the end that justice may be done, such court shall examine all settlements heretofore made under said treaties and acts of Congress, and other acts and proceedings relating thereto, and correct all errors, if any, that may have been made by any accounting officers or other authority of the Government of the United States in marshaling and settling the accounts for the said "Old Settlers," in improper charges, erroneous calculations, misconstruction of laws and treaties, or misapplication of funds. And the said court, in the examination of said "Old Settlers" claim, shall consider the same with reference to, and be governed by, the said treaties, laws, acts, and proceedings as relate to or affect said "Old Settlers," and shall render judgment on the equities of said claims under the said treaties, laws, acts, and proceedings aforesaid; and either party may appeal from said judgment to the Supreme Court of the United States, and said case, when so appealed, shall have precedence.

Mr. INGALLS. I raise the point of order that under the rules of the Senate this is general legislation and can not be received on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained by the Chair.

Mr. PLUMB. I wanted to say, simply for my own justification and the committee's——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. PLUMB. I will for a moment. I would rather appeal to my colleague. I wish to state what has governed me in the action I have taken in regard to this case as a member of the Committee on Appropriations. Ever since I have been in this body I have known of the existence of these claims and I presume every other Senator has. Nothing is more delicate to legislate about than our relations or the relations of any white man to an Indian or to a tribe of Indians; and yet we are constantly besought here to take up claims of this kind and dispose of them. Sometimes we will do it; sometimes not. Finally we have got to dispose of this subject and put it out of the way.

There is a disposition I think that formal claims of a kind which appeal to the equity side of Congress should go to the Court of Claims as a tribunal which will be better able to dispose of them than Congress can possibly be. This is so manifestly fair, I think, and so manifestly necessary if we are ever to do anything about this matter at all, that I certainly hope my colleague will not be unreasonable enough to interpose an objection unless (as of course is entirely proper) his objection goes to any legislation on appropriation bills.

My colleague nods his acquiescence in that statement. That is a little bit late, I think, on the whole, because we have legislated and we shall continue to legislate upon bills of this and a similar kind; and while we may have a spasm of virtue every now and then which will strike off on the point of order some proposition, at the same time some legislation will undoubtedly creep into the appropriation bills that pass. It can not be helped.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the appeal taken by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. CONGER. I rose to make a suggestion to the Chair before the point of order was decided, but the Chair did not stop to hear me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CONGER. I rose to address the Chair before there was a ruling on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was nothing to address the Chair upon, because the question had to be decided without debate under the rules. The Chair decided it, and the Senator from Kansas appealed from the decision of the Chair. Now the Senator from Kansas withdraws the appeal.

Mr. CONGER. I appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. CONGER. I would respectfully call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is a bill to make appropriations to supply deficiences for the past year and for prior years, and for other purposes. That is the very title of the bill. There is no question with those who have examined this subject that the balance of money found due and required by law to have been appropriated in a prior year for this purpose has failed to be appropriated; and therefore there was a deficiency under the award of the Senate, which, by virtue of an act of Congress, determined the amount due. Questions have arisen in regard to that; and this amendment is in the direction of providing for the payment of that deficiency and only in that direction.

I do not assert positively that it is taken without the rule on that ground; I am not prepared to say that; I only made my appeal to call the attention of the Chair to the fact, if he has examined this case, that the very last action of Congress was to provide that the Senate should act as arbitrator in regard to these claims and make an award and that payment should be made according to that award that stands there unchanged and unaltered by any law of Congress up to this time; but from time to time Congress has declined or neglected to make the appropriation to meet that award. Now, in my judgment, it is just as much a deficiency to be provided for either by complying with the law and inserting in a bill an appropriation of an amount of money found due under the law by the Senate acting as arbitrator, as any other deficiency that has ever occurred. It should have been appropriated for in good faith on the part of Congress with due respect to the Senate and its arbitrament and decision; it might have been appropriated for at any session from that time to this. It is still binding unless otherwise directed by Congress. That is the situation of this matter.

Now, if this amendment tends in any way to provide an appropriation for carrying out the law, or if it defines the means by which an appropriation shall be made and the amount ascertained, I submit that it is within the spirit and meaning of the rule to be put upon this bill. I think myself, and I say it here without fear of contradiction, that in the whole list of claims which have been presented from year to year to the Congress of the United States, there is not one which has been so fully settled, not one which has been settled by so high an arbitrating power as this, for the law made the Senate of the United States the arbitrator in this matter.

The Senate gave its award. It is unchanged. It has only waited from that time to this the action of Congress making an appropriation for the deficiency. For twenty-five years, more or less, since that arbitration of the Senate the claim has stood in the view of the whole world as a claim decided by this high body unpaid, unsatisfied, put off from time to time as an old claim, as an unworthy claim. Now, sir, there is something due to the dignity of the Senate which consented to act as arbitrator and made this award.

I do not think myself that it comes within the prohibition of the rule. I think the means to reach the amount due is properly within the purview of this bill and of the power of the Senate under this rule. I saw for twelve and one-half years the old chief of that nation, as venerable and heroic a man as ever lingered around the seat of any government to maintain the claims of his people, labor from year to year and die here in this city with the harness on trying to have the Congress of the United States do justice to him and his people. I promised that heroic old chieftain, Pytchlin, on his death-bed, to do what little I was able to do to aid in settling the claim which he left as a legacy to his friends here who had supported his claim in Congress, to do whatever I could in my feeble way to bring this matter to Congress and have an adjustment of it. It ought to be done. It is an eternal disgrace to Congress and to this nation that such an award and such an arbitrament has not been carried out in good faith until a whole generation has passed away.

Now, if there can be any possible view in which the Chair can look at this subject in the light in which I have looked upon it and perhaps review his decision upon the point of order, I hope it may be done. I withdraw the appeal. I only wished to present this consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan withdraws the appeal and there is no question before the Senate. The amendment has been ruled out. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "District of Columbia," after line 295, to insert:

For contingent expenses of the police court, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 298, after "schools," to insert "and police department;" and in line 299, after "said," to strike out "amount" and insert "amounts;" so as to read:

For fuel for the public schools and police department, $5,000; one-half of said amounts to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "judicial," in line 306, to increase the appropriation "for fees of marshals" from $120,000 to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 307, to insert:

That the sum of $13,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the salary of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States and his necessary office expenses, including clerk-hire, to the 1st day of January, 1884.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, after line 137, to strike out the following clause:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to pass to the credit of Herbert A. Gill the sum of $150 for services performed in connection with the National Museum during the second and third quarters of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881; and to S. C. Brown $60 for services performed in connection with the United States Fish Commission during the third quarter of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 147 of section 2, to strike out the following clause:

To pay Michael Conlan and Edmund Brockenborough $242.61, being the amount withheld from their salaries as messengers in the office of the National Board of Health from July 1, 1881, to August 7, 1882, $485.22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 178 of section 2, after "transportation," to insert "and;" in the same line, after "subsistence," to strike out "and so forth;" and in line 183, after "vessels," to strike out "and so forth;" so as to read:

For disbursements made by Lieutenant John W. Danenhower and Chief-Engineer George W. Melville, on account of transportation and subsistence of themselves and a portion of the survivors of the Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette, in their journey from the Lena Delta to the United States; and for expenses of the court of inquiry convened for investigating the circumstances of the loss of that vessel, under authority of the joint resolution of Congress, approved August 8, 1882, $12,504.64, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 191 of section 2, to insert:

That from the $50,000 appropriated for the current year for the care and preservation of such navy-yards or stations as might be closed, not exceeding $30,000 may be used for maintenance at any or all of the navy-yards.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 216 to 222 of section 2, inclusive, as follows:

To pay Thaddeus Thayer, licensed trader on the Lac Court d'Oreilles reservation, Wisconsin, the proceeds of sale of certain pine logs, the property of said Thaddeus Thayer, erroneously seized and sold by the United States, which said proceeds were covered into the Treasury during the second quarter of 1881, $809.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 256 of section 2, to insert:

The proceeds of all pasturage and sales of timber, coal, or other product of any Indian reservation, except those of the five civilized tribes, and not the result of the labor of any member of such tribe, shall be covered into the Treasury for the benefit of such tribe under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe; and the Secretary shall report his action in detail to Congress at its next session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 290 to 302 of section 2, in the following words:

For rent of building corner Third and East Capitol streets, in the city of Washington, used as a branch post-office during the fiscal years 1882 and 1883, $630, the same to be paid from the postal revenues for those years, and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to rent the said or other suitable premises for use as a branch post-office in Washington, District of Columbia, at an annual rental not to exceed $360 per annum, the same to be paid from the annual appropriations for rent, light, and fuel made in the acts making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 303 to 333 of section 2, as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

For coroner's jurors' fees in inquest cases prior to July 1, 1882, $96.

For work on streets and avenues for the fiscal year 1882, $3,500.

To meet deficiencies on account of the several items of appropriations for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1882, $4,350.

The commissioners of the District are hereby authorized to use a sum not exceeding $2,540.50 of any unexpended balances of the sum appropriated for school purposes by the act making appropriations for deficiencies, approved August 5, 1882, in making necessary repairs and improvements on the Amidon, Bannaker, and Anacostan school buildings, and said sum is hereby reappropriated for those purposes: Provided, That the $1,200 appropriated by the act approved July 1, 1882, "for rent of rooms to accommodate the schools until the Jefferson building is completed," may be expended for said purpose at any time during the present fiscal year. And said commissioners are further authorized to apply the sum of $700 of the amount appropriated for rent of station-houses for the current fiscal year, to the purchase of necessary furniture for the station-houses authorized by act approved April 1, 1882: Provided further, That one-half of the foregoing sums for the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of the said District.

Mr. ROLLINS. Why are all these matters relating to the District of Columbia stricken out? I am informed by parties who are supposed to know about them that they ought not to be stricken out, that the amendment of the committee ought not to be concurred in.

Mr. HALE. There were no papers that came from the House, or that we could get by sending, which in any way covered the details of these cases, and for the lack of any information the committee struck them out. It may be that when the papers come from the House the committee will be satisfied. If so, they can be retained afterward, but the committee had no information covering the cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the items which have been read.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 10, noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from New Hamsphire will not insist upon any point here. When the papers are all got in, if they justify these claims and these amounts, they will of course go in the bill finally.

Mr. ROLLINS. How are they going in finally?

Mr. HALE. If the committee of conference produce the papers and vouchers showing the items are proper, there is nothing to do but to yield and put them in; but the Senate has no information on the subject.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think it more fit and proper that the Senate of the United States should pass upon these matters than for a committee of conference to do it. I do not like to have all the legislation upon appropriation bills acted upon by committees of conference. I should like to have the Senate occasionally, once in a while, have some voice.

Mr. LOGAN. Do you want the Senate to pass appropriations without any evidence whatever?

Mr. ROLLINS. I insist that the Committee on Appropriations could have ascertained without much trouble all the facts in regard to this matter. It would not have required a very great effort to ascertain them all.

Mr. HALE. I suppose if the Senator from New Hampshire had been on the Committee on Appropriations he would have joined in its action. There was no information before the committee showing that these items were correct. There was nothing but the face of the bill; there is nothing else before the Senate. There is no information on the subject, no estimate. The only thing that could be done was to strike them out. Then the Senator objects to the case going to a conference committee. It is precisely the kind of thing that must needs go to a conference committee. There is no information in this body on the subject. If the House has ample information, that will settle it, but surely the Senate would not, simply because these items are in the bill, put in by the House, without information pass them.

Mr. COCKRELL. When did this committee get this bill to consider it?

Mr. HALE. Yesterday morning.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have never been a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and am not supposed to know much about its business; but here is an appropriation bill that has been considered by the House of Representatives and passed there. It is to be presumed that House had some information upon this subject. I do not know what may be the practice or custom of the Committee on Appropriations, but it would seem to me very natural that finding these propositions in the bill they would take steps to secure the information that might have been before the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator tell the Senate how the Committee on Appropriations, commencing the consideration of this bill yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and having to complete it and report it back last night if it was to pass at all, could run around and investigate all these matters, when we had nothing before us, when the committee of the House had nothing before them except what one member had told them verbally, and it was passed by the House under a suspension of the rules?

Mr. ROLLINS. They could do as other Senators have done, either representing committees or as individual Senators; they could have sent a messenger or clerk to the Committee on Appropriations of the House to ask what information they had.

Mr. HALE. That has been done two or three times, and we could not get any information. They did not have the papers.

Mr. COCKRELL. The House committee had no papers in this case.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the Senator who has charge of this bill says that the House Committee on Appropriations had no information on the subject, then of course the committee is right.

Mr. HALE. I do not say they had no information, but no papers. Presumably they had something as a basis of putting it on the bill, but they had no papers.

Mr. ROLLINS. Very likely they had before them the commissioners of the District, one or two of them; and as the Committee on Appropriations are within telephonic communication of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, I suggest that they could have availed themselves of that information just as well. But I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 338 of section 2, to insert:

SENATE.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the three riding pages of the Senate for services from the 5th day of March to the 30th day of June, 1883, $885.

That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to audit and allow an account, amounting to $876, paid by the Acting Secretary of the Senate on the 12th of August, 1882, to William Lucas and Thomas S. Hickman, under the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, and for other purposes, approved August 7, 1882.

To pay necessary expenses of the Senate for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, namely: For salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and others, $1,377.20; for clerks to committees and pages, $9,523; for furniture and repairs of furniture, $1,200; for miscellaneous items, $4,000; in all, $16,100.20.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Edward N. Atherton the balance of salary due him by law for discharging the duties of a messenger of the Senate from April 1, 1877, to May 5, 1879, $720; said sum to be in full of all claims for said services.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment to come in after line 352. Let it be read now for information.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

For payment of amounts due to such persons as have received partial payments on account of illegal assessments for collection of taxes on bagging and rope used in the packing and tying of cotton, the amounts that may be due them respectively, according to the books of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and reported by him to Congress, the sum of $20,749.49.

Mr. HALE. The time for that will be by and by.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "House of Representatives," in line 384 of section 2, to insert "S. P. Bayly $500;" and after "all," in line 384, strike out "$9,500" and insert $10,000;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay to the parties named below the amounts set opposite their names, in full of expenses incurred by them respectively in contested-election cases in the Forty-seventh Congress, namely:

To J. Floyd King, $500; D. Wyatt Aiken, $708.65; M. E. Cutts, $1,000; J. C. Cook, $1,000; Gustavus Sessinghaus, $2,000; R. Graham Frost, $2,000; Edward W. Robertson, $700; A. A. Mabson, $300; John W. Jones, $800; Charles M. Shelley, $300; S. P. Bayly, $500; in all, $10,008.65.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 428 of section 2.

Mr. HALE. "R. R. Ripley" should be the name in line 428 instead of "R. P. Ripley."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 451 to 455 of section 2, in the following words:

To pay J. J. McElhone, chief of the corps of official reporters of the House of Representatives, for extra services and for clerk-hire paid out by him, $1,000 for the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 464 of section 2, to insert:

That there be printed and bound, for the use of the House, the usual number of copies of the digest of contested-election cases, together with an index of the same, to be prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Elections, for which and for the necessary preparation and superintendence connected therewith there shall be paid said clerk the sum of $1,000, and not more than $500 shall be paid before said work is completed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 472 of section 2, to insert:

To pay Charles H. Evans $500 for services rendered the Committee on Ways and Means in preparing statistical information and for other services called for by that committee during the present Congress; also to pay Henry Dunlap the like sum of $500 for like services rendered the Committee on Ways and Means, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, lines 99, 100, and 101, to strike out "and certified to Congress, as in the case of other claims under section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878," and insert "and paid;" and after "sixty-one," in line 105, to insert "and for such purpose the sum of $190,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury and paid the claims of the original owners of lands which were sold for non-payment of United States direct taxes, for the surplus proceeds of the same, under the provisions of the act of August 5, 1861, and for such purpose the sum of $190,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask why that amendment has been made?

Mr. HALE. This matter is based on a decision found in 14 Otto, page 216, in the case of The United States vs. Taylor, which settles existing law in favor of these cases. They have been presented to the Department, have been approved by the Department, and the only question arising now is whether they have been formally audited and finally passed upon, and the clause that is added by the committee simply makes an appropriation if under these formalities they are found to be due.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 154 of section 3, to insert:

For expenses of collecting the revenue from customs prior to July 1, 1880, $113,703.92.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 226 of section 3, to strike out:

To pay H. L. Thayer claim for regular supplies, Quartermaster's Department, for same period, $54.03.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 243 of section 3, to strike out:

To pay H. L. Thayer, claim for barracks and quarters, for same period, $191.52.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 4. The next amendment was, at the end of section 4, to add:

For the payment of claims audited and allowed by the Second Auditor and Second Comptroller of the Treasury under the provisions of the act of August 2, 1882, "to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid claims against the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury," for services rendered and supplies furnished on account of the Indian service, as fully set forth in House Executive Document No. 42, second session Forty-seventh Congress, $96,318.71.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations having been gone through, the bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HALE. After line 370 of section 2 I move to add:

For this amount, to pay the salary and mileage of Members and Delegates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, $5,319.43.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. After line 442 of section 2 I move to insert:

To pay to Henry G. Hayes, for special report of testimony before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, first session Forty-seventh Congress, as per account approved and certified, $162.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. After line 266 of section 3 I move to insert.

To pay to the State of Florida, on the allowance made by the Secretary of War under joint resolution of Congress approved March 3, 1881, and reported by him to Congress May 22, 1882, the sum of $92,648.09, in full settlement for Indian wars from 1855 to 1861, providing there shall be delivered to said State all bonds and coupons of said State now held by the trustee of the Indian trust fund.

Mr. INGALLS. Is that open to a point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is legislation.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not raise the point of order on it.

Mr. INGALLS. Of course I do not wish to take the Senator off the floor. I merely want to reserve any point of order.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am on the floor.

Mr. INGALLS. The point of order can be raised at any time, whether the Senator is on the floor or not.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There are five or six States provided for in the bill to whom compensation is made for expenses of a similar character. The States of Ohio, Maine, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky are all provided for in the bill.

I have to say, in the discharge of a duty to my State, that this matter has been adjusted and adjudicated as far as it is possible to do so under the legislative department of the Government. The joint resolution adopted by Congress authorized the Secretary of War to settle the claim of the State of Florida upon the United States Government in respect to these accounts. The War Department adjudicated them, but the matter did not stop there. It went to the Military Committee and that committee arrived at a conclusion with respect to this matter after full investigation, and a unanimous report, as I understand, was made fixing this sum as due from the Government of the United States to one of the States of this Union.

I merely wish to say that there ought to be, as there always has been, a degree of courtesy or comity between the governments of the States and the Government of this great Union. This is not an individual claim. It is not a private matter. It is entirely public. Our great judicial tribunal, in its administration of the law, recognizes the principle for which I contend, that States are entitled to something beyond individuals in matters of this kind. We know that according to their practice they are in the habit of advancing cases in which a State is concerned when a motion is made showing that the public of a Commonwealth are interested in the subject-matter.

Here is a sum of money which is found to be due from this Government to the State of Florida, and it owes it to itself, to its dignity, and to the comity which is due between the States and the Government, to make the earliest possible provision for its payment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? When was this account or claim adjusted by the War Department?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Very recently; in 1881.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. How long had it been pending?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It had been pending for quite a number of years; but I am sure that time does not affect the justice of the matter.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I did not make the inquiry with that idea in my head at all.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me say in reference to the inquiry made by the Senator from Wisconsin that some two or three years ago I had occasion as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs to examine this claim. I reported the matter to the committee; the committee reported it to the Senate; and after debate in the Senate the claim was passed. It is as meritorious and just as much in a line to be appropriated for as though it had come in the regular Book of Estimates. There is no question about it so far as that part of it is concerned.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. All the claims between States and the General Government have been of late years adjusted in this way, and very properly, because after a sum is found to be due from this Government to a State, as I say, the Government ought not to higgle and interpose technicalities to the payment of so just a matter. I submit the proposition to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES].

Mr. HALE. What was the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No point of order was raised. The amendment is still open to a point of order being raised.

Mr. HALE. I thought the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] raised the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He merely made an inquiry.

Mr. HALE. I feel constrained to make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what ground does the Senator interpose the point of order?

Mr. HALE. It seems to me there is no existing law that provides for this appropriation.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There is a joint resolution of Congress. What does the Senator call that?

Mr. HALE. There is no joint resolution and no statute that in any way provides for the payment of this money. It is necessary to pass a law in order to pay it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair finds that the proposed amendment provides for paying the State of Florida the allowance made by the Secretary of War under the joint resolution of Congress of March 3, 1881. The joint resolution of March 3, 1881, provides—

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, ascertain, and report to Congress as soon as practicable the amount of claims of the State of Florida for expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities in that State between the 1st day of December, 1855, and the 1st day of January, 1860. In making such investigation the said Secretary is directed to receive and consider such testimony as he may deem necessary or proper for or against claims, including the muster-rolls of the State troops, and such other official data as may be on file in the War Department. In submitting his report to Congress the said Secretary shall not include any payments or allowances made by the State in excess of the amounts allowed by law at the time in behalf of troops regularly in the service of the United States.

The Chair does not think that this amendment carries out the requirements of an existing law. The Chair thinks that the joint resolution was an act merely of inquiry and not of direction and payment. So the Chair thinks the point of order of the Senator from Maine is well taken.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add after line 338 of section 2:

That the Attorney-General be authorized and directed to pay to Charles H. Reed for services as counsel for the late Charles J. Guiteau such sum as he may deem just and reasonable, not to exceed $3,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. After line 289 of section 2, I move to insert:

For continuing the payment by the Postmaster-General to the colonies of New Zealand and New South Wales so much of the cost of the overland transportation of the British closed mails to and from Australia as he may deem just, not to exceed one-half of such cost, in accordance with the arrangements authorized by the provisions of the act of March 1, 1881, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department, $40,000.

Mr. HALE. The committee has considered and rejected that amendmend. Therefore I must make the point of order upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine make the point of order against it as legislation or as a new item?

Mr. HALE. I think it is open to either objection. It does not come by report from any committee, and there is no existing law that justifies the appropriation.

Mr. MILLER, of California. There is an existing law, passed in 1881, under which arrangements have been entered into.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At what page of the statutes?

Mr. MILLER, of California. The proviso at the bottom of page 376. Arrangements have been entered into by the Postmaster-General on behalf of the Government of the United States and these colonies for the payment of one-half the cost of carrying the mails across the overland route, by which the Government obtains an advantage in carrying our mails from San Francisco to Australia and back by way of New Zealand. This arrangement expires in November next, as I am informed.

The Government is under obligation to pay at least to the 1st of November, but it is an arrangement that ought to be continued. It is advantageous alike to the United States and its people and to these colonies. It has been in operation for six or seven years, and has had the approval of everybody so far as I am advised. The proviso ought to have been put into the Post-Office appropriation bill, but by an oversight it was not done. I hope the Senator from Maine will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations considered this proposition and rejected it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not think the committee gave it much consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine agree with the statement of the Senator from California that there is, under the act of 1881, an existing arrangement between the Post-Office Department and the authorities of New Zealand and New South Wales for this transportation?

Mr. HALL. I am not satisfied that that is so.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is going on now. The mails are being carried under this arrangement at the present moment. The Legislature of California adopted a joint resolution, which was presented by the President of the Senate only a few days ago, setting forth the whole case and asking that the appropriation for the service be continued.

Mr. HALE. This item was not estimated for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there an official report of the Postmaster-General which sets forth that there is an existing arrangement?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have it not here.

Mr. HALE. This is not estimated for by the Treasury Department or by any Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of official information that this arrangement exists, the Chair will be obliged to hold that the amendment is not in order, and so holds.

Mr. CALL. In line 203 of section 2, after the word "who," I move to strike out the words "rendered voluntary services without compensation," and to insert "were furloughed without pay;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the employés in the General Land Office who were furloughed without pay during the period from July 1 to August 5, 1882, $1,993.98, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. HALE. That is subject to the point of order. It increases the appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hope the Senator from Maine will not insist upon the point of order. During the pendency of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill last summer it dragged along for a great while upon some point in relation to the distribution of rooms in the State Department, and during that time, there being no appropriation, the Secretary of the Interior had to furlough these ladies. I hope that the Senator will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Illinois has examined this matter, and I have no doubt that he has done so probably more than I have, I will in deference to him withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am much obliged to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. After the word "services," in line 369 of section 2, I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to H. B. Littlepage compensation as messenger, from August 16, 1882, to March 4, 1883, $791.80.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. CALL. I wish simply to state that I offer the amendment at the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON], the chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, who is detained from the Senate by illness. It is recommended by a majority of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. I ask that the communication from the Senator from Virginia be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the communication presented by the Senator from Florida.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

On the 11th of December, 1879, the Senate passed a resolution directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to appoint three additional messengers, one for the Committee on Private Land Claims, one for the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and one for the Committee on Engrossed Bills, and it was understood and agreed that the messengers so appointed should be designated by those committees respectively.

After the adjournment of the last session of the Senate, the Sergeant-at-Arms removed H. B. Littlepage, messenger to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, without cause and without notice to or sanction of that committee, and there has been no messenger to that committee since the removal of said messenger. I, as chairman of said committee, as soon as I learned of the action of the Sergeant-at-Arms, protested against it and told Mr. Littlepage that his removal was made without authority, and he has continued to wait upon said committee.

There are ten messengers borne upon the rolls of the Senate appointed by designation of their respective committees under resolutions of the Senate to that effect, and it is evident that if the Sergeant-at-Arms can remove the messengers appointed under the resolutions empowering the committees to designate said messengers without the sanction of said committees, then the power to designate would be of no avail to said committees and the resolutions passed for the purpose of giving them that power would be null and void.

JOHN W. JOHNSTON,
Chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

We concur with Mr. JOHNSTON, chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, in asking compensation for H. B. Littlepage.

H. B. ANTHONY.
H. L. DAWES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum voting, the Secretary will proceed to call the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CALL. I hope there will be no opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. If the vote can be taken over again I think that Senators realizing the importance of not consuming time will vote, so that a quorum will be shown to be here, as there clearly is.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the amendment come from any committee?

Mr. CALL. It is recommended by the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. I will state to the Senator from West Virginia, by his consent, that I offer the amendment at the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON], who is detained from the Senate by sickness. He states that Mr. Littlepage has been performing the duties of messenger of the committee at his request and by his authority. Whether the Senator from Virginia acted on a wrong construction of law or not, this man has been doing the service he was directed to perform by the Senator from Virginia, and he asks the Senate to allow this compensation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that this claim, if it is one, has been and is now before the Committee on Contingent Expenses. It was also before the Committee on Appropriations, and the parties interested were heard by the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe that committee was unanimous in thinking that the Senate ought not to take any notice of it.

I understand that for cause, for insubordination, as it was stated to the committee, and for neglect of duty, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] says, Mr. Littlepage was dropped from the rolls some time last year, and the reason of his removal was in writing furnished to him. No duty whatever has been performed by Mr. Littlepage since, and a person regularly designated for the purpose has been caring for the room of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, he having been so assigned by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

This is not only a case of dollars and cents, but it is one to determine whether we shall support the Sergeant-at-Arms in dismissing a man who he believes has neglected his duty in any way. I think it is hardly a thing that the Senate ought to take hold of, especially when a committee has looked into it and thought it ought not to report favorably. I understand from the Senator from Florida that it was reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. That is a very singular committee to report a claim arising not within revolutionary times, but this year. That is the committee also for which it is claimed this gentleman performed the services. It hardly is the proper place for the claim to come from. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I offered the amendment at the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON], who is about to retire from the Senate. He has made a statement in writing, and I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that no man stands higher for truth, for high and honorable character than the Senator from Virginia who is about to retire. He has denied the statement made by the Senator from West Virginia.

I am moved by kindness and a sense of justice and by a knowledge of the suffering and destitution of the man's family. The Senator from Virginia has stated in writing to the committee, and it has been read here and has been reported to his associates on that committee, that Mr. Littlepage was discharged without cause in his opinion and his judgment. He has strictly the right as a Senator, exercised by the several chairmen of committees, particularly the Committee on Engrossed Bills, of which I am a member, of retaining a messenger.

The Senator from Virginia claims the right which he says has always been accorded since he has been here, to authorize the messenger. He denies that there has been any other messenger performing the duties of that committee, and he asks as a matter of personal justice to himself, in which he is joined by his associates upon the committee, that this man shall have the compensation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Senator from Florida to speak of the Senator from Virginia as being a high-toned, honorable gentleman. Nobody questions that.

Mr. CALL. There is his statement, which speaks for itself.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator says that the Senator from Virginia denies what I have stated, and that is his reply. I never made a statement of the case until just now that I know of. This is a case entirely with the officers of the Senate, and is not one in which the Senate ought to interfere unless they want to take the appointment and control of the whole organization, and the responsibility for good order and behavior here from the Sergeant-at-Arms. If Senators think they should do that, then the amendment ought to be agreed to. If we believe that the Sergeant-at-Arms ought to be responsible for the proper conduct of everything belonging to the Senate, then we ought not to adopt the amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. This grows out of a dispute between our esteemed Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON], who is about to leave us, and who during the closing hours of his term is confined at his residence by illness, and our very efficient Sergeant-at-Arms. I do not know anything about the merits of the case, but I certainly could not have voted for the resolution of the Senator from Florida introduced to restore this man to the rolls of the Senate, because I think if we hold the Sergeant-at-Arms responsible for the good order of the Senate he should be allowed to select his own instruments for carrying out our wishes in this respect. But I think, out of regard for the Senator from Virginia, who is about to leave us, this little amount should be allowed to pass without objection. I certainly would not wish to rebuke the Sergeant-at-Arms, for he has removed this man for cause, and I have no doubt for sufficient cause.

Mr. HALE. I hope that we may have a vote. I do not think that we can afford to take any more time on this little matter.

Mr. DAWES. I am on the committee with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY], and I join with him in suggesting that this man, under the circumstances, ought to be paid. I had understood that in the arrangement of committees here those that fell to the other side of the Chamber were to be officered as those committees themselves desired, and, as I supposed, the messengers as well as the clerks, under ordinary usage, would be selected by the chairmen. That was one of those committees, and the committee felt as if the chairman ought to have had his voice. I do not know whether there was sufficient cause for removal or not, but, as the Senator from Rhode Island has said, this man has attended upon such duties as the chairman of the committee has required. The Senator from Virginia is now absent, and in his behalf the committee felt that it would be a good thing to adopt the amendment. I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Massachusetts is a member of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has not a regularly employed messenger attended to that committee-room independent of Mr. Littlepage?

Mr. DAWES. I do not know of my own personal knowledge.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Such is my information.

Mr. DAWES. Although the labors of that committee are very arduous, I have not been able so much to attend to the details of the committee as I should have done had I not been employed on other committees. I have not information personally about what has been transpiring in the committee, but the Senator from Virginia has had a good deal of other kinds of committee work to be done in that committee-room which this gentleman has contributed to relieve the Senator from in that way which those attendant upon committees are in the habit of doing.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that a regular messenger employed for that purpose has attended the committee-room all the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. COCKRELL. This matter is of sufficient importance to justify a record of the votes. I ask that the yeas and nays be recorded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Florida, because it appears from the communication of the Senator from Virginia that he had retained this man under the impression that he had the right so to retain him, and that the man performed the services of messenger to that committee. Without entering into any question as to the right of the Senator from Virginia, it is very evident that he, as an honest man, put a construction upon the resolution under which certain messengers were appointed which has induced him to retain this man in the service of the committee. If that is the case and the man has performed the duty, the small pittance which it will take to pay him is not much out of the public Treasury, and at the same time it would relieve the man and it would relieve the Senator who has employed him, if he has made a mistake, from paying him out of his own pocket. I shall therefore vote for the amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was read.

Mr. INGALLS. The words "as messenger" should be stricken out. He has not been a messenger and there is no justice in paying him as a messenger when the committee could have had the services of a messenger by applying to the Sergeant-at-Arms under the rule of the Senate. We are now proposing to declare that this man was a messenger when he had been stricken from the rolls of the Senate by the Sergeant-at-Arms, whom we hold responsible for the discipline and good order of his subordinates, declaring that he was a messenger still.

I believe that all employés of the Senate are required to take an oath of office before they enter upon the discharge of their duties. We are establishing here a vicious and pernicious precedent by saying that after a messenger or employé has been discharged and is no longer responsible to the Sergeant-at-Arms or anybody else, and is not under the sanction of an oath, he may be employed at the will of the chairman of a committee without any responsibility to any person whatever. I think that this is going too far.

I do not know anything about Mr. Littlepage, or whatever his name is; I never saw him to my knowledge; but he was not a messenger; he was discharged for cause; and to say that he shall be paid as a messenger is a falsification of the record. It is an injustice to the Sergeant-at-Arms; it is a blow at the dignity and control of the Senate. If it is desired to pay him a gratuity, and those who know best about the matter think it is advisable, I have no objection, but he was not a messenger and should not be paid as a messenger. I move to strike out the words "as messenger."

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the criticism of the Senator from Kansas is very just and that the words "as messenger" should be stricken out. Let it be a gratuity.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment I shall propose will be agreed upon by the Senate. I move to strike out "messenger" and insert "employé of Senator JOHN W. JOHNSTON, chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Kansas accept that amendment? Otherwise it can not be received, it being an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand that under the statement of the Senator from Virginia that is a correct statement of the relation he sustained toward the committee. If the committee desires to say that irresponsible persons, without the sanction of an oath, having access to all the committee-rooms and to the files and to the body of the Senate, are to be employed at the caprice of anybody, then adopt the amendment as it was offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Virginia acted upon an interpretation of the resolution of the Senate which it very well bore. I remember when the resolution was called up in the Senate and passed giving six additional messengers for certain committees, the messengers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms on the recommendation of the chairmen of the committees, I called attention to the fact that there would be a divided authority which might lead us into conflict and into trouble. It has grown into that condition sooner than I expected.

The Senator from Virginia, it seems from his own report, did not recognize the authority of the Sergeant-at-Arms to remove this messenger who was appointed upon his recommendation, and he takes the ground that if the Sergeant-at-Arms should remove him and then undertake to appoint another, it would be without his recommendation, and that he had no right to do it; that those messengers were appointed for the purpose of being assigned to the committees under the control of the chairmen of the committees, and so the resolution was viewed at the time. It was stated at the time those messengers were authorized to be appointed that those committees needed additional messengers and needed messengers who would be under the control of the chairmen, so that the messenger might remain with the committee according to the will and pleasure of the chairman to do the duty that the committee required of the messenger, putting him upon a different ground in that respect from the ordinary messenger of the Senate whom the Sergeant-at-Arms could change from one committee to another at his pleasure.

This case of divided authority has come up. The honorable chairman of that committee, whom we all know so well how to respect, to honor, and to love, has taken occasion to differ with the Sergeant-at-Arms in respect to the jurisdiction to remove Mr. Littlepage. I do not think that in deciding this question it is at all necessary for us to cast any slur upon the Senator from Virginia. He has acted honorably and properly in this matter and with sufficient and proper firmness if he believed that he was right. He could not at his own pleasure bring this subject to the attention of the Senate whenever he chose to do it. He informed the messenger that his services would be required at the committee, whether Mr. Bright saw proper to remove him or not, and so the matter went on. He did not consider that he was interfering with Mr. Bright's right to exercise discipline over men who were under his control, believing that the resolution of the Senate put Mr. Littlepage under his control as chairman of the committee. Suppose he was wrong about that. Mr. Littlepage has rendered the service. He might have been engaged in other employment. He had the security of a number of Senators that he was to continue a messenger and receive his pay.

In passing upon this subject, although the Senate may not be inclined to sustain the view of the Senator from Virginia on this matter, it is not necessary to say that he is a person in the employment of the Senator from Virginia, for in that view of it of course the Senate would have as much right to pay my servant at home as to pay the servant of the Senator from Virginia in the Senate.

But we have brought on this difficulty by the peculiarity of the resolution we have passed, which should not have been adopted, to which the objection was made at the time, and now having invited the trouble and the Senate having gone into it, I think it is as little as we can do to pay the man we thus imposed on the Senate and the country without censuring him at all.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator from Alabama is mistaken in supposing that this messenger was one of the messengers appointed by the resolution of the Senate for additional messengers, to be selected by the chairmen of certain committees.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the way I have understood it, from the reading of the paper at the desk.

Mr. PLATT. I understand that it is not so, but that he was one of the messengers regularly appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms. I say this because the matter came before the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and if we had supposed that he was a messenger where there was any power of selection on the part of the chairman of the committee I think we should have treated the matter differently from what we did.

Mr. FRYE. This little claim of $700 has occupied the Senate two and a half hours of the last two days of this Congress. I would a great deal rather some wealthy Senator would pay it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. COCKRELL. What has become of my amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will be first in order. It will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "messenger" and to insert:

Employé of Senator JOHN W. JOHNSTON, chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

So as to read:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to H. B. Littlepage compensation as employé of Senator JOHN W. JOHNSTON, chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, from August 16, 1882, to March 4, 1883, $791.80.

Mr. FRYE. That is too bad.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to say only a few words. There is a messenger at the room of the committee of which I am chairman. I do not know his name. He is sent there by the Sergeant-at-Arms, as every other Senator understands messengers are sent to the committees. The messenger in this case was discharged by the Sergeant-at-Arms for not attending to his duties. The facts are that the Sergeant-at-Arms one evening had to perform himself the duty of this messenger. If we are going to propose to pay everybody a Senator may employ because he disagrees with the Sergeant-at-Arms, it is setting a very bad precedent, and I do not believe in it. We have no right to do it.

The Sergeant-at-Arms has a right to deal with the employés according to the manner in which they perform their duties, and the Senate ought not to interfere with his duties. Although I have the highest respect for the Senator from Virginia, yet he, in my judgment, in the employment of this man did that which he had no authority to do. I do not propose to support a Senator in doing that which he had no authority to do any more than I would the Sergeant-at-Arms. The Sergeant-at-Arms did exactly what he had the right to do; the Senator did exactly what he did not have the right to do. I am opposed to paying a dollar to this man.

Mr. HALE. In order to bring the matter to a close, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Maine to withdraw the motion.

Mr. FRYE. Is the motion debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not debatable.

Mr. FRYE. I make the point of order.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator from Maine. The Senator from Virginia is absent, and I am simply doing what he requested me to do. He is sick at home and his term expires to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his motion to lay the amendment on the table?

Mr. HALE. For a moment.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] may be right or wrong. The Senator from Virginia gives this statement on his personal knowledge. I understand that when this occurred this poor man was waiting upon his dying children, two of whom died the same day. I understand that he is a man of excellent character and that he has discharged the duties of messenger of that committee with entire satisfaction from the beginning.

Mr. HALE. If we can have the roll-call at once upon the amendment, I will withdraw my motion to lay it on the table; otherwise I shall insist upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. COCKRELL. What has become of the amendment I offered?

Mr. HALE. That was voted down.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TABOR]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GROOME. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], who is absent from the Chamber; otherwise I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Anthony,	Garland,	McDill,	Slater,
Barrow,	Grover,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
Brown,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Vest,
Call,	Jackson,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Jonas,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Rollins,	Williams.
Farley,	Lapham,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—23.

Bayard,	Frye,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Camden,	George,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Logan,	Saunders,
Conger,	Hale,	Morrill,	Sawyer,
Davis of W. Va.,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Sherman.
Edmunds,	Harrison,	Platt,

ABSENT—26.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Allison,	Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Sewell,
Beck,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Tabor,
Blair,	Groome,	McMillan,	Vance,
Butler,	Hawley,	McPherson,	Windom.
Coke,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,
Davis of Ill.,	Johnston,	Mitchell,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. After line 108 of section 3 I move to insert:

For completion of the Sandy Point light-house, Chesapeake Bay, State of Maryland, $15,000.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order that that increases an appropriation already made.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Maine will not make the point of order. An appropriation of $25,000 was made, but it is not sufficient to complete the light-house. It will require $15,000 more. It is a very important point on the Chesapeake Bay; indeed the turning-point of all vessels. The appropriation was made a year ago, and the Board of Trade of Baltimore, as well as the Light-House Board, think it is absolutely necessary for the safety of the trade of that bay.

Mr. HALE. It is an ungracious task to insist upon points of order against amendments offered by Senators who are really earnest and faithful in their duty in pushing them, but I know of no other way to get this bill through and keep its amount down to a reasonable sum than by insisting upon proper points of order.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say to the Senator from Maine that I offered the amendment and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but unfortunately it was not acted upon. I submit that the point of order does not hold in this case.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations considered the amendment and rejected it. The committee called in officers from the Light-House Board and put on one or two matters specially recommended by that board as being the most important. While this was stated by the secretary of the board to be an important matter, it was not put first, as not being one of first-class importance; and the committee believe that it can wait.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine insist on the point of order?

Mr. HALE. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. At the end of line 352 of section 2 I move to add:

For payment of amounts found due to such persons as have received partial payments on account of the illegal assessment and collection of taxes on bagging and rope used in the packing and tying of cotton, the amounts that may be due them respectively, according to the books of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and reported by him to Congress, the sum of $20,749.49.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the Senator does that will he permit me to make a statement for just a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. The purpose of the amendment is to carry into execution section 3220 of the Revised Statutes, which requires the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to regulations to be transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, on appeal made to him, to remit, refund, and pay back all taxes erroneously or illegally assessed and collected, &c. It is the general clause of the statutes requiring the paying back of taxes illegally collected, assessed, &c.

The amounts in reference to this matter, as I am informed, have been stated on the books of the Treasury Department. The books of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue show the amounts as stated. A bill was brought into Congress and passed giving the names of the different persons who were to receive this money, but by some misadventure, which I am unable to explain, some names were omitted.

If you notice the amendment which I offer, it is to make an appropriation to pay the money to the claimants whose claims are found adjusted upon the books of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It increases no appropriation. It is a mere deficit. I expect it is as clearly a deficiency as any other feature of the bill, being merely to execute the statute. It gives no authority by which this money can be paid to any claimant unless it has been already adjusted upon the books of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It saves the parties from suffering in consequence of a mistake of somebody. I do not know whose fault it was in omitting their names at the time the former appropriations were made to carry into execution the statute.

Mr. HALE. When the Senate has these claims submitted to the Department which has jurisdiction over them, and they are there examined, pass the auditors, pass the comptrollers, and are sent in by the Secretary of the Treasury as a regular estimate, it will then come within the rule. I take it it does not now, not being reported by any committee and having no law to justify it.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not suppose that this subject was really submitted to the Department. It was the intention, of course, but the deficiency appears clearly upon the books of the Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be obliged to sustain the point of order if it is insisted upon.

Mr. HALE. I insist upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine raises the point of order that the amendment is within the rule relating to amendments to appropriation bills. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. It becomes necessary to cure a provision of existing law in respect to the library, and to have a legislative provision put on this bill. I will explain it in a moment. The Joint Committee on the Library is composed of three members of the Senate and three members of the House of Representatives. They have power under the general provisions of law to pass upon the accounts of the Library, and it is always necessary during the recess of Congress. Ordinarily that has been done by the three Senators on the committee, the Senate being a continuing body, but the office of one of the Senators on the present Committee on the Library will expire to-day, and he will have to be resworn before he can act again. Therefore it is very doubtful whether the legal duty imposed on the Joint Committee on the Library could be performed under the peculiar organization of that committee. The Committee on the Library suggest, in order to cure that difficulty, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After line 369 of section 2 it is proposed to add:

That the portion of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library on the part of the Senate shall, during the recess of Congress, exercise the powers and discharge the duties conferred by law upon the Joint Committee of Congress upon the Library.

Mr. HOAR. There is an omission in that sentence. If the Senator from Ohio hears it read again he will see that he left out some words.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOAR. "The portion remaining in office as Senators" it should read.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator thinks it should be a majority? I suppose the three can perform the duty.

Mr. HOAR. But my friend does not understand me. It is a mere accidental omission of a word he intended to use. It does not say what portion. It says that a portion of the Committee on the Library shall do so and so. It should say "the portion remaining in office."

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified, and reported as modified.

The amendment as modified was read, as follows:

That the portion of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library on the part of the Senate remaining in office as Senators shall, during the recess of Congress, exercise the powers and discharge the duties conferred by law upon the Joint Committee of Congress upon the Library.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What are those duties?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can read them from the statute:

The unexpended balance of any sums appropriated by Congress for the increase of the general Library, together with such sums as may hereafter be appropriated to the same purpose, shall be laid out under the direction of a Joint Committee of Congress upon the Library, to consist of three members of the Senate and three members of the House of Representatives.

It is necessary every week and every month to approve bills of disbursements made by the Librarian under this clause. They have to be approved by this committee of Congress in order to pass the Treasury. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] being a member of the committee his term expires to-morrow, so that there will not be even three members of the committee to continue in existence. It is necessary to supply that defect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I wish to offer an amendment to complete an amendment already agreed to. I move to add after line 369 of section 2:

To pay Hon. John C. Cook $250 for newspaper and stationery allowance for the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Where does that amendment come from? From the committee?

Mr. HALE. It comes from the House of Representatives. It is to meet the case of a member who has been sworn in since the House sent the bill over to us.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there provision made for the Representative from Missouri who was seated last night? There will be one or two more seated to-day. We had better put in enough to cover the contingency.

Mr. HALE. I am putting them in as fast as they are sent to me from the House. They were unable, of course, to put them in the bill when it was reported to that body, because the seating had not taken place.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we had better put them in in a lump sum to cover those who will be seated between this hour and 12 to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, I hope we may finish the bill. I have nothing more to present.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am pressed to offer an amendment, and I am assured it has been recommended by the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I am not familiar with the matter, but I offer it as I agreed to do so. After the word "services," at the end of line 369 of section 2, I move to insert:

To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate to pay T. D. Keleher the sum of $178.70, the same being the difference in pay received by him as laborer on the rolls of the Senate and that received by a messenger from December 1, 1881, to March 1, 1882.

Mr. HALE. I do not think there is any law for that.

Mr. VOORHEES. I stated all I know about it. It received the approval of the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has it been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. VOORHEES. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. It has not been recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. I say it has been recommended by the Committee on Contingent Expenses and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Has the Committee on Contingent Expenses had regular jurisdiction of this matter, and reported upon it favorably, and sent the report to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. VOORHEES. I have been so informed. I have stated my information. There are members of the Committee on Contingent Expenses now on the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to see the report they made.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not think they made any report. At least I am not advised that they did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana move this amendment in pursuance of the direction of the Committee on Contingent Expenses?

Mr. VOORHEES. No; I can not state that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order, the rule being that the amendment must be moved under the direction of a committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to reserve for a separate vote the amendment striking out from line 303 to line 333, inclusive, of section 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be reserved.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not desire to offer an amendment to the bill, because——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Delaware that the question now is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the one reserved. Does the Senator from Delaware rise to that question?

Mr. BAYARD. I was about to remark that there was an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole that I would be disposed to reserve, but I shall resort to another method of remedying it. It is on page 13, under the judicial title increasing the appropriation made by the House of Representatives for the fees of marshals $30,000, making the sum $150,000. The Senator from Maine gave me the report of the Attorney-General, but it was not clear to me that the amendment increasing the appropriation $30,000 was authorized by that report. Certainly the House of Representatives did not think so, having the same information before them. But I would rather appeal to the judgment of the committee, who have examined it more carefully than I, and I shall therefore not oppose concurrence in the amendment, but I shall, when the bill is through, offer a resolution to ascertain something in regard to the irregular use and employment of special deputy marshals at Congressional elections. I believe not only that it is a wrong per se and creates an interference not in the cause and aid of purity of elections, but it has become a gross abuse for the payment of considerable sums of money to a number of mere political strikers and partisans, and there have been men appointed who were not warranted in law to serve at the points where they were so employed, in towns having less than 20,000 inhabitants, in direct violation of the statute to that effect.

I shall offer a resolution of inquiry touching an election which I myself was a witness of, in which I think there was a gross abuse of the law and a violation of its plain features. I shall not further seek to amend this bill in that respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the one reserved on the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS].

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the amendment reserved on the request of the Senator from New Hampshire. It will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out from line 303 to 333, inclusive, of section 2, in the following words:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

For coroner's jurors' fees in inquest cases prior to July 1, 1882, $96.

For work on streets and avenues for the fiscal year 1882, $3,500.

To meet deficiencies on account of the several items of appropriations for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1882, $4,950.

The commissioners of the District are hereby authorized to use a sum not exceeding $2,540.50 of any unexpended balances of the sums appropriated for school purposes by the act making appropriations for deficiencies approved August 5, 1882, in making necessary repairs and improvements on the Amidon, Bannaker, and Analostan school buildings, and said sum is hereby reappropriated for those purposes: Provided, That the $1,200 appropriated by the act approved July 1, 1882, "for rent of rooms to accommodate the schools until the Jefferson building is completed," may be expended for said purpose at any time during the present fiscal year. And said commissioners are further authorized to apply the sum of $700 of the amount appropriated for rent of station-houses for the current fiscal year to the purchase of necessary furniture for the station-houses authorized by act approved April 1, 1882: Provided further, That one-half of the foregoing sums for the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of the said District.

Mr. ROLLINS. I hope the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations will not be concurred in. I suggested in Committee of the Whole that there might be some mistake about this matter, and I have taken pains to secure possession of the papers which were before the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the House of Representatives. I have carefully examined those papers so far as the limited time would allow me, and am satisfied that the items of appropriation are correct. The papers are here and are accessible to any of the members of our Committee on Appropriations. I hope the amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator has examined the papers carefully and is satisfied that the appropriations in the bill are covered by vouchers and recommendations, I do not object.

Mr. ROLLINS. There seems to be a voucher for everything, and all is satisfactorily explained. I think there can be no question but what the appropriations are all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. After line 333 of section 2, I move to add:

That the salaries due all employés of the District of Columbia for services during the fiscal year 1883 and 1884 shall be paid in full, notwithstanding stoppages in the accounts of the District commissioners heretofore reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

I will just state the effect of that amendment. Certain stoppages have been made against the commissioners of the District of Columbia on account of the payments which were made to employés for extra services during the last year. The Comptroller now holds that he can not pay to these clerks still in the employ of the District any portion of their wages until he has deducted all the sums thus paid, notwithstanding they were paid on the orders of the commissioners and paid for services actually rendered. They are still pending; and it will disorganize the entire clerical force of the District if this or some similar provision is not passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should be glad if the Senator would inform us to what extent this has gone.

Mr. PLUMB. The amount that is charged against these forty-odd employés of the District is about $16,000. The amendment does not in any way relieve anybody from any legal responsibility, but simply requires the Comptroller to pay the salaries of these employés during the coming fiscal year, notwithstanding the payments that heretofore have been made to them upon the order of the District commissioners, and does not in any way determine the legality or illegality of the payments made.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But I understand the Senator to say it requires money to be paid. Is it with the consent of the commissioners? Do they approve of it?

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment was prepared by one of the District commissioners.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the amendment be reported.

The amendment was read.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest the word "suspension."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It appears singular that such an amendment is necessary to require any payment that should legally and lawfully be made. I do not understand why such a measure is necessary to have the employés paid any amount that is due them under the law or under the employment of the commissioners. I do not understand the cause.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state how it occurs. The commissioners having some extra work to do, employed persons then in their employ on a salary fixed by law to do that extra work. For instance, they would make a contract with one employé to make up a certain tax-list and pay him $400 for it, for extra work outside of the ordinary time. The Comptroller stopped that in the first instance against the District commissioners, and now holds that he can not pay the employé his regular wages currently earned, but must stop against him the entire amount of $400 taken out of his wages.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Why was it stopped?

Mr. PLUMB. Because the Comptroller holds that it is a double salary within the meaning of the law.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is just the point. There is a law to prevent the payment of double salaries, and I can not see why these particular employés should be paid double salaries. Of course the amendment changes existing law, and it is subject to the objection of being introduced to-day. I do not wish, however, to object if it is a proper thing to do.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it is undoubtedly a proper thing to do.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We have a Committee on the District of Columbia. I should be glad to know whether they approve of this amendment, or whether they think it ought to be done. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia raise a point of order?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I object to its consideration to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an amendment, and can not be subject to an objection to consideration like a resolution; but a point of order may be made that it is a legislative proposition.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I thought it was offered as a separate resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is offered as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I make the point of order that it changes existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. VOORHEES. For the sake of saving future Congresses from a chronic annoyance, I wish to offer an amendment. The amendment was ruled out on the point of order in Committee of the Whole, and I shall appeal to the Senate, hoping that no point of order will be made and that the subject-matter of it may be sent to the court as provided for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After line 338 it is proposed to insert:

That that portion of the Cherokee Nation of Indians residing west of the Mississippi River, and known and designated as "Western Cherokees" or "Old Settlers," by and under the name and style of the "Old Settler Cherokee Indians," be, and they are hereby, authorized to present their claims against the United States, by petition to the Court of Claims of the United States, within one year next after the passage of this act, to recover whatever balance, if any, is justly and equitably due them from the United States under the Cherokee treaties of 1828, 1833, 1835, 1836, and 1846, according to the tenor and effect of said treaties at the dates of their respective ratifications; and to the end that justice may be done, such court shall examine all settlements heretofore made under said treaties and acts of Congress, and other acts and proceedings relating thereto, and correct all errors, if any, that may have been made by any accounting officers or other authority of the Government of the United States in marshaling and settling the accounts for the said "Old Settlers," in improper charges, erroneous calculations, misconstruction of laws and treaties, or misapplication of funds. And the said court, in the examination of said "Old Settlers" claim, shall consider the same with reference to, and be governed by, the said treaties, laws, acts, and proceedings as relate to or affect said "Old Settlers," and shall render judgment on the equities of said claims under the said treaties, laws, acts, and proceedings aforesaid; and either party may appeal from said judgment to the Supreme Court of the United States, and said case, when so appealed, shall have precedence.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that is subject to the point of order I propose to make it, because I do not think it ought to be put on the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5200) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 3258) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hendrickson;

A bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands;

A bill (H. R. 5543) to confirm certain entries on the public lands;

A bill (H. R. 5674) for the relief of Edward Bellows; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 331) for the printing of the Agricultural Report for the year 1883.

GEORGIA REVOLUTIONARY CLAIM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the bill laid aside for the consideration of the appropriation bill. The title of the bill will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. "A bill (H. R. 110) to refund to the State of Georgia certain money expended by said State for the common defense in 1777."

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. At 1 o'clock we were reading the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

ROBERT L. M'CONNAUGHEY.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4218) for the relief of Robert L. McConnaughey, to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered now. I will state to the Senate my reasons. It is a very simple bill. The Senators from North Carolina called my attention to it in the committee, but we had so much business there that it escaped me, and therefore I have not heretofore reported it. It is a good bill. It is sound.

Mr. HARRISON. We can not hear what it is the Senator requests.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill is a House bill granting $200 to a party for carrying the mail for two months. The service is admitted. It is a House bill, having passed that body. The man has never got his pay; and it is reported favorably to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. I object. Let it go on the Calendar. We shall reach it there if we go along with the cases on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the report will be received and the bill placed on the Calendar.

TRANSPORT-BOAT PLANTER.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by a majority of the members of the Committee on Finance who were present to report without amendment the bill (H. R. 7626) authorizing a reappraisement of the steam transport-boat Planter, captured by Robert Smalls, and for a distribution of proceeds thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received if there be no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. That bill may be from the Committee on Finance, but I never knew that it was considered in the committee before.

Mr. MORRILL. As I stated, I report it from a majority of the committee who were present. We have had no formal meeting; it is impossible to have one; but there are six members of the committee who have consented to the report.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely say that the bill never had been considered in committee, and I never heard of it until the Senator spoke of it just now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Delaware to object. The Chair thinks it is not the report of the committee, objection being made.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MCPHERSON, it was Ordered, That Louis A. Von Hoffman & Co. and William H. Newman have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers filed by them in support of their claim against the United States (Senate bill No. 505).

DELAWARE CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION.

Mr. INGALLS. It is important that there should be a brief executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion for a moment. I have a resolution of inquiry which I should like to have adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his motion?

Mr. BAYARD. I will renew it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw the motion?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Delaware will be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the names of the special deputy marshals employed at the Congressional election held in New Castle County, Delaware, in November last, and whether they were qualified voters of the election districts in which they were so employed, and whether any of them were so employed in any town or city having a less population than 20,000 inhabitants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reception and present consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ROLLINS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BAYARD subsequently said: I offered a resolution of inquiry this morning, and the consideration was objected to by the Senator from New Hampshire. He informs me now that he withdraws the objection, and I ask that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have examined the resolution and see no objection whatever.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. INGALLS. I renew the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent to offer at this time for present consideration a resolution which will be read.

The resolution was read, and considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing as at present constituted be authorized to sit during the coming recess of the Senate, and instructed to examine and report on the following subjects:

1. The public printing and binding with a view to a reduction of the quantity of work and expenses.
2. The management of the Government Printing Office and Bindery.
3. The wages paid to different classes of employés.
4. The necessity for the branch offices of the Government Printing Office and their cost, including the printing of the Official Gazette of the Patent Office.
5. The number of public documents printed, with suggestions for its reduction.
6. The distribution of public documents, with suggestions for its improvement and for the sale of public documents.

That the committee be authorized to employ a stenographer, and that the needful expenses of the committee and its clerk and the compensation of the stenographer be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution for present consideration. It comes from the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 1,000 additional copies of the Army Register for 1883 be printed for the use of the Senate.

NAVAL REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY offered the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That 1,000 additional copies of the last Naval Register be printed for the use of the Senate.

DIRECT TAX SALES.

Mr. MAHONE. Under date of 26th of February there was a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury making a report of certain lands that were sold for taxes in certain of the States. I notice the RECORD states that the communication was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed; but it does not so appear by the indorsement on the communication itself. I ask that the order be entered for the printing of this document.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has it not been printed?

Mr. MAHONE. It has never been printed. There seems to have been some mistake about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia states that an official communication touching the subject of tax sales was sent to the Senate and was referred without an order to print. He asks that an order to print be now entered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

ESTATE OF DANIEL CARROLL.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to a point I am disposed to make. When there came up, under the standing order, early this forenoon, a bill for the relief of a family named Carroll, whose land had been injured by the grading of one of the public streets, I moved an amendment to make a general law for such cases instead of this individual case being included in the provisions of the law alone; and upon that amendment being offered, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who had not otherwise objected to the bill, interposed an objection. Since that proceeding I have seen a gentleman who appears to me to be worthy of confidence, who says that all similar cases to this, where such improvements were made, were considered by a board of audit of the District of Columbia under a law formerly existing, and that in a very large number of such cases damages were paid; that this case came after the abolition of that board of audit, so that the claimants were unable to receive their damages by reason of the abolition of the board which had jurisdiction to allow them in such cases.

Under those circumstances I ask unanimous consent that when the present order is disposed of the Senate may go back to that case under the pending rule, and that I may be permitted to withdraw the amendment which I moved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Can the Senator state to the Chair the number of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. I do not remember. It is the Carroll case.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is House bill No. 6405, Order of Business 1011.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that when the bill now under consideration shall have been disposed of the Senate return to Order of Business No. 1011 for consideration.

Mr. HOAR. Under the same rule as before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The bill regularly under consideration is House bill No. 110.

REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 139) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia, to report it favorably, and ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed

JEANNETTE COURT OF INQUIRY.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Printing. The Secretary of the Navy communicated to the Senate the record of the proceedings of the court of inquiry convened to investigate the circumstances of the loss in the Arctic seas of the Jeannette. It was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the question of printing to the Committee on Printing. The Committee on Printing instruct me to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That——

Mr. BROWN. I do not want to make any objection, but the Georgia bill ought to be disposed of.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is a short matter.

Mr. PLUMB. I object, not to the report being made, but to the present consideration of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the Georgia bill is before the Senate.

GEORGIA REVOLUTIONARY CLAIM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 110) to refund to the State of Georgia certain money expended by said State for the common defense in 1777.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will resume the reading of the report that was interrupted when the Senate proceeded to other business

The Acting Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report submitted by Mr. BARROW January 8, 1883, as follows:

The Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 110) to refund to the State of Georgia certain money expended by said State for the common defense in 1777, submit the following report:

On the 31st of October, 1777, by order of the governor and executive council of the State of Georgia, Thomas Stone and Edward Davis were empowered as commissioners to purchase from one Robert Farquhar, of Charleston, South Carolina, certain necessary goods and supplies for the use of the Continental troops at Savannah, Georgia, then in active service under the command of General James Jackson. The purchase was made, the goods delivered, and the contract fully performed by Farquhar on his part. By the terms of the original purchase the price of the goods, which amounted in the then currency to £63,606, was to be scaled, if paid in Continental money, at the rate of $3 to every 32*s.* 6*d.* Carolina currency. The debt was not paid when it fell due.

In the year 1784 Farquhar died, leaving a daughter, Elizabeth W. Farquhar, who, in 1789, married one Peter Trezevant of London. By his will Farquhar had appointed Alexander Chisolm his executor and made his daughter Elizabeth his sole legatee.

In November, 1789, Chisolm applied by petition to the Legislature of Georgia for payment, but it was refused and he was recommended to pursue Stone and Davis, the commissioners. This he declined to do, but instead, as executor as aforesaid, instituted suit in the circuit court of the United States against the State of Georgia, returnable to April term, 1791, for the recovery of his claim. This case was, upon a plea to the jurisdiction, "quashed by the court" and was thereupon renewed in the Supreme Court to August term, 1792, and at February term, 1794, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff and a writ of inquiry awarded. Afterward on June 9, 1794, the plaintiff's attorney served a notice of the intention to execute the writ of inquiry on the first Monday in the following August, which was never done, as this case and all similar suits against the States were swept at once from the records of the court by the constitutional amendment, under the decision in Hollingsworth et al. vs. Virginia (Peters' condensed Report, note, vol. 2, page 675).

Meantime, in 1793, Peter Trezevant, as husband of Elizabeth Farquhar and armed with a power of attorney from the executor, Chisolm, applied a second time to the Legislature of Georgia, producing the books of account of Robert Farquhar, containing the original entry in his own handwriting and proving the actual delivery of the goods to the agents of the State by Arthur Fort, esq., who was a member of the council at the time the purchase was made. It was shown also that loan certificates had been issued to these agents, Stone & Davis, leaving no room for doubt that the goods were received. Upon this evidence the Legislature, by joint resolution at the next session, resolved:

"That the auditor should be directed to issue audited certificates to the amount of £7,566 10*s.* 1*d.*, expressing in the certificate that they were issued for Continental army supplies, furnished in October, 1777, and that the attorney of the executor shall, on the receipt of said certificates, give a full and ample discharge of all claims against this State. (Journal, 1791-'94.)"

In pursuance of this action of the General Assembly, seven certificates were issued, aggregating the sum named, of one of which the following is a copy:

£1,000. No. 184.

STATE OF GEORGIA, December 9, 1794.

These are to certify that the State of Georgia is justly indebted to Peter Trezevant, or bearer, the sum of £1,000 for supplies furnished the Continental army in October, 1777, which said sum will be received in payment of any purchases made by him of confiscated property, that may have been sold pursuant to the act of attainder, or to be otherwise provided for by the Legislature.

ABRAM JONES, Auditor.

Trezevant accepted the certificates and executed the requisite receipt.

Two of the certificates were parted with to third persons by Trezevant, and were never again heard from, leaving in his hands five, aggregating £5,000. With these he appeared again before the Legislature of Georgia in 1838, proved the genuineness of the signatures by Seaborn Jones and John A. Jones, esqrs., two gentlemen of high character and sons of Abram Jones, the auditor, and asked for the payment of his claim. A commission was thereupon appointed by resolution of the General Assembly, composed of Jos. Henry Lumpkin (afterward chief-justice of the supreme court of Georgia), Dr. C. Campbell, and Williams Law, the latter the recognized leader of the Savannah bar, and afterward a judge of the superior court; who, after a laborious and thorough investigation, reported in favor of the payment of these certificates by the State, without interest. In speaking of the certificates, the commission said:

"The reasons that have now been assigned force upon us the conviction that the debt acknowledged was really due to Mr. Trezevant, and that the certificates to him were properly issued."

And they finally disposed of the case with the following report:

"The reasons which have now been assigned have brought us to the conclusion that the State is bound by every principle of honor and justice to redeem the certificates held by Mr. Trezevant by the payment of the £5,000 called for by them."

For satisfactory reasons they declined to recommend the payment of interest.

It appears that no further action was taken by the State until the year 1847 when the General Assembly passed an act in accordance with the finding of this commission, providing for the payment to Trezevant of the sum of $22,222.22, which was the exact principal of the debt without interest. For this amount 6 per cent. ten-year bonds of the State were issued January 1, 1848, and on January 1, 1858, when they matured, were paid by the State; the whole amount then paid being $35,555.42, principal and interest. This is the case as between the State of Georgia and Trezevant.

In the year 1787 Congress by ordinance provided for the creation of a commission to audit the claims of the several States against the United States on account of payments made for the common defense during the war of the Revolution, and in 1790 the First Congress passed an act reorganizing the commission and providing for the payment of all claims which had been previous to September 24, 1788, allowed by the States. Afterward this act was amended and the commission continued. By all these enactments the obligation of the United States to refund to the States all money paid by them for the common defense was recognized and acted upon. This claim of Trezevant had not then been allowed by the State, as Trezevant was then suing the State in the circuit court, and also appealing in vain to the Legislature, so that it could not be acted upon by the commission, and was not included in the settlement between the State and the United States.

After the payment of this debt by the State, application was made to the Thirty-sixth Congress to have the amount refunded. The memorial upon this subject was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims in the Senate, who unanimously reported through Mr. Nicholson in favor of its payment, using the following language:

"The case is therefore the plain one of the duty of the National Government to assume the payment of the expenses of the general military defense. The Revolutionary war debts of all the States were assumed upon this principle in 1790, and its correctness is not now open to question."

This report was made February 28, 1860, and the bill was not reached upon the Calendar. The matter was again brought before the Forty-third Congress, and was a second time referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, from which another favorable report was made May 7, 1874, by Mr. JOHNSTON, in which the following language is used:

"Your committee are unable to see any good reason why the United States should not pay this debt. It was a valid claim against the State of Georgia; it was paid by her and is already covered by the spirit of the law of August 5, 1790."

For some reason the bill was not acted upon by the Forty-third Congress.

The matter was again brought to the attention of the Forty-sixth Congress and was referred to the Committee on Claims, in the House of Representatives, from which, on January 16, 1880, through Mr. Samford, an elaborate and comprehensive report was made favorable to the payment of the claim, in which they say:

"The State of Georgia paid, on the 1st day of January, 1858, the sum of $35,555.42, incurred in the common defense, and this sum has never been refunded to her. Your committee think it should be paid, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill."

For some reason it again failed to reach a vote, and reappeared in the present Congress and was once more referred to the Committee on Claims in the House of Representatives, from which, January 19, 1882, through Mr. H. G. TURNER, a favorable report was made; and at the present session, on the 6th day of December, 1882, the bill passed the House.

The precedent has been established of paying claims of this identical nature.

The report of the House committee above referred to alludes to two cases, as follows:

"In 1832 the State of Virginia presented to Congress a claim for a large amount, which had been adjudged to be due from the State under an agreement by which certain troops were raised for the particular defense of the State, and notwithstanding the claims of Virginia under the assumption act had been audited and settled, Congress assumed the liability because it was incurred in the Revolutionary cause, and provided for its payment in an act passed in that year.

"Again, by an act passed by the Forty-first Congress, July 8, 1870, $678,362.41 was allowed and paid to the State of Massachusetts for interest paid by her on money expended on account of the war of 1812 with Great Britain. By an agreement between Massachusetts and Maine, the State of Maine became entitled to one-third of this sum."

This policy has been steadily adhered to in all subsequent wars in which any expense has ever been incurred by any State on account of the common defense.

Your committee conclude that this claim of the State of Georgia is just and should be paid, and therefore recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF DANIEL CARROLL.

Mr. ALDRICH. The understanding was that now we should go back and take up Order of Business 1011.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Chair is informed that an order was made to return to the bill suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6405) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh, executrices of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased, by the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736 in the city of Washington.

The bill was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a substitute.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. The title should be amended so as to read "A bill for the relief of the devisees of the late Daniel Carroll."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the title will be so amended. The Chair hears no objection.

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. When Order of Business 1047 was reached this morning its consideration was objected to by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON]. I understand that he is ready to withdraw the objection to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his objection to the consideration of House bill 684?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Senate will return to the consideration of that bill, which will be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill was read and considered a good deal at length some time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will not be read at the present time unless called for.

Mr. JACKSON. I move to amend section 4 by striking out, after the word "taken," in line 6, the words:

Did not give any aid or comfort to said rebellion, but was throughout the war loyal to the Government of the United States.

And inserting:

Was loyal to the Government of the United States at the time when such stores or supplies were taken or furnished, and did not thereafter give any aid or comfort to the said rebellion, but continued loyal to the Government.

So as to read:

SEC. 4. In any case of a claim for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the petition shall aver that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom such supplies or stores were taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States at the time when such stores or supplies were taken or furnished, and did not thereafter give any aid or comfort to the said rebellion, but continued loyal to the Government, and the fact of such loyalty shall be a jurisdictional fact; and unless the said court shall, on a preliminary inquiry, find that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same were taken as aforesaid, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war, the court shall not have jurisdiction of such cause, and the same shall, without further proceedings, be dismissed.

As the clause now stands in the bill it requires parties who furnished stores and supplies to have been loyal throughout the war. Under the proclamation of the President, authorized by act of July 17, 1862, a great many took the oath prescribed and furnished supplies after the date at which they took the oath of allegiance and received amnesty. The rule of the Quartermaster's Department is simply this:

When it is shown that, before the taking of the property, the claimant had taken the oath of amnesty and allegiance under the President's proclamation and lived up to it, this office holds heirs loyal and entitled to privileges of the act of 4th July, 1864.

There are a great many cases now pending in the Quartermaster's Department falling within that rule where parties furnished supplies and stores after the date at which they took the oath of amnesty and allegiance, and they fall within the benefits of the act of 1864, and ought to be allowed to get the benefits of this bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The act authorizing the Quartermaster-General to receive and pass upon claims for quartermaster and commissary stores became a law on the 4th day of July, 1864. It was subsequently amended; but since 1864 persons in the loyal States, in the State of Tennessee, and in two or three counties of West Virginia were under that law authorized to file their claims in the Quartermaster's Department. The time within which such claims could be filed expired, I think, on the 1st of January, 1880. It was extended from time to time up to 1880. So I assume that all existing claims were filed prior to that time.

This bill if it becomes a law will not apply to the action of the Quartermaster-General in settling any claims on file in his office. It is true that if the Quartermaster-General or the Secretary of the Treasury should send these claims to the Court of Claims for the purpose of being examined, then the provisions of this act would apply to them, but the Quartermaster-General considers himself fully competent to examine and dispose of those claims, so that the probability is that none of those claims or at least very few of them will be sent to the Court of Claims even if this bill becomes a law.

But without any regard to the merits of this amendment I desire to say that all those who are friendly to the passage of the bill think if any amendment be added to this bill at the present stage of the session it will be utterly impossible to get the action of the House of Representatives upon it, and consequently the bill will fail. I consider the bill a very meritorious bill indeed, and hope it will pass. I regret that the Senator from Tennessee has considered it his duty to offer this amendment and I hope the Senate will vote it down.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do hope the Senator from Tennessee will not insist upon this amendment. I am besieged by letters daily to offer amendments to this bill to include another class of claims upon which the Committee on Claims has acted favorably and reported a bill that now stands upon the Calendar reported by the Senator from Tennessee himself. If one amendment is adopted we shall have to go into other amendments. This bill provides for a certain class of claims. If we amend the bill we kill it and lose all. Now why not let this go through and depend upon future legislation to meet other classes of claims? I trust the Senator will withdraw his amendment and let this bill go through, instead of practically killing it by an amendment.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, the bill as it now stands is not perfect, and it is not a proper consideration to address to me or to the Senate that we should withdraw proper amendments in order to let an improper bill go through or, at least, a bill in an improper shape. This amendment is in exact accordance with the law. These claimants ought to have the benefit of any legislation that may be adopted by Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. I trust the Senator from Tennessee will not insist on his amendment. The provisions of this bill have been substantially considered by the Senate and by the other House quite a number of times; and I trust my friend from Tennessee will not insist on his amendment, but allow the bill to pass. As has been said by the Senator from Missouri, if it is found to be imperfect we can amend it hereafter.

I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he can approximate the number of claims that Congress will be relieved of by virtue of this bill should it become a law?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is not possible for me to answer that interrogatory with any definiteness. The bill, as the Senator from South Carolina knows, proposes to authorize Congress, or any committee of Congress, or any head of any of the Executive Departments, to send a claim to the Court of Claims for the purpose of ascertaining the facts and reporting the facts to Congress or to the head of a Department, who sends a claim to the court.

The trouble that the Committee on Claims has with claims that are presented to that committee is to arrive at the facts. A half bushel of papers will be thrown down before us without, in many cases, any brief or any statement of the case, and we are expected to take up those papers, go through with the whole of them, and winnow the wheat out of the chaff.

Mr. BUTLER. And nearly all ex parte.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. All ex parte.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certified by justices of the peace whom nobody knows anything about.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The evidence consists of letters and all sorts of papers that would not be competent testimony in any court. I will say that during the present Congress about eight hundred claims have been sent to the Senate Committee on Claims. That committee has reported nearly four hundred of them; about four hundred of them still remain in the committee-room. I have no doubt that if these claims had been sent to the Court of Claims and the facts had been reported to the committee we could have reported upon the whole of them, and I have no doubt the Senate would have been able to dispose of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARLAND. Some few weeks ago when this subject was before the Senate I stated some objections that I had to the bill. I still have the same objections, and I am satisfied in my own opinion that the friends of this measure overestimate its value. I do not believe it is going to accomplish the end which its friends seem to think it will, and if I followed my own convictions about it I should object to its further consideration; but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON], who are old members upon the Committee on Claims and have had to go through these matters in all varieties and shapes, seem to be so well convinced that some good will result from this that I shall not make that objection. I will allow the consideration of it, so far as I am concerned, to progress, and shall give it my support, believing at the same time that it is going to fall very far short of their expectations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his Secretaries, announced that the President had on the 2d instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2316) for the relief of Daniel Breed; and

An act (S. 1342) authorizing the trustees of the Isherwood estate to amend a certain plan of subdivision of said estate recorded in the land records of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the President had on the 3d instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 889) to provide for the erection of a public building in Jefferson City, in the State of Missouri;

An act (S. 1785) for the relief of David Mordecai and J. Randolph Mordecai, composing the commercial firm of Mordecai & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland; and Joint resolution (S. R. 123) providing for the termination of articles numbered 18 to 25, inclusive, and article numbered 30 of the treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, concluded at Washington, May 8, 1871.

JOHN LITTLE AND HOBART WILLIAMS.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill 1327, Order of Business 1158.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 1327.

Mr. MAXEY. There is a bill that comes before that relative to the removal of disabilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate is proceeding under the Anthony rule to consider only House bills.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand that, and I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. VOORHEES. I appeal to the Senate to give unanimous consent to the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas object?

Mr. MAXEY. I had forgotten one thing. I do have a little courtesy about me. I withdraw the objection for the simple reason that we are about unfortunately to lose the services of the Senator from Nebraska to-morrow, and on that ground as a matter of personal favor to him I withdraw the objection, not however waiving the principle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The bill (S. 1327) for the relief of John Little and Hobart Williams was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to adjust and settle the claim of the legal owners of said lease, and when adjusted to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount actually expended by them in purchasing said lease, and in prospecting for and mining coal, coal mineral, and fire-clay as aforesaid, and on which they were prevented from realizing a profit, or from recovering by the said action of the Government of the United States: Provided, That said amount shall not exceed the sum of $20,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAUNDERS February 8, 1883:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1327) for the relief of John Little and Hobart Williams, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

The bill sets forth that on January 22, 1870, the United States, by its superintendent of Indian affairs, Samuel M. Janney, for the northern superintendency, and Thomas Lightfoot, agent for the Iowa tribe of Indians, and the Iowa tribe of Indians, by its delegates, leased to Ephraim D. Pratt, Lorenzo B. Williams, and John McCague, of Omaha, Nebraska, for the term of twenty-five years, all of the lands of the Iowa tribe of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, for the purpose of prospecting for and mining coal and coal minerals, including fire-clay; that the Omaha Coal and Mining Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Nebraska, became the owner of the aforesaid lease; that by subsequent assignments of said lease from the Omaha Coal and Mining Company to Jonas Gise, and from Jonas Gise to John Little and Hobart Williams, the said John Little and Hobart Williams, on November 10, 1875, acquired an interest in said lease; that the said John Little and Hobart Williams, before acquiring an interest in said lease, were assured by Barclay White, superintendent of Indian affairs for the State of Nebraska, that the right to prospect for and mine coal and clay on said tract of land under said lease had been sanctioned and allowed by the Government of the United States; that by virtue of said lease, and the assignments thereof, and the assurance given by the superintendent of Indian affairs for Nebraska, the said John Little and Hobart Williams entered upon said land and began prospecting for and mining coal and clay, and while so engaged they were, by order of the United States Government, enjoined from prosecuting said work; and that the said John Little and Hobart Williams invested and expended the sum of $20,000 in acquiring an interest in said lease, and in opening and operating the mines, which sum, nor any part thereof, have they ever recovered, and were prevented from recovering or from realizing a profit on the same by the said action of the United States Government.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required by the bill to pay to the said John Little and Hobart Williams the sum of $20,000, the amount of money by them expended in purchasing said lease, and in prospecting for and mining coal, coal mineral, and fire-clay, as aforesaid.

There is not sufficient evidence before the committee to establish the fact that John Little and Hobart Williams are the sole assignees of the lease taken by Pratt, Williams, and McCague, nor that they actually expended the sum of $20,000 and never realized any part of it; yet as the agents of the Government represented that the lease was valid, the parties injured are entitled to compensation for what was actually expended and lost through the action of the Department; and the committee therefore report back the bill, and recommend the passage of the following substitute therefor:

"A bill for the relief of the assignees of the Omaha Coal and Mining Company.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and required to adjust and settle the claim of the legal owners of said lease, and when adjusted to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount actually expended by them in purchasing said lease, and in prospecting for and mining coal, coal mineral, and fire-clay, as aforesaid, and on which they were prevented from realizing a profit, or from recovering, by the said action of the Government of the United States: Provided, That said amount shall not exceed the sum of $20,000."

Mr. COCKRELL. This is a brief case. This case undertakes to make the Government of the United States and the tax-payers of the country responsible because an Indian agent made a lease to somebody of land. Now, we should look to see the authority that these parties had in law to represent the United States, and bind them by this lease. This report is remarkable. The whole first page of it simply sets forth the bill, and then it says:

There is not sufficient evidence before the committee to establish the fact that John Little and Hobart Williams are the sole assignees of the lease taken by Pratt, Williams, and McCague—

No evidence before the committee that these gentlemen are the assignees, or the sole assignees—

There is not sufficient evidence * * * that they actually expended the sum of $20,000 and never realized any part of it; yet as the agents of the Government represented that the lease was valid, the parties injured—

By the false representations of agents who had no authority to make any representation at all—are entitled to compensation for what was actually expended and lost through the action of the Department; and the committee therefore report back the bill, and recommend the passage of the following substitute therefor.

These Indian agents had no authority to make any verbal representation. They had no authority to make any lease outside of the statutes of the country. They are not general agents of this Government; it has none. The law prescribes the duties and the powers and the rights and the authorities of its officers, and I ask that the Senate be advised where the provisions of law are authorizing these parties to make this lease and bind the tax-payer of this country.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Senator from Missouri is mistaken when he says that it was an Indian agent who made these contracts. They were made by the superintendent for the northern superintendency, and his action was approved by the Indian Department. This lease was given to parties there to prospect for coal and stone, &c., coal mainly. There was a transfer or two made, and afterward it fell into the hands of the firm of Little & Williams, who made a discovery of coal. About that time the question was raised as to whether the Government had a right to lease Indian lands for the purpose of digging for coal. It was decided by the Department of Justice that they had not that right. Of course the work stopped. These men were ready to go on with their contract as they are to-day, and the contract was made with the superintendent and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as will be found by the papers accompanying the bill.

The report, I will say, is made up mainly from the language used by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He says he does not find proof that Little & Williams are the real assignees in this case. Therefore he recommends that the bill shall be so changed that it shall read that the "legal owners," whoever they may be, should be entitled to the money actually expended; not $20,000 or any other sum, but the amount actually expended in prospecting, &c., when they were prevented from prosecuting their work, as has been stated, by the action of the Department of Justice.

These gentlemen did their part. They made their contract. They were successors to the original owners of this franchise; they were stopped in the midst of their work; and now, as the best thing they can do, they ask to get back the money they expended. That is all there is of it; that is what the committee recommend. The Senator will find in the papers accompanying the bill a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, giving almost the exact language of this bill, and recommending that it be passed in justice to these men because they can not go on and prosecute their work.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. Did any advantage result to the Government from this contract?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Government was to have some advantages from the contract. It was to have a certain percentage of what was realized. Of course, on the discovery of coal, it would belong to the Indians, being on Indian land, but the Government would have gotten more than the individuals.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator from Missouri made the point that the agents had no authority.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The papers come from the Interior Department; they are not mine. They are the papers made out by the Interior Department. This bill is recommended by the Interior Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point I make is that there was no law which gave those agents any right to make that kind of a contract, and these parties negotiating with them negotiated at their risk, and knowing that the Government of the United States was not responsible.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But this contract was made and was approved. They only ask in this bill the amount they actually expended. The Interior Department thinks they are entitled to it, just in the language of this bill; that is, that somebody is entitled to it, and the Department says, let the legal owners of this franchise get the benefit of it, and not Little & Williams unless they can prove that they are the actual owners.

Mr. COCKRELL. In other words, the Department of Justice has decided that this whole thing was void, that there was no authority in law to make this lease in any shape or form. Now, they come in and say that the Government of the United States must be responsible because these Indian agents, without any authority of law and in violation of it, made a contract with parties to go on Indian lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me ask the Senator from Missouri a question. The Government had delegated certain rights and powers, as it was supposed, to those having charge of the Indians.

Mr. COCKRELL. What does the law authorize?

Mr. VAN WYCK. In pursuance of that power certain officials, representing the Government of the United States, for the benefit of the United States, and especially of the Indians, entered into a contract for the discovery of coal and for mining it. When a private citizen negotiates with a public functionary clothed with the authority of the Government within the lines of its territory, and, as he supposes, within the limits of his authority, I presume he is not called upon to go to the Department of Justice to know whether the persons are clothed with lawful authority and whether they are doing the acts which they are authorized to do in their authority. It is sufficient for the private citizen to take that for granted when he is negotiating with a person who is representing the Government.

The Senator from Missouri shakes his head. If within the line of his business, if within the line of his duty he is negotiating with a representative of the Government does he hold that it becomes his duty to go and inquire of the Department of Justice whether that agent is authorized?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; not to the Department of Justice to make a lease of land, which everybody knows can not be done.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is it necessary for him to carry with him the statutes of the United States and the decisions of the courts to ascertain whether a Department can contract with him through a person pretending and presumed to be and actually clothed with authority from the Government? It is not required.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We must know the law and not violate it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. That would be a fearful doctrine that no man dare negotiate with an agent of the Government. The Department from which this man came approved the action taken; the Indian Bureau approved the contract before any work was done. Do gentlemen say that a man must, notwithstanding the approval of the Department, employ a lawyer to examine whether the Department transcended their power and authority? That can not be. A private citizen suffers enough at the hands of the Government without being required to do that; and at this day it is almost impossible, as gentlemen well know, for a man having a claim against the Government to get it. This claim could have been enforced against a private citizen if a private citizen had made such a contract; but the Government made it; it was made through the Indian Department, which represents that branch of the Government. It would be an intolerable doctrine that a citizen dare not negotiate with the agents of the Government. All we ask in this case is that these men shall be repaid the money actually expended.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to ask the Senator a question. To whom did the benefit inure resulting from this expenditure, if to anybody?

Mr. VAN WYCK. To the Government and these individuals. A contract was made by which they were to develop coal if they found it there.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. They got no title to the land?

Mr. VAN WYCK. They had the privilege to go there; they went there; the money was expended; the question was brought to the Department of Justice, and they said the officers of the Government had transcended their power.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Nebraska give way for me to make a motion for a recess?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Wait till we dispose of this bill.

Mr. MORRILL. We can not do it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will stop and let the vote be taken. My colleague is unable to stay here after the recess.

Mr. MORRILL. If we take a recess at all we ought to take it from now until 8 o'clock.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Can we not vote on this bill without further debate? I will stop.

Mr. MORRILL. I move a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will not gentlemen consent to vote on this matter if I stop?

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill must be investigated a little further.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator from Vermont if he will withdraw his motion and permit me to make a motion to go into executive session?

Mr. MORRILL. I think there will be ample time for that when we come back. I move that the Senate now take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion for a recess takes precedence.

Mr. McMILLAN. There are quite a number of nominations on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] moves that the Senate now take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recess having expired, the Senate resumes its session.

Mr. SHERMAN. Regular order.

JOHN LITTLE AND HOBART WILLIAMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending business is the bill (S. 1327) for the relief of John Little and Hobart Williams.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill was taken up and elicited considerable discussion, and it is a bill that will have to be discussed a great deal more than it has been yet. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] is not here, and it was taken up rather by mutual consent to accomodate him. I ask that we go back to the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was the bill taken up subject to objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. It was taken up by general consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it being before the Senate the Chair can not set it aside. It requires a motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. This can not be allowed to stop all other business. I move that it be laid on the table. The Senator from Nebraska is not here, and it is a bill that requires debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the bill lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

POSTAL MONEY-ORDER SYSTEM.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I hope we shall proceed under the order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for.

Mr. DAWES. What is the regular order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the consideration of House bills on the Calendar. The next bill in order is Order of Business No. 1107, being House bill 5661, to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to ask unanimous consent to take up a House pension bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pension bills have had their day, and I think we had better go on with the regular order. We have disposed of the pension cases on the Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. At some time I hope the Senate will allow me to get up this pension bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. We had better go on with the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill under consideration is House bill 5661, which will be read.

The bill (H. R. 5661) to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. GEORGE M. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. S. S. COX of New York managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 2911) for the relief of the German National Bank of Louisville, Kentucky;

A bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Clinton D. Smith;

A bill (H. R. 5200) authorizing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866; and

A bill (H. R. 2638) for the relief of J. J. Coffey and Rebecca S. Lewis, mother of Burge Rawle Lewis.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiences in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL.

KIRK W. NOYES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the next House bill on the Calendar.

The bill (H. R. 5653) for the relief of Kirk W. Noyes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Kirk W. Noyes, of Paw Paw, Van Buren County, Michigan, the pay and allowances due him for services rendered as first lieutenant of Company D, First Michigan Sharpshooters, from January 1, 1865, to May 1, 1865, deducting therefrom such compensation as he may have received during that period as first sergeant of that company.

Mr. LOGAN. Is there a report on that bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] reported it. I am afraid our general bill may not reach the case.

Mr. HARRISON. This bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LARCENY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 7226) to punish larceny from the person in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that whoever in the District of Columbia commits larceny from the person of another shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment not more than six years, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and whoever in the District of Columbia attempts to commit larceny from the person of another, by any overt act done with intent to commit a larceny, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished in the police court of the District of Columbia by imprisonment in the District jail not more than one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. There is one thing I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina. I see the omission of a clause which is commonly in bills of this kind. Where the punishment is inflicted it is not left in the discretion of the court or jury. Would the language employed be construed that it should be in the discretion of the court?

Mr. VANCE. I have not the bill before me; I do not recollect the words. Let it be read again.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill reads that the person shall "be punished in the police court of the District of Columbia."

Mr. LOGAN. I know; but I refer to the preceding section.

Mr. COCKRELL. The first section reads as follows:

That whoever in the District of Columbia commits larceny from the person of another shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment not more than six years, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wanted to know if that would be construed to be in the discretion of the court.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would be in the discretion of the court.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

The bill (H. R. 6929) to provide for the collection of taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a bill of some ninety pages. I do not suppose it can be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not understand that the Senator from Missouri objects.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply remarked that it is a bill of some eighty or ninety pages, and I did not know whether we had time to consider it to-night.

Mr. INGALLS. I propose to ask the Senate to reject the amendment that was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia to the bill, and to consider the bill as it came from the House, to provide for an assessment of property in the District.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Acting Secretary commenced to read the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I shall object to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland objects to the present consideration of the bill, and it goes over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. 2433) to amend sections 6 and 7 of the act providing for the publication of the Revised Statutes and the laws of the United States, approved June 20, 1876;

Joint resolution (S. R. 64) authorizing the sale of the Congressional Directory and the current numbers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD;

Joint resolution (S. R. 95) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department; and Joint resolution (S. R. 143) authorizing the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer relative to the maps, &c., for the census reports.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of the report of the National Academy of Sciences on sorghum sugar, and the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of 10,000 additional copies of the proceedings of the Yorktown centennial celebration.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the pending business may be laid aside until I can make a report from the conference committee on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa presents from a committee of conference a report which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7395) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

WM. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FRANK HISCOCK,
BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Senate will observe that this is a general disagreement, but I desire to state that the conferees have substantially agreed upon the various items of appropriation in the bill, the real subjects of difference being the matters of legislation presented to the Senate in the original bill from the House, namely, a provision for the sale of military reservations, a provision altering and changing the law with regard to the homes for volunteer and disabled soldiers, the provision with regard to the ratification of the Sioux treaty, and the provision with regard to the repeal of the pre-emption laws and other provisions in connection with that repeal.

Mr. BECK. Did we not disagree also in regard to the Chelsea Hospital and the Brooklyn navy-yard provisions?

Mr. ALLISON. I omitted to say that we disagreed also with reference to the provisions for sale of lands of the Brooklyn navy-yard and the Chelsea Hospital.

These being matters of substantial difference the Senate conferees did not feel that they had any power or authority to agree to these matters of legislation. Confessedly the provisions with regard to these various matters, or at least three of them, are ineffectual and imperfect and require substantive amendment in order to accomplish what the House propose to do. With reference to these matters of substantial difference the conferees desire the judgment of the Senate.

I will say that there is one other matter of difference which does not relate to a provision for legislation. The House insist that they shall have the power to pay their own employés and officers of every name and nature one month's additional compensation, and they decline to consider that question with the conferees on the part of the Senate unless the Senate will yield that point. I will say that the conferees on the part of the Senate have refused to yield the point unless also it shall contemplate a similar provision for the officers and employés of the Senate. They should stand upon a par, whatever that may be, in the judgment of the Senate conferees.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to know from the Senator from Iowa whether, while the conferees on the part of the House demand the right to allow such compensation to their own employés, they deny to the conferees on the part of the Senate the same right in respect to the employés of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. They do not. They are willing that we shall make any adjustment we choose with reference to our own employés.

Mr. FRYE. Why is not that right?

Mr. ALLISON. That is a matter which we have not yet agreed upon. The Senate is brought face to face with the question whether we shall permit the House of Representatives to put upon these bills such legislation as it sees proper without an opportunity for a full and fair consideration of the matters of legislation by the proper committees of the Senate. As all these matters are new to the Committee on Appropriations, not having been referred to that committee by any of the standing committees of the Senate having proper jurisdiction of the questions involved, it is for the Senate to say what it will do in the premises under the circumstances.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, this is not a new question. It comes up every year in one shape or another with different aspects, but always the same. The question is presented to the Senate now whether legislation independent of appropriation bills shall be forced through Congress under the pressure and by the aid of the necessities of the Government for appropriations.

I think Congress has reached a point where a more serious question can hardly be presented than whether one branch or the other shall surrender its right to consider the wisdom of independent legislation under the pressure of the necessity for appropriations. I will go as far as any Senator can be called upon to go to provide this Government with the means of carrying on the current needs of the Government; but when it comes to the question whether in order to be provided with the necessary appropriations to carry on this Government there shall go along with it that which this branch or the other shall deem to be unwise and imprudent and hasty independent legislation, it comes to be a very serious question in my mind whether the Government of this country shall be thus carried on.

There is but a single measure in all the independent legislation brought into this bill that I have any considerable interest in; but for either branch to say that the necessary demands of this Government for the means to carry on its current functions shall be dependent upon the question whether one branch or the other shall surrender its convictions as to the wisdom of independent legislation, having no reference at all to the appropriations of this Government, reaches further than any consideration that can be presented as to the immediate necessity of meeting the demands of the Government for appropriations. It were better for the Government to make its stand here, and, if necessary, force an extra session of Congress, than for either branch to surrender its free and full and deliberate consideration of the wisdom of every independent measure that may be presented to Congress. For it to have behind it, forcing it through either branch of Congress, the necessity of the Government for appropriation, is to bring to bear upon the consideration of independent legislation a power unknown to the Government and fatal to deliberate legislation in either branch.

I hope that the conferees, whoever they may be, to whom this bill may be committed again, will understand that there is committed to them as grave a question as ever has been committed to conferees, to determine whether either branch shall be permitted to consider upon its merits any independent legislation, or shall be forced to the alternative presented by the other branch, that you shall take this legislation or have no appropriation for the necessities of the Government. There can be no more serious question presented. Everything had better be surrendered here this night than to surrender the independence of this body in deliberating upon the wisdom of any measure. I do not care whether these measures be wise or not, they have no business in an appropriation bill, for an appropriation bill should be stripped of every other consideration but the wisdom of the appropriation itself.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, as he has had long experience, a question somewhat to guide my own action as one of the conferees on this bill. It is admitted that the legislation now on the bill sent from the House, so far as it relates to the repeal of the pre-emption laws and other matters, is fatally defective as it stands. It is also admitted that the legislation relative to the inmates of soldiers' homes is fatally defective as it stands. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the conferees on the part of the Senate would have the right to amend those provisions by independent legislation, for they must be amended by legislation, whether we should be in order in so doing as conferees? Suppose we attempted to do that, would our action be in order under the rules of the Senate?

Mr. DAWES. According to my idea of the power of conferees it would be a departure from the proper practice for the Senate conferees to undertake to incorporate into this independent legislation new matter that had never been presented to either branch for its consideration. I have no doubt that it is within the power of the conferees to consider any particular measure, any particular feature, to correct any mistakes in it, but to introduce into it independent legislation not in the measure itself submitted to the board of conferees is a departure so far from the power of a board of conferees that in my opinion it would be, if I may be permitted the use of the word, a usurpation on their part.

I hope the Senate conferees, the same conferees, if this bill shall be recommitted to them, will understand that the Senate feels as the House has upon former occasions, that to undertake to crowd independent and important legislation through either branch under the force and power of the necessity of the Government for appropriations to carry it on is to avail itself on the part of either branch of a power unknown in the history of this Government in its economy and in the very branch upon which it is founded.

In my opinion the remaining hours of this session can not be better spent than in emancipating this branch or the other, if need be, from the unwise and dangerous power which has crept in upon the legislation of Congress, that has forced through Congress many a time that kind of legislation which outside of an appropriation bill would never find a ratification by independent deliberation and action in one or the other branch of Congress.

Sir, if we shall come out at the end of this session entirely emancipated from that new and dangerous power which is creeping in upon us, we shall accomplish enough to entitle us to the approval of this nation, in whatsoever else we may come short of our duty. I hope no board of conferees appointed by this body will surrender its convictions upon the wisdom of this independent legislation to any consideration of the necessity of providing appropriations for the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the situation is as it is in reference to the conferees, both on the part of the House and the Senate. I have very decided opinions in regard to what ought to be done on one or two of the questions that are in controversy.

I have noticed here in the Senate on the different bills that have been proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, where general legislation has been placed upon appropriation bills by the House of Representatives, when the bills came before the Senate, the Senate committee having added amendments, or in other words, having put on legislation also, on a point of order the legislation put on by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate after mature deliberation has been stricken from the bills, and the legislation put on by the House has been left in, whether proper or not. The rule that has at least been supported by argument in the Senate is that no legislation of a general character ought to find its way into an appropriation bill in either House of Congress.

As to the legislation on the sundry civil bill I desire to say a few words. So far as I am individually concerned I would much rather the bill should fail than to have one portion at least of the legislation adopted which has been put upon it by the House of Representatives. Without going into detail as to the different propositions in the bill put on by the House of the character of general legislation, I will call attention to two.

In this bill the House of Representatives saw proper to repeal what are known as the pre-emption acts. There are quite a number of them. It is impossible, examining that question as we did, to make legislation of a proper character in reference to that particular point without an examination, and a considerable examination, too. Whether it be proper as a general bill before Congress to repeal the acts giving pre-emptions to the people of this country is not the question I now propose to discuss, but the manner in which it is done. It is well known that in the examination of this question the various statutes in reference to it were not examined here in the Senate. The question was not examined in the Senate. The House legislation was stricken out by a vote of the Senate; in other words, the Senate concurred with the Appropriations Committee in striking out the proposition, for the reason that it had not had examination in the Senate or by any committee of the Senate. This is a very important question. It is very important for the Senate of the United States to understand whether they desire to repeal the laws that allow the people of this country pre-emption on the Government lands. It is a very important question to a great many poor people all over this country as to whether the law under which they themselves have been acting for years shall be stricken down on an appropriation bill without any opportunity of an examination by one branch of Congress.

Whether the House of Representatives have fairly examined this question is not for me to say, nor do I say it; but the importance of the subject is such that the provision ought not to be placed on an appropriation bill without at least an opportunity of examination. It is well known that these bills came to the Senate but recently, this bill within the last few days, and there has not been, on account of the multiplicity of appropriation bills, an opportunity for the committee to examine all the various questions that have been placed on the bills.

There is another question on this bill to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate, for I feel very deeply in reference to it, and that is the portion of the bill coming from the House which provides that the poor, lame, halt, blind, and decrepit soldiers in the soldiers' homes shall have their pensions taken away from them for the support of the soldiers' homes for which we provide every year. This proposition was tried in one of the courts of this city. An attempt was made by the Soldiers' Home at Washington city to deprive these soldiers of their pensions and use them for the benefit of the home; but by a pensioner applying to the Court of Claims the court decided that the law gave the man his pension and there was no power to take it away from him except by his own consent. In this bill it is provided in regard to the soldiers in the soldiers' homes of the country, numbering thousands, that all above $5 of their pensions shall be taken possession of by the officers of the soldiers' homes and used for purposes other than the purpose for which the pension is given to the soldier. I say to the Senate I would stand here, if my physical power would allow me to do it, until the final adjournment of the Senate before I would see such an outrage and robbery perpetrated on the poor soldiers who are in these homes; and I give notice now that this bill will have a struggle such as no bill has had in the Senate Chamber before a conference report embracing that provision shall ever pass this body.

The very idea of a pension is to give it to a man for his benefit. The idea of a soldiers' home is that it shall give a home to those who have no home for themselves, to the one-legged, the one-armed, the lame, the blind, and the needy soldiers of this country, where they have had an honorable discharge, and where they are in such a condition that they can not support or maintain themselves, that they shall have the opportunity of having bread and bed at the Government homes made for the soldiers of this country when they become old and decrepit. But this bill goes upon the theory that if the poor pittance of a pension of $8 a month shall be given to a soldier, and you allow him entrance into a soldiers' home, a portion of that pittance shall be taken away from him. Why? Whenever this Government, with its hundreds of millions of dollars in the Treasury, feels that a man who has been placed in a home by the laws enacted by the representatives of the American people becomes so niggardly, so stingy, so mean that it will rob the soldier of his pension because he is in a home, I say that Government is not worthy of the respect of a poor old pensioned soldier.

This is one of the provisions that the Senate of the United States is asked to agree to without consideration merely because it is a provision of general legislation placed upon an appropriation bill, and, forsooth, unless we agree to this robbery, this outrage, this wrong on the part of the Government of the United States, we are to have no appropriation bill. If that is the case, let us have no bill. If the representatives elected by the people of this country can not maintain themselves before their constituents unless they shall become so economical as to take the poor pittance that is given to the poor and starving soldier and rob him of it for the purpose of moving the machinery of the Government as applicable to soldiers' homes, I say it is time for us to stop and halt in that direction. Whenever my constituents say to me they have no further use for my services because I will not agree to a robbery of the poor and the unfortunate in this country, I say it is time for them to call me home, and I will go.

There are other features of general legislation in this bill almost equally obnoxious to which we are asked to agree or else the bill must fail. In some of the appropriation bills that have been presented to the Senate propositions have been made to put legislation on them that was honest and fair and just legislation, but the Senate failed to agree to such provisions because they were general legislation on an appropriation bill. Twice within the last few days, in reference to a proposition that no man supposed other than that it was fair and right for it to be adjudicated, for it to be examined, it was determined by the Senate it should not find a resting-place in an appropriation bill, because it was general legislation. If legislation is to be placed on such bills let the Senate of the United States determine that the Senate shall have consideration of matters of legislation on appropriation bills as well as the House of Representatives.

Mr. MAXEY. Do I understand the Senator from Illinois to say that an attempt has been made to repeal the entire homestead laws upon an appropriation bill?

Mr. LOGAN. I say that the pre-emption laws are proposed to be repealed in this bill by the House of Representatives and will be repealed if we consent to it.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator if he has ever heard in any portion of the United States in any recent canvass of any movement made publicly or otherwise by the people asking for a repeal of the homestead or pre-emption laws?

Mr. LOGAN. I never have; and I repeat that whether it is the right thing to do or the wrong thing it certainly is the wrong thing to do on this bill.

Mr. MAXEY. It does not come from the people.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir. To return to the other proposition that I was discussing, I wish the Senate to understand it. We have had the question in reference to soldiers' homes before us in the Military Committee. I do not know whether the Senator from Texas understood what I said, that after providing thousands and thousands of dollars for the support of the soldiers' homes all over this country they wind up by taking the poor soldier's pension and depriving him of it if he finds a resting place in a soldiers' home.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will pardon me I will say that I perfectly understood it. I know that we investigated that matter critically and carefully in the Military Committee; and I say here in the presence of the Senate that no appropriation bill can take hold of that great question and present such legislation as either House of Congress ought to adopt.

Mr. LOGAN. It took an investigation of weeks, and I might say of months to determine the question in reference to one of these homes in order to provide a law that was ample for the correction of the evils; and in that very law we deny the right to take the pensions away from the soldiers for any purpose whatever.

Mr. President, I say, and I mean what I say, that so far as I am concerned as one Senator I would see half a dozen extra sessions before I would allow this wrong to be perpetrated that is attempted to be done in this bill, at least according to my judgment of right and wrong in the premises.

Mr. DAWES. I want to show to the Senate one single proposition which it is proposed by the House of Representatives that the Government shall stop unless the Senate will ratify. Here is a solemn treaty we entered into with the Sioux Nation, by which we covenant with them that—

> No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described, which may be held in common, shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same.

Here is an agreement entered into by the chiefs and headmen alone, without regard to other members of the tribe, and an alternative is presented to us by the House of Representatives that the Government shall stop unless the Senate will agree with them in violating a solemn treaty entered into by us with the Sioux Indians. That is one of many propositions that they propose to us the alternative here to-night in the last hours of the session, that unless we will do this great wrong and violate this treaty obligation, whatever of necessity for the Government there is in this bill shall be lost. Sir, I would rather see the Government stop all its functions than to be forced by any such operation as this into a violation of a solemn treaty entered into by the Government with these Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am very glad indeed to see that the Committee on Appropriations appreciate the importance of the question now submitted to them. I have no doubt they have been deeply embarrassed for several years by the weight of labor that is thrown suddenly upon them near the close of each session of Congress. The practice of overloading appropriation bills has arisen within the last twenty-five years. Prior to that time it rarely occurred, because in the early history of the country there was but one, then there were two or three, then four or five appropriation bills, and they were rarely loaded down with any extraneous legislative matter. But in recent years, since the close of the war especially, nearly every appropriation bill has contained a great many legislative provisions.

I remember very well when this contest was first presented in the Thirty-fourth Congress. I was then a member of the other House. The House of Representatives undertook to put a limitation upon the executive power in an appropriation bill. The Senate at once took a decided ground against it and a fierce conflict arose between the two Houses, lasting for more than a month. It ended first in the adjournment of Congress, and then in Congress again being convened in extra session, when the House of Representatives was compelled to abandon that legislative provision. Four years afterward, in 1860, the Senate of the United States undertook to add a great multitude of items not embraced in an appropriation bill sent from the House, cumbering it with legislative provisions, and then for the first time, I believe, in the history of the Government, this question was formally brought before the two Houses, the Senate insisting upon their power to amend appropriation bills to any extent they might desire, and insisting that they could add conditions and qualifications to all appropriations wherever made. The conferees on the part of the House resisted that, and insisted that while they were willing to grant the appropriations in many cases that were asked for, they would not grant them on the conditions imposed.

During that session an agreement was reached between the conferees of the two Houses, and that rule prevailed for some years. The conference on the part of the Senate, I remember, was composed of Mr. Seward, Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, and Mr. Toombs, of Georgia. The conferees on the part of the House were the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and myself, and I forget who was the other conferee. After a consideration of the very question that is now presented to the Senate the conferees of both Houses agreed, and both Houses agreed, that whenever either House made a proposition which was objected to by the other the House making the proposition must recede from it. Acting upon that rule in that case the Senate receded promptly from every objectionable amendment it had put upon the appropriation bill.

Sir, that is the rule of Parliament. The whole theory of two Houses of Congress or of Parliament depends upon the cheerful assent of both Houses to every proposition contained in the bill. It is true that in an appropriation bill there must be a great multitude of appropriations and they must go together; but whenever either House dissents from anything it is right and proper to strike out that objectionable feature. Especially where either House proposes legislation to an appropriation bill, the rule is universal and uniform that the House proposing the provision shall recede from all that is objected to by the other House. That is the only theory upon which any wise legislation by two Houses of Congress or the two Houses of Parliament can be carried on.

There is in Parliament a still more guarded rule. The House of Commons will not allow the House of Lords even to amend an appropriation bill. It is now the law of Parliament that the House of Peers can not strike out any clause of an appropriation bill. The power exercised by the House of Commons had been greatly abused, and therefore it was that the framers of our Constitution gave to the Senate ample power to propose amendments to all kinds of bills. The Senate may propose legislative amendments to an appropriation bill if they choose, but when those legislative amendments are seriously objected to by the other House they ought to be abandoned. There is no other safe rule.

The proposition may properly be made to the Senate or House in the closing hours of a session that it is important to pass a certain legislative provision; and if the proposition is submitted to the other House and their conferees agree to it, and there is no dissent between the two Houses, then there is no great objection to putting on such a provision. It is often a matter of great convenience near the end of a session. But where either House doubts even as to the propriety of any legislative amendment it ought to be at once dropped. Upon no other basis, upon no other principle can the two Houses ever maintain any independent relations to each other.

I never have known and never have read of a case like that which is presented in this bill. Here is a bill called the sundry civil appropriation bill. It embraces a great multitude of objects of appropriation. The bill embraces a greater variety of topics than any other appropriation bill. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is one thing, the naval appropriation bill is another; the Army appropriation bill is another; but here is the sundry civil appropriation bill, embracing a great mass of miscellaneous matter. To this bill there ought to be no legislative provision whatever, or if such a provision is offered by one House it ought to be only such a one as would be consented to cheerfully by the other House.

The idea that we can be compelled, in the expiring hours of this Congress, to undertake to regulate how pensions shall be paid to soldiers, whether when they resort to military asylums they shall be deprived of their pensions, or whether on the other hand that principle which has been for years part of the law of this country, giving to the settler a pre-emption, a prior right to the land which he settles upon and cultivates, where he breaks the soil or cuts down the trees—that we should undertake to repeal this mass of laws, which have been growing in public favor from the time they were started, at this hour of the session, without debate and without consideration by the proper committees, is a monster of absurdity; it is wrong.

Sir, I would see this bill defeated over twenty times; I would come back again in extra session and spend all summer and all next winter rather than see this system of legislation grow any greater than it is. As I said, twenty-five years ago, when a single provision was added by the House that was objected to by the Senate, it excited an angry debate for six weeks and compelled an extra session of Congress. The Senate refused even then to agree to what I considered at the time a righteous provision, and the House receded. Two years later, when the Senate undertook in the same way to force obnoxious provisions on the House, the House indignantly resented it and would have laid the bill on the table if the Senate had not promptly receded.

I agree with the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Iowa that we ought to put a stop to this plan; that the time has come when we must take our ground. If we put anything on an appropriation bill that the other House object to, or even doubt about, we ought at once to abandon it. When we propose an amendment to such a bill, and the House conferees meet the conferees on the part of the Senate with a firm denial, and say that the House is opposed to the proposition, or that the House has not had time to consider it, or that it involves new principles of legislation, the Senate ought at once to abandon their proposition, however dear it may be or however strong it may be in the judgment of the Senate. When the House propose to put legislation on an appropriation bill, and say, "We will not make the ordinary provisions for the support of the Government in carrying on the operations of the Government unless the Senate will agree to that which the Senate does not desire to agree to," then, as a matter of course, all we have to do is to say, "Very well; we will not agree," and there is the end of it.

I do not believe that the House of Representatives will ever put themselves in that position. They may desire to accomplish some objects of legislation and they may press it upon the Senate conferees, but I believe in the good sense and sober judgment of the members of the House of Representatives. I believe that they will feel that their rights would be more jeopardized by the adoption of this rule than others would be. The Senate is more likely to put on these obnoxious provisions. Therefore the House ought to be willing to adopt the rule of 1869, which was where any proposition is made by either House, either legislative or a casual appropriation, and is objected to by the other, it should be at once abandoned so that the bill should be the joint judgment of both Houses upon every item, whether of appropriation or legislation.

I should be willing to say, not as a matter of instruction but as a matter of principle to be applied not only to this bill but to all others, that wherever a legislative provision is objectionable to either House it should be at once abandoned by the House proposing it, and wherever a new item of appropriation is proposed not provided for by existing law it ought at once to be abandoned whenever objected to by either House, so that the appropriation bills shall be exactly what they were intended to be—a mere medium of carrying into execution existing law. That is the true principle, and if that principle is adopted there will be no difficulty in making an appropriation bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 139) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for printing 10,000 additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1882.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 3,000 copies each of the bulletins of the Bureau of Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution, Nos. 1 to 12, inclusive, with the necessary illustrations for the use of the Bureau of Ethnology.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 110) to refund to the State of Georgia certain money expended by said State for the common defense in 1777; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARLAND. Has the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] made any motion for instruction or for any action of the Senate on this matter?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in response to the Senator from Arkansas that I have not asked for instructions, but desired the views of Senators with reference to what should be the conduct of any future conference upon these questions.

Mr. GARLAND. To present the question to the Senate, I move that the Senate further insist on and adhere to its action, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. BAYARD. And appoint the same conferees.

Mr. GARLAND. Yes; that can be incorporated.

Mr. PENDLETON. That would be done, of course.

Mr. INGALLS. A motion to adhere is not usual until after there have been at least two conferences.

Mr. GARLAND. I find, if the Senator from Kansas pleases, that there is a difference of opinion in the authorities upon that point. But he wants to get at just what I do. I am willing, if that is the sense of the Senate, to put the motion in this shape: That the Senate further insist upon its action and ask for a further conference, and that the same conferees shall be appointed.

Now, I will say but a very few words, Mr. President. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has made this matter so perfectly plain that it occurs to me it is unnecessary to add anything to what he has said; and we can see at once the difficulty we shall be in if any other rule is adopted than that he names. The House of Representatives have an express rule against putting general legislation on an appropriation bill. The Senate has Rule 29, that prohibits it from putting any amendments of general legislation upon an appropriation bill. It is "amendments" under our twenty-ninth rule, because the Senate can only amend an appropriation bill and can not originate it; it is a general rule in the House because the House originates appropriation bills. There is no power on the part of one House to compel the other House to obey its rules; but when the conferees are brought together and they say, "Here is legislation upon an appropriation bill," the first question that presents itself is where did the legislation come from; who proposed it? If it turns out that the Senate proposed it, it is the duty of the Senate to recede from that; if it turns out that the House proposed it first, it is the duty of the House to recede, according to the precedent established in 1859, as cited by the Senator from Ohio; otherwise this matter would be perpetual; we should not even through the solution of an extra session of Congress meet that difficulty, because the same thing could be repeated. If the House had originated the proposition and was disposed to be defiant and not yield to the rule, as laid down in the two manuals, all the Senate can possibly do is to insist upon its action, and move for a further conference, and let the same three Senators be the conferees on their part, with the understanding that they shall insist upon what was done, in the hope that the better judgment of the House may come to it, and in all instances upon this bill as they have proposed the general legislation they will recede from it. I make the motion I indicated.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I desire merely to express the hope that the vote of the Senate may be unanimous upon this subject. There is no time more opportune than the present to declare by the voice of this body that appropriation bills, bills to provide money to execute existing laws, shall not be the vehicles for general legislation. If we can express this now, and express it unanimously, it will be most beneficial.

As the Senator from Arkansas has well said to-day upon the touch and the test of a question of order all general legislation melts away from an appropriation bill, and the reason for it is obvious. It is not a question as to the merit of the proposition between us and the House; it is as to the manner. That is the point.

Appropriation bills are essential, and they must be passed in the regular time for the support of the Government; but the two Houses may differ, and wisely differ, and their differences ought to be expressed and continued so often as they exist until good sense and mutual accommodation shall bring them together; but there are some things about which the two Houses can not differ. There are some things that may not be drawn in question; and among them is the continuance of the Government under which we live. Upon that subject, an essential, we are not at liberty to differ. Therefore it is that all questions touching general legislation must depart from bills to execute existing laws which are taken as the common consent of both Houses.

I am glad to see on this occasion a disposition to unanimity in the Senate on each side of the Chamber to the wholesome doctrine that appropriation bills shall be confined to the providing of money to execute existing laws. If we desire to change general laws let us take the proper occasion, present them, amend them, debate them, and differ upon them if you will, and the country can survive although the two Houses may differ; but in regard to the moneys necessary to carry on and pay the expenses of this Government there could be and there ought to be no differences as to the necessity of finding that sum. There is the principle that lies in this matter.

There must be no coercion by one House upon another. We can not let the life of the country, the existence of the nation, depend upon the differences of opinion between the two Houses. There are essentials and non-essentials. We may differ about the last, we can not differ about the first.

Let us therefore, not in a spirit of contention but in a spirit of the broadest arrangement and comity, inform the co-ordinate branch of this Legislature that when we come to provide moneys essential to continue this Government, our voice is as one; but when it comes to changing existing laws we claim the right to differ and to debate the proposition and to place the continuance of good government far beyond the reach of our temporary differences.

That I hold is essential, and upon that I concur with my friend from Illinois and every gentleman who has spoken on that side of the Chamber as well as on this, that we should present a unanimous voice to the co-ordinate branch of the Legislature, not as I say in the spirit of disputation and difference, but upon a broad principle that all reasoning and thinking men will agree is essential for sound and proper and wholesome legislation.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, when I came to the Senate about eight years ago an appropriation bill came from the House to the Senate covered over with important legislation. There was considerable criticism about that. The House was then Democratic. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], then a Senator as now, made about the same argument that he has made to-night. I believed then that he was right. I have always felt that the system of putting legislation on an appropriation bill was vicious.

At the present session we had the Army appropriation bill. About that I was prepared to express a pretty decided opinion. I do not think it was discussed for twenty minutes here before the Senate became satisfied that the legislation that came up on that bill was unwise. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], who is a fine soldier as we know, did attempt to ameliorate some bad legislation on it by putting in a modification; but he himself admitted that it was better that it should all go out, and fortunately I think it all did go out. So I say in regard to this measure.

Take the matter of pre-emptions, the laws concerning which have been on the statute-book more than forty years. My judgment is that the Committee on Public Lands ought to take that matter up and most thoroughly investigate it before any action should be taken. Take the provision in regard to the soldiers' homes. The Military Committee, I know, have expended much time and much thought upon that matter. It is a complicated and intricate question and can not be settled in the expiring hours of the session upon an appropriation bill.

So on general principles the House which starts legislation in an appropriation bill not belonging there, not pertaining to it, should give way. Why? Because to put it on is in its very nature coercion. It is saying to the other House, "If you do not pass the legislation which we send to you, not appropriate, not germane to the bill, the wheels of the Government must stop." It is not fair.

I believe, as was stated so well by the Senator from Ohio, whenever this House or the other starts original legislation on an appropriation bill, when the other House objects to it, the House starting it should graciously yield the question and let us have an appropriation bill pure and simple, precisely as the committee did in regard to the Army appropriation bill; precisely as the committee did in regard to the naval appropriation bill, so well managed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. We should come to a determination to let the appropriation bills be pure and simple, and let legislation come to us through the appropriate committee. Nobody doubts that each House has the right to form its own rules and regulations; but see the difficulty we at once get into here. A bill comes to us from the House originally with legislation upon it. The Senate committee attempts to better that. Rule 29 comes in and says we can not allow on an appropriation bill that character of legislation, and coming from the Senate committee, if the point of order is made it has to go out, and all we have to do is to strike out the legislation which the House has put in it, and then it goes to a conference.

I have taken the same position when the House was Democratic, when the House was Republican, when the Senate was Democratic, and when the Senate was Republican; and notwithstanding that the House will again soon be Democratic, I assert here to-night that in my deliberate judgment, after eight years' experience, there is nothing more dangerous than to allow legislation on appropriation bills. I can give an instance right in point. My attention was called to it in the Military Committee by the Senator from Illinois four or five years ago. He came into the committee-room one morning very indignant, and asked if we knew anything about the increase in the retired-list. There was not a man on that committee who knew it. Why? Because the measure had never been referred to us; and yet there was an increase of from three hundred to four hundred on the retired-list on that bill in one single line, thus increasing the annual expenses of the country at least $150,000. That escaped the attention of the Appropriations Committee. It was unintentional on their part. It is impossible in looking over all these things for every line to be minutely inspected and passed upon, as it would be if each particular matter of legislation should go to the appropriate committee in a separate bill. That is the right way to do it, and then hold every committee responsible, the Judiciary Committee for what comes from that committee; the Military Committee for what comes from that, the Naval Committee for what comes from that, and so on all the way through. Hold each committee responsible, and whatever legislation may be enacted let it come from the appropriate committee. Then the Senate can act advisedly, because they will have the advice and recommendation of the appropriate committee and will have much more assurance that the legislation has been carefully examined. Take the Appropriations Committee, I care not how wise they may be, they can not take all the legislation that has to pass through the Senate and give to the Senate that character of information which would enable us to adopt enlightened legislation. I think we had better just set a rule and let an appropriation bill be an appropriation bill, and every other bill be what it purports to be upon its face, coming from the appropriate committee.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. I do not want to stop this debate. Indeed the conferees on the part of the Senate sought the debate. I am entirely content that it may go on, because it is strengthening our hands and we are obtaining the expression of the Senate on both sides. But I rose to ask that our report might be acted upon. I believe the Senate agrees with us. The bill has one hundred and three pages. We have a good deal to do with it yet; it has to be enrolled, and this Congress expires by limitation in a very few hours. I rose to ask that the vote might be had, but I do not desire to cut off debate.

Mr. PLUMB. I will not detain the Senate long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, in the chair). Will the Senator from Kansas allow the vote to be taken?

Mr. PLUMB. Before the report is adopted I want to say what I have to say in this connection. I venture, in opposition to the views which have been stated, to express the hope that the committee will consider and the Senate in its turn will consider not the question as to whether there is legislation on the appropriation bill but as to the character of the legislation.

It is only four years, I think, since the Democratic side of this Chamber unanimously voted that the House of Representatives had a right to impose whatever terms it would upon an appropriation of money, and carried that doctine so far as to compel the adjournment of Congress without the appropriation of the necessary money to carry on the Government, and compelled also the President of the United States to assemble Congress in extra session in order to supply that lack. I am glad to see that they now deprecate what they then favored.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator will pardon me, he need not congratulate his Democratic brethren. There was no one more opposed to it than the Senator who now addresses the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I am afraid this independence will be somewhat short-lived. I am fearful now when they can make a point by it they will resume their old position.

Mr. BAYARD. Before the honorable Senator became a member of this body I protested against this practice on the part of his associates in both Houses.

Mr. PLUMB. I appeal from the protest of the Senator to the vote which he cast four years ago on the question. He voted with his Democratic associates unanimously in favor of legislation which the House put upon an appropriation bill, and for the assertion of the doctrine upon the part of the House that they had a right to impose whatever terms they would upon the appropriation of money.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator is absolutely and totally mistaken, and has not the faintest ground for the assertion he now makes.

Mr. PLUMB. I appeal to the record on that point.

Mr. BAYARD. He need not appeal to the record; he may appeal to me.

Mr. PLUMB. It was a unanimous Democratic vote. If the Senator from Delaware was an exception, still what I say lies at the door of his party, if it does not lie at his door.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not talk of party now. I merely wish to say that the Senator's citation is unfortunately incorrect so far as I am concerned in every particular.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, we are very near the close of a session of Congress which we can not extend if we would. I say that now, at this moment, it would be the part of wisdom, the part of patriotism, to put not only legislation upon this appropriation bill but legislation of a kind entirely apart from anything which it contains with reference to the appropriation of money or the objects for which money should be appropriated. I believe that if it were possible to-day to put upon the bill the measure which passed the Senate providing for the electoral count it would be statesmanship to do so. The failure to pass that bill will be of infinitely more concern to the Senate, to Congress, and to the country, than the enforcement of Rule 29. I shall hope that when this Congress adjourns, so far at least as this bill is concerned, it will have something else to put upon its banner when it goes before the country than that we have enforced an arbitrary rule of this body to the obstruction of necessary legislation.

All rules of this kind of course are subject to exception. We ought to consider the necessity for the legislation which is sought to be put upon the bill, its wisdom in terms. Of course if it did not come from the appropriate committee, if it has not been properly considered, if by reason of that there is doubt as to its scope, as to its accomplishment, if it should be passed, that is proper to be said, and in saying that to stand upon it as a valid objection, and call that to the attention of the other House. But simply to say irrespective of the merits of the legislation, confessing that the legislation itself is good, "we will stand upon the naked fact that our rule prohibits us to put it upon the bill," is, I think, putting us in a very weak, indefensible attitude.

I say this legislation ought to be considered with reference to its merits. I say that we ought not to stand arbitrarily upon the rule and say to a co-ordinate branch of the Legislature which has done its duty according as it understands it to be and in accordance with its own rules, that we will enforce our rule in such a way as not only to prevent them from accomplishing what they desire but that too without discussion as to the merits of that which they propose to us. Their dignity is equal to ours; their responsibility is equal to ours. It is not fair treatment to a co-ordinate branch of this Government to say simply that we refuse concurrence in the proposition that they send to us, because we have got a rule which limits what we ourselves may do, and we will not permit them to do that which they deem to be proper, and estop ourselves from considering it upon its merits.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word with reference to this legislation which I omitted to say when first up. The bill which I hold in my hand contains ninety-one printed pages. It embraces every variety of appropriation for every Department of this Government. Its detail requires minute and careful examination. It was read for the first time at our Secretary's desk last Saturday—one week ago this day. It was then ordered to be printed. It came to the Committee on Appropriations for the first time on Monday morning of this week. It embraces within its provisions five different topics of legislation, which, under the ordinary rules of procedure of this body, would be considered by five different committees of this body—the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and so on. Not one of those committees has given the Committee on Appropriations a single indication, during either the last session or this, that a single measure proposed in the bill by the House is necessary legislation. No petition, no memorial, no resolution of this body, no remarks of any Senator on this floor indicated that any one single item on this bill with reference to the legislation upon it should be considered by the Senate at this session. We were confronted when we came to examine this question with all the complicated legislation with reference to our homestead laws, with reference to the timber-culture acts, with reference to our pre-emption laws which have stood upon our statute-book uncontested for forty years.

Mr. BECK. There are $3,000,000 of scrip outstanding.

Mr. ALLISON. And, as the Senator from Kentucky well advises me, by a series of acts passed during the last ten years, the Government of the United States, under existing law, has issued $3,000,000 of its own scrip for public surveys, and upon the face of that scrip has declared that it shall be receivable in payment of pre-emptions. Yet the bill by this singular provision strikes down the value of that scrip without making any provision with reference to it.

So the Committee on Appropriations did not feel in the hurry of the last week of the session that it could take up these great questions and consider them with reference to the legislation which is proposed by the House of Representatives. I make no doubt, and I do not question the fact, that they have matured this legislation; that in the judgment of the House of Representatives it is wise and just legislation; but our Constitution provides that before these questions shall be incorporated into our statute laws they shall pass through the ordeal and judgment of the co-ordinate branch with the House of Representatives, the Senate of the United States.

Therefore, the Committee on Appropriations did not feel itself able to recommend to the Senate whether this legislation was wise or unwise, and now, with the last hours of Congress expiring, in a conference committee we are asked to report to the Senate as conferees amendments to these measures of legislation with reference to all these great questions.

For that reason the committee on the part of the Senate have presented these grave questions to the consideration of its associates for the purpose of ascertaining their judgment, and I am glad to know that they are in such unanimity of sentiment with reference to the difficulties which surround us.

I hope that the House will be notified that we are willing to make another effort to come to an agreement.

Mr. CONGER. There seems to be a desire to have the opinions of Senators upon some of these propositions and not to prolong the debate farther. I wish to say, so far as the repeal of the pre-emption laws is concerned, that a petition by telegraph at the last meeting in the Western States, sent to me within the last two or three days, represents some 35,000 people gathered together to remonstrate against that repeal.

Sir, I have lived all my life of manhood in the midst of a people more than one-half of whom own their farms, who have bought them and lived upon them under the pre-emption law of 1841 and the amendments since that time. It has become a part and parcel of the patrimony of the people that they may go under those laws and find homes. This changes the whole system of forty-two years' experience in that country. This compels the pre-emptor under the pretended homestead clause to wait two and a half years before he can perfect title.

I will not say it, but from what I do know about it I believe that the origin of this attempt to repeal the pre-emption laws of the country exists in the desire of speculators in land, pine lands, river lands, in the fair lands, to prevent pre-emptors from getting homes upon them, and enabling the speculator to lay his hand in the future upon the vast pine lands of the North and upon all the valuable places along the rivers in the arid countries of the West.

That is what I believe, and I say as my opinion here, and I believe I shall be joined by many Senators, that if by some misfortune, if by some error of judgment or lack of resolution, if by some loss of backbone or some weakness of knee-pan, the committee of the Senate should yield in this matter and report a conference agreement to repeal the pre-emption laws, to compel the soldier to release his pension to comply with several of the provisions of this bill, there are many in the Senate who rather than see such a law passed would exercise the gifts of speech they may have until the constitutional limit of this Congress cut off the possibility of the passage of such a law as that.

Even if the committee of conference should agree, I do not fear the passage of a conference report striking down the pre-emption laws. There is power in individuals and there is power in the Senate to prevent its passage in the next sixteen hours, and, thank God, time can come and prevent such an enormity as the repeal of these laws and the change of the pension law to the soldier who is invited to the home of the soldier in this nation.

Those are my sentiments about this matter; and whether it be to stand by the committee of conference in insisting upon the amendments of the Senate striking out these clauses, or whether it be to occupy the time that they may yield to prevent the passage of the bill, they have my views upon the necessity of it in either case, and I am but one of several others who have expressed the same opinion.

Mr. FRYE. There will be no trouble in finding Senators to occupy the time.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Maine says there will be no trouble, whatever this committee may do, to occupy in a patriotic manner the few hours remaining after that committee shall report, to prevent the passage of such provisions into law.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not rise to prolong the debate. It would not be in order, I suppose, to instruct the conferees of the Senate, because in that event their conference would be no longer full and free. I hope, however, the conferees on the part of the Senate will understand that it is the unanimous opinion of the Senate that they should adhere to the amendments of the Senate with regard to the sale of military reservations, pensions to occupants of soldiers' homes, the items with regard to naval expenditures, the proposed repeal of the pre-emption laws, and the ratification of the Sioux agreement. I give notice that if they return and report another disagreement, I shall present an ultimatum in the shape of a motion that the Senate adhere.

Mr. GARLAND. My motion is that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a further conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate insist on its amendments to the sundry civil bill and ask for a further conference. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it. The Chair will appoint the same conferees.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Chair will announce that it was the unanimous voice of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was no dissenting voice whatever. The Chair appoints Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

BULLETINS OF THE BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 3,000 copies each of the bulletins of the Bureau of Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution Nos. 1 to 12, inclusive, with the necessary illustrations, for the use of the Bureau of Ethnology.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION FOR 1881.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a resolution of the Senate returned from the House in regard to the publication of the report of the Commissioner of Education. I ask that it be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881, which were:

In line 4 of the resolution to strike out "four" and insert "six."

In line 5 to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve."

In line 6 to strike out "twenty" and insert "five."

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. GORMAN, and Mr. BLAIR were appointed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the Senate has imposed upon the Committee on Education and Labor the duty of conducting some very important investigations during the vacation, and the further duty of taking testimony in regard to subjects connected with American labor. It will not be in my power as a member of the committee to attend to those duties during the vacation, and I ask to be excused from further service on the committee during that period, and that another Senator who will have the time to devote to the discharge of those duties be substituted in my place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] asks to be excused from service upon the Committee on Education and Labor. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted. The Chair appoints the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] in place of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to ask consent of the Senate to take up the bill for the organization of a provisional government in the Territory of Alaska. As it is known to Senators, we have absolutely no civil government in that vast Territory now. There is already a considerable population, and one that will be greatly increased during the coming season. If there is no objection, I should like to call up the bill reported by the Committee on Territories and offer in its place a substitute which provides not for a full Territorial organization, but for the necessary executive and judicial officers, in order that there may be some security to life and to property in that Territory.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection to the very important measure which the Senator from Indiana has called up; but after that I give notice that I shall insist on the regular order, which is proceeding with the Calendar of House bills under the rule of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. HARRISON. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that I am sacrificing myself a very decided preference for the Calendar because of the importance of this bill which I now present.

Mr. HOAR. I thought if I gave the notice now I should not seem ungracious to the next Senator who asked for a similar favor. I entirely accord with the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FRYE. The shipping bill is of more importance to this country than the bill providing for a Territorial government in Alaska.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is House bills reported favorably. The first is Order of Business 1134, being House bill 7240.

DISTRICT REAL-ESTATE ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. INGALLS. House bill 6930 was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. It is Order of Business 1130. It was reported adversely from the fact that it was incorporated in the bill of the House 6929, Order of Business 1129, which proposes to revise the entire tax system of the District. This bill, which was reported by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], merely proposes to levy an assessment on the real estate in the District for the year 1883 and every third year thereafter, and there is no objection to its consideration. It is very important that it should be passed. I ask that it may be taken up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will allow the bill that has been taken up to be passed.

Mr. INGALLS. There has been no bill taken up and this is the next in order, and under the Senator's own resolution I ask that we proceed with this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. A bill has been announced as being up.

Mr. INGALLS. Announced out of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from Kansas has the right to call up a bill which was passed by informally.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6930) to levy an assessment of the real estate in the District of Columbia in the year 1883, and every third year thereafter, for purposes of taxation.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer an amendment to come in between section 14 and section 15:

That in the payment of delinquent taxes assessed under the provisions of this act, drawbacks heretofore issued in pursuance of law shall be receivable in payment thereof.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust that amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. ALDRICH. It should not be adopted.

Mr. GORMAN. This bill is for the assessment of property in the District of Columbia, and has nothing whatever to do with the collection of taxes. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] opens up a very wide question about drawback certificates heretofore issued, about which there is great controversy. The effect of the amendment will necessarily be, in my judgment, to destroy the bill and also to do a very great injustice to the tax-payers of this District.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. DONOHOE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7240) for the relief of William H. Donohoe. It provides for the payment to William H. Donohoe, late a private in detachment of the Signal Corps, of $300, for the balance of veteran bounty due him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUPLICATE SAN FRANCISCO MINT CHECKS.

The bill (H. R. 3220) to ratify the issuance of duplicate checks in certain cases by the superintendent of the mint of the United States at San Francisco, was read.

The preamble recites that Henry L. Dodge, as superintendent of the United States mint at San Francisco, did, on January 13, 1881, draw three checks upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, all dated on that day, and all payable to Robert B. Hill, or order, one for $20,000, one for $19,500, and one for $2,500, which were delivered to Hill in purchase of silver bullion for the United States; that it was thereafter made to satisfactorily appear to Dodge that these checks had been, in due course of business, sold, assigned, and delivered to Wells, Fargo & Co., a banking and express corporation, having an office at San Francisco, and that after such sale and delivery, and while in the custody of the corporation, the checks had been destroyed by fire; and that thereafter, on the 25th of February, 1881, upon the application of the corporation, Dodge, as superintendent, did issue and deliver duplicate or second originals of all three of said checks. The bill therefore ratifies and confirms all acts of Dodge, as such superintendent, in issuing these duplicate checks, but the corporation is, within three months, to execute and deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury a bond, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, conditioned to indemnify the United States against any loss or damage that may arise by the issuance of these three duplicate checks.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT CONTRACTS.

The bill (H. R. 5300) to amend chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, relating to contracts under the War Department, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations to be observed in the preparation, submission, and opening of bids for contracts under the War Department," by striking therefrom everything following the words "War Department" and substituting for the part of the act so stricken out the following words:

And he may require every bid to be accompanied by a written guarantee, signed by one or more responsible persons, to the effect that he or they undertake that the bidder, if his bid is accepted, will, at such time as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War or the officer authorized to make a contract in the premises, give bond, with good and sufficient sureties, to furnish the supplies proposed or to perform the service required. If after the acceptance of a bid and a notification thereof to the bidder he fails within the time prescribed by the Secretary of War or other duly authorized officer to enter into a contract and furnish a bond with good and sufficient security for the proper fulfillment of its terms, the Secretary or other authorized officer shall proceed to contract with some other person to furnish the supplies or perform the service required, and shall forthwith cause the difference between the amount specified by the bidder in default in the proposal and the amount for which he may have contracted with another party to furnish the supplies or perform the service for the whole period of the proposal to be charged up against the bidder and his guarantor or guarantors, and the sum may be immediately recovered by the United States for the use of the War Department in an action of debt against either or all of such persons.

Mr. SEWELL. This is a bill relative to the character of the bonds given under contracts for furnishing supplies to the War Department, conforming them to those given in the Navy and Post-Office Departments. There is a report in the case; but as this is a bill prepared by the Department and recommended by the Secretary of War, I take it there is no practical necessity for having the report read.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that this is a very improper way to describe a statute. There is no such thing as volume 20 of the Statutes at Large. That is a mere binder's mark on the outside of the volume. There are a half dozen years and a half dozen chapters 58 in some volumes of the statutes.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow the report to be read? It will explain the case.

Mr. HOAR. I am speaking of the title of the bill and the description. Volume 20 of the Statutes at Large contains the statutes for the years 1877 to 1879 inclusive. Each session has chapter 58; and there is no authority for publishing these in such volumes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the title of the act amended is given in the body of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Let the description be read again.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

That chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations to be observed in the preparation, submission, and opening of bids for contracts under the War Department," be amended by striking therefrom everything following the words "War Department," and substituting for the part of the act so stricken out the following words——

Mr. HOAR. There is no necessity for reading further. If the Senator from New Jersey regards this as an important bill, as the subject-matter is apparent in the body of the bill, although the same mistake occurs both there and in the title, I will not insist, on the last night of our session, upon having it go back to the House to be lost perhaps on such an objection; but it is a very slovenly and vicious kind of bill that the House have sent us.

Mr. SEWELL. I think the bill is sufficient to identify the statute referred to.

Mr. HOAR. I will not insist, if nobody else does, on sending it back.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MIXED COMMISSION WITH VENEZUELA.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 277) providing for a new mixed commission in accordance with the treaty of April 25, 1866, with the United States of Venezuela, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 12, after the word "as," to strike out "the claimants may offer" and insert "may be material;" so as to read:

Which commission shall be authorized to consider all the evidence presented before the former commission in respect to claims brought before it, together with such other and further evidence as may be material.

Mr. LAPHAM. On consultation with the members of the committee we have concluded, as the amendments reported are merely formal, that it is better they should be disagreed to and the resolution passed as it came from the House. I hope this amendment, therefore, will be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, in line 21, before "awards," to strike out "said" and insert "such."

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

POST-ROUTES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7327) to establish certain post-routes.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose there is no necessity for reading all of that bill, but I should like to have the last route under the head of "Michigan" read.

Mr. HALE. I think the rule of the Senate requires all bills to be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the bill till reaching the first amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which was, under the head of "Alabama," in line 8, to strike out "Attalla" and insert "Atalla."

Mr. MAXEY. Let the amendments be considered as agreed to unless objection is made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the bill be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated as they are reached in the reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let all the amendments under each State be adopted at once.

Mr. SHERMAN. As this bill has been printed and lies on our tables and is manifestly a formal matter, I move to dispense with its reading. This has been done a dozen times.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BECK. I have offered before a substitute for this bill; I intend to offer it again, and the Senate can vote it down if it pleases. If there ever was a bill that is a farce year by year it is this bill; and the very suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri clearly shows it. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to place such mail facilities on the several highways established by law in the States and Territories as the public interest in his judgment requires.

That is all there is of the bill, or ever was in it.

Mr. GARLAND. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky; but the difficulty about that is that we are now acting on a House bill and we had better not touch that. If we send it back we shall probably get nothing.

Mr. BECK. I did not think of that. I beg pardon. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better dispense with the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which are printed with the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HILL. I offer from the committee the following amendment——

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood the Senator to say there would be no amendments offered to this bill, but they would be to the next bill.

Mr. HILL. Except three amendments to correct misspelled words.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

The ACTING SECRETARY. Under the head of "Kentucky," in line 180, after the word "to," it is proposed to strike out "Eagle" and insert "Engle;" so as to read:

From College Hill to Engle.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. In line 193, I move to strike out "Whitley C. H." and insert "Williamsburgh;" so as to read:

From Williamsburgh, via Mullis and Evans, to Carpenter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. In line 265, I move to strike out "Baldwin" and insert "Baldwyn;" so as to read:

From Baldwyn to Ryan's Well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. In line 501, I move to strike out "Ungelina" and insert "Angelina;" so as to read:

From Rockland, via Worden's Ferry, on the Angelina River, to Boren Mills.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HILL. There is a supplementary bill of the same character which I desire to have taken up.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7679) to establish certain post-routes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be dispensed with, unless there be objection. The question is on the amendments of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, printed with the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I submit the following amendment: After line 75, under the head of "Florida," to insert:

From Lake Eustice to Tavarez.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Under the head of "Michigan," after line 162, I move to add:

From Alpena to Thunder Bay Island, via Sugar Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Under the head of "Minnesota," after line 188, I move to insert:

From Evansville, in Douglas County, via Elbow Lake, to Herman, in Grant County, Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. After line 215, under the head of "Missouri," I move to insert:

From Cuba, Crawford County, Missouri, to T. E. Renick's farm, in Franklin County, Missouri, on Bourbois River.
From Sedalia to Lookout, in Pettis County, Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Under the head of "Nevada," after line 221, I move to insert:

From Genoa to Alda Mill, in Red Cannon mining district.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the head of "Missouri," in line 208, I move to strike out "Weanbleau" and insert "Weaubleau;" so as to read:

From Wheatland to Weaubleau, Hickory County.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. After line 258, under the head of "North Carolina," I move to insert:

From Sutton's to Hall's Cross-Roads, in Franklin County.
From Wilmington to Myrtle Grove Sound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the following amendment: On page 5, after line 170, under the head of "Maryland," I move to insert:

From Poplar Springs, via Florence and Daisey, to Woodbine, in Howard County.
From Farlie to Mills' Cross-Roads, to Hainesville, to Werlin Station, in Kent County.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. On page 13, under the head of "Tennessee," after line 298, I move to insert:

From Gas to Boonshill.
From Sumac to Young.
From Bolivar, via Pine Top, Minnie, Montezuma, to Henderson.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLATER. I move to amend, on page 12, under the head of "Oregon," by inserting after line 271:

From Howard's to Mitchell's.
From Baker City, via Lenox's, Biggs', O'Brien's, and Clover Creek, to Lagrange.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the head of "Missouri," after line 215, I move to insert:

From Long Branch to Rome, in Audrain County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BROWN. It seems to me there are two or three of the printed bills here, and it is difficult to get at the facts exactly as to what bill we are acting on. I move, under the head of "Georgia," after line 91, to insert:

From Gaddistown to Canada.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT RELIGIOUS CORPORATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order adopted the Senate will proceed with the consideration of House bills on the Calendar.

The bill (H. R. 6236) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend sections 534, 536, 537, 541, and 542 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia so as to read respectively as follows:

SEC. 534. Such society or congregation may assume a name, and any number of trustees, not exceeding ten, who shall be styled trustees of such society or congregation by the name so assumed, may be elected or appointed according to the rules or discipline governing the church or denomination to which said society or congregation may belong.

SEC. 536. The trustees shall hold office during the period stated in their certificates, and vacancies in the office of trustee may be filled by election or appointment as provided in section 534; and rules and regulations may be adopted in relation to the management of the estate and the duties of trustees, or for their removal from office, in accordance with the rules or discipline governing the church or denomination to which such society or congregation may belong, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States and the laws in force in the District.

SEC. 537. At the expiration of the term of service of any of the trustees, one or more successors may be elected or appointed, as provided in section 534, and a certificate of their appointment or election shall be made, verified, filed, and recorded as provided in section 535.

SEC. 541. The trustees shall have power, under the direction of the society or congregation or the authority by whom they were elected or appointed, to sell and execute deeds and conveyances of the property authorized to be held by the society or congregation; and such deeds or conveyances shall have the same effect as like deeds or conveyances made by natural persons; but no deed or conveyance shall be made so as to defeat or destroy the interest or effect of any grant, donation, or bequest, and all grants, donations, and bequests shall be appropriated and used as directed by the person making the same.

SEC. 542. The trustees shall have power, under the direction of the society or congregation or the authority by whom they were elected or appointed, to execute mortgages, or deeds of trust in the nature of mortgages, upon the estate and property which any society or congregation are authorized to hold, or to lease the same for a term not exceeding ten years. And such mortgages, deeds, and conveyances shall have the same effect and be enforced by the same remedies and proceedings as like mortgages, deeds, leases, and conveyances made by natural persons.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARZEL ALTMANN.

The bill (H. R. 832) for the relief of Marzel Altmann was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize Marzel Altmann to enter one hundred and sixty acres of public lands, or less, in a body, in any of the land districts in the State of Minnesota, as a homestead, after a bona fide residence of six months thereon, and subject to all the provisions of the homestead act except as to limit of time of residence thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form 1,500 copies of the act passed at the present session entitled "An act to reduce internal revenue, and for other purposes," for the use of the Senate.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That A. S. Meguire have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate all of the papers in the claim of Thomas J. League.

DAMAGES IN PATENT-INFRINGEMENT CASES.

The bill (H. R. 6018) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the recovery of damages for the infringement of patents, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I understand the Senator from Maryland to object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I move that the Senate take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. LOGAN. That can not be done under the order.

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly we can do it.

Mr. HOAR. Not under the Sherman order.

Mr. FRYE. That can not be done under the rule adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks this point has not been raised before.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think there is anything in the rule to interfere with the control of the Senate over a bill which is reached in regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is to consider House bills and House resolutions which have been reported favorably and which are on the Calendar. It is governed by the Anthony rule; and if objection is made to the consideration of a bill it can be proceeded with by a majority.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to interfere with this bill, because I am bound not to do so; but I think the Chair is wrong in his ruling. The Anthony rule provided expressly that there should be a certain order of business unless otherwise ordered. It is that which authorizes a Senator to move to proceed to a matter that is objected to under the Anthony rule. The Sherman rule made no such exception; but the Sherman rule required that we should go on with the House bills unobjected to in their order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not say "unobjected."

Mr. HOAR. I understand it was that we should go on with House bills, and then——

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I thought he was to make an argument——

Mr. HOAR. I did not object to the bill. I hope the Senator will have consent to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Here is the Sherman rule, and not a word is said on the subject of an objection. The Senate is to proceed to the consideration "of House bills reported favorably, commencing at the point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration." There is nothing said about unobjected cases.

Mr. HOAR. There was a subsequent unanimous consent at a later period that the right of objection should attach under the Sherman rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When was that done?

Mr. HOAR. After the Sherman rule was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That may have been done when the present incumbent was not in the chair.

Mr. GORMAN. An amendment was adopted to that effect this morning, on motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Indiana can object to every other bill on the Calendar and finally reach this.

Mr. HARRISON. How can I reach it by objecting to everything?

Mr. HOAR. You can then get this up.

Mr. HARRISON. I can move to take this up in competition with every other Senator's motion to take up something else. I insist on my motion, and I wish to say just a word or two upon it.

This is a bill in which the people, certainly of the Western States, have a very vital interest. It is known to every Senator, especially of the Western States, that our people have been subjected to a most intolerable grievance and outrage in connection with these patent suits. There are pending now in the United States circuit court of my State a large number of such cases. They are brought against farmers and others who purchase innocently small patented articles. In the great majority of cases in the courts the amount claimed in the way of damages is not more than $10, and yet persons living two hundred miles from the place where the Federal court is held are sued by the owners of patents for the pittance of $10, when the marshal's fee for serving the writ is twice as much as the amount of damages demanded in the action.

So gross has been this outrage and so oppressive is this practice that it is bringing the Federal jurisdiction into disrepute with many people in the West.

I ask the Senate now to sustain me in an effort to pass this bill. I am not asking to go to extremes in this matter; I am not asking for legislation that will not recognize the fair and just rights of inventors. I believe in securing to the men whose genius and thought devised these great inventions, or even the smaller ones, fair compensation; but I do not believe that the law should tolerate any longer a practice so unjust and oppressive as this is. I ask the Senate to sustain me in having present action upon the bill, that we may secure against any recovery for costs at least men who are prosecuted under these circumstances.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. Let the bill be read, Mr. President, so that we may understand the debate in reference to it.

Mr. GORMAN. I was simply going to say that in my judgment this bill involves a very great question, which ought to be carefully considered. There are a great many rights covered by it. I think, under the rule adopted this morning, other bills to which a single objection has been made have gone over without the slightest controversy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What was the rule adopted?

Mr. GORMAN. During the morning hour the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moved that the Anthony rule be applied to all bills that come up under the order offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and under that a single objection disposes of any bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Anthony rule was applied to it the whole provision of the Anthony rule would apply, and that allows a majority to take up a bill notwithstanding an objection.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not desire to obstruct legislation, and as the Senator from Indiana thinks that this bill is important and that it can be considered to-night I withdraw the objection.

Mr. LOGAN. Let the bill be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6018) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the recovery of damages for the infringement of patents.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in any suit hereafter brought, in any court having jurisdiction in patent cases, for an alleged use or infringement of any patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, where it shall appear that the defendant in such suit purchased the same in good faith for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applied the same for and to his own use, and not for sale, and not in any manufacturing process, if the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of $20 or over he shall recover no costs against the defendant, unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent, or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the suit: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to articles manufactured outside of the United States.

SEC. 2. That in all suits hereafter brought as aforesaid against a defendant other than a manufacturer or seller of such patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, the plaintiff shall, at the commencement of such suit, deposit with the clerk of the court in which the same is commenced the sum of $50 as security for the costs and expenses of the defendant in such suit; and if the defendant shall finally prevail in such suit the court shall allow costs, and a reasonable sum, not exceeding $50, for counsel to the defendant, the sum so deposited to be applied by the clerk toward the payment of said costs and counsel fee. A failure by the plaintiff to make such deposit shall, on motion, be ground for the dismissal of the suit.

Mr. HARRISON. I have some amendments to offer to the amendment of the committee. In line 12 of the first section, I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. In lines 12 and 13, I move to strike out "he shall recover no costs against the defendant" and insert "the defendant shall recover costs."

Mr. PLATT. I regret that the Senator from Indiana feels it necessary to move this amendment. I sympathize entirely with him in his desire to prevent imposition upon the people of the country by those persons who are selling patented articles, but I am glad to say that the committee has considered this matter very carefully, and I believe that the amendment reported by the committee will effectually prevent it. I do not think the Senator from Indiana in his zeal, and smarting, perhaps under injuries which have been inflicted upon his constituents, ought to go so far as to destroy all property in patents or to put any burden on honest patentees which is too hard to be borne. I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not care to make any argument upon it. It seems to me that the object of the amendment of the committee was to protect a person who bought a small article where the damage to be recovered would not be more than $50, if he was an innocent buyer.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the committee has got a very severe system and an efficient remedy, especially with the amendment already made by the Senator from Indiana, without going further; and if you go further you will do a thing which is unjust in itself, and which is liable, to say the least, to very grave constitutional doubt.

The amendment provides that anybody who sues a person under a claim that he is infringing his patent must pay into court a sum of money to secure the defendant's costs. In the next place, if he does not recover more than $50 he does not get any costs himself; and he deposits $50 as security for the costs and expenses of the defendant. Then, in addition, you give this defendant what you give to no other defendant in the courts of the United States, an allowance for reasonable counsel fees, so as to make the plaintiff pay for the defendant's lawyer. Now, if you go further than that and say that a man who has got a good claim and who does not happen to prove quite $50 damages shall pay the whole costs, you have done what it seems to me is a very great injustice, and I think it is very doubtful in a constitutional point of view whether you can provide for the recovery of costs against a man to whom you gave a right to the exclusive use of his own invention by the Constitution. He has established his invention; he has established his right; and still you say he shall pay the costs provided he does not recover over so much.

There are cases where you give a man a choice of two or three courts and you say that if he brings suit in the Supreme Court when he has got a lower court, a magistrate's or a common pleas court, the plaintiff shall not recover costs because he has no right to go to this high court except on a suit of a certain amount and he makes his claim of damages there at his peril. But this is the only tribunal open to the patentee for a right which is clearly his by the Constitution, and which in the case supposed in the statute he establishes. It seems to me if you deprive him of costs, make him pay the defendant's lawyer, and make him deposit before he starts what you require of no other claimant, a sum of money, it is pretty harsh to go further and say that the other side shall recover costs against him.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator misinterprets the provision we are now considering. Under the first section the plea of being an innocent buyer without notice would be simply a defeat of costs; it would not be an answer to the suit at all. It would simply be a plea or suggestion as to the recovery of costs in the case; and the provision as to attorney fees does not apply in that at all; it applies simply in a case where the party is defeated upon his claim for an infringement or for an unlawful use of a patented article and the defendant prevails on the merits. That is the only one case in which he can recover counsel fees under this bill.

Then it has no relation to what I am discussing in the amendment I propose in the other section, because the provision as to counsel fees does not apply to that class of cases; and unless the plaintiff in such a case is made to pay costs, the effect is this: he recovers the $20, $30, or $40, or whatever it may be; he sues a man who he knows is an innocent buyer and against whom he can not recover costs; puts him to the expense of summoning witnesses two hundred miles from where he lives to prove the fact that he bought innocently, and yet puts him in for his own costs. I do not think it severe to say that when that man sues in the Federal courts for a petty cause of action like this he shall pay the costs unless he recovers enough to show that the action was really proper to be brought. If a man brings an action in one of the circuit courts in a county in Indiana, when he could sue in the defendant's township before a justice of the peace, he would have to pay the costs.

Mr. HOAR. But I suppose Indiana, like every other State, affords a man a tribunal where if he has a good claim he can establish it.

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly; the local tribunal.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator from Indiana a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator know of any instance in our laws where a person recovering not more than a certain sum for damages shall be obliged to pay costs to the defendant, although on the merits the plaintiff prevails? Does he believe that such a provision is clearly constitutional? I know he does not want to get any unconstitutional provision into this bill, for that would simply defeat his object.

Mr. HARRISON. I see nothing in the world unconstitutional about this. The provision is only that if a man sues in a certain jurisdiction and does not recover a certain amount he shall pay the costs. Many of the States have such provision in their laws. It is true, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, that under our State laws another opportunity is afforded him; but under the patent laws there is none. That is the very trouble. If these suits could be prosecuted in the immediate neighborhood where the men live, the burden would not be so great as it is now. It is absolutely a judicial outrage to bring a man one hundred and fifty or two hundred miles to answer in the Federal courts for a small sum like this.

Mr. HOAR. I have given great thought and study to the endeavor to devise a fair and just remedy which shall cut up by the roots the abuse of which the Senator from Indiana complains; but I admit very frankly that I approach this question from the point of view of a person representing inventors and patentees, and largely sympathizing with them. Representing or sympathizing with an honest patentee I hope does not lead anybody of a fair and just mind to sympathize with a blackmailer. I only want to look out for common justice to that class of men who I am sure the Senator from Indiana will join with me in demanding ought to have their just and fair rights; that is, the honest inventors. The defendants in the suits where honest inventors' patents are infringed are not poor farmers, are not men at a distance from the places where the courts are held, are not men unable to employ lawyers; they are great and powerful corporations, railroad and manufacturing companies who desire to take without compensation the product of the brains of these inventors.

Mr. HARRISON. I say to the Senator that that class of persons will get no protection under the bill as it is.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the amendment reported by the committee is sufficiently strict, and that the Senator from Indiana would insure the passage of the bill without resistance here or in the other branch of Congress if it goes there, if he could possibly concur with the committee in not presenting this part of his amendment, which seems to us unjust.

Mr. HARRISON. I have yielded to the committee a great deal. I am not sure that the sense of the Senate would not accept the House bill as it stood; but I am not pressing that point and I do not desire to argue this further. I ask a vote of the Senate on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Committee on Patents.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer another amendment. In line 15 of section 1 I move to strike out the word "actual" before "notice" and insert it before the word "knowledge;" so that it will read "had actual knowledge or notice of the existence of such patent."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That makes it better undoubtedly.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. One other amendment. In line 16 of section 1, after the word "patent," I move to insert "and that the article or thing purchased or used by him was an infringement of such patent."

Mr. HOAR. How could he know a profound question of law?

Mr. PLATT. I hardly think the Senator from Indiana on reflection will insist upon that. It seems to me it is going entirely too far. If he has knowledge of the patent he ought not to come in and claim to be an innocent purchaser.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me illustrate what the question is. The suits with which our people are most troubled are the driven-well suits. The question there was one of infringement between two patents. The Supreme Court of the United States recently, only eight judges sitting, divided four and four on the question whether the patent used infringed on Green or whether his was the better patent. Some persons may know that Green had a patent; but are they to be charged as not having bought innocently unless they know there is an infringement and that the article they are buying is an article that the dealer has no right to sell?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. On that I ask for a division.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 16 of section 1, after the word "patent," it is proposed to insert "and that the article or thing purchased or used by him was an infringement of such patent."

Mr. HOAR. I suggest whether something like this would not be nearer what the Senator claims: "And of the claim that such use was an infringement of the same?"

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to that?

Mr. PLATT. Very well; let the amendment be modified in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts state his proposition?

Mr. HOAR. After the word "patent," in line 16 of section 1, insert "and of the claim that such use was an infringement of the same."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana accepts the modification of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana as modified to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. One other amendment. In section 2, lines 7, 8, 9, and 10, read:

> And if the defendant shall finally prevail in such suit, the court shall allow costs, and a reasonable sum, not exceeding $50, for counsel, to the defendant.

I do not think there should be any provision there for the recovery of costs. That follows as a matter of course, and it might be a limitation on the preceding section. I move to strike out the words "costs and;" so as to read "the court shall allow a reasonable sum." Of course he recovers costs if he prevails.

Mr. PLATT. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HARRISON. And put in the word "fee" after "counsel."

Mr. PLATT. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. Now I desire to give notice that during the consideration of the remaining House bills on the Calendar reported favorably I shall insist that the effect of the order of the Senate is that one objection carries a bill over; that it is subject to the five-minute rule of debate, and that it is not in order to move to take up a bill, notwithstanding the objection, until the Calendar is completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquired of the Reporter, and he said his notes showed that the Anthony rule was applied to the Sherman order, and the Chair thinks if it applies in one respect it applies in all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the question will arise.

Mr. HOAR. When the question arises I will state my view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair may not be here then; but the Chair in advance states that he understands the whole Anthony rule applies, not one portion of it alone. The Reporter says that was the motion adopted; and one part of the Anthony rule is that when a bill is objected to the Senate may proceed to consider it, notwithstanding the objection, by a majority vote.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH of Ohio, and Mr. JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN of Kentucky, managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government;

A bill (H. R. 5653) for the relief of Kirk W. Noyes;

A bill (H. R. 5661) to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7226) to punish larceny from the person in the District of Columbia.

EXTRADITION OF FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE.

The bill (H. R. 7289) to confer upon the senior associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in the absence or inability of the chief-justice of said court, the powers and duties now conferred upon said chief-justice relative to the extradition of fugitives from justice was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERNEST F. UNLAND.

The bill (H. R. 3243) for the relief of Ernest F. Unland was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Ernest F. Unland, of Pekin, Illinois, of $796.71, being the amount paid by him in error on the 18th of October, 1880, into the United States Treasury, to effect a compromise of a judgment of forfeiture and costs held by the United States against the distillery and premises of the City Distilling Company of Pekin, the judgment and costs having already been quashed by executive pardon of August 24, 1880, granted to the owners of the distillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LICENSES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 6928) to regulate licenses in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to suggest to the chairman of the committee, or to the Senator having this bill in charge, that it is hardly necessary to consume time in considering it, inasmuch as a substitute is reported for it. If the substitute be adopted and sent to the House no one can think for a single moment that it is possible for our amendment to be concurred in so that it may become a law. Hence I think we had better devote the time to other business.

Mr. MCDILL. I hope the Senator will not make objection.

Mr. ROLLINS. I hope we shall go through with the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I will not interpose an objection.

The reading of the matter proposed by the amendment to be substituted for the House bill was resumed and concluded, as follows:

> That it shall be the duty of every person who is required by the provisions of existing law to have a license to sell liquor by retail, to be drunk on the premises, to keep the same at all times displayed in a conspicuous position in his place of business, and to exhibit the same on demand of the proper officer; and it is hereby made the duty of the major of police to see that no person required to have a license to sell liquor by retail to be drunk on the premises shall be engaged in such business without the proper license; and he is hereby authorized to direct any member of the police force to enter any premises where there are good grounds for believing that the provisions of law relating to the sale of liquor at retail to be drunk on the premises are being violated, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is any such violation.
> SEC. 2. That every place, except kept by apothecaries, where distilled or fermented liquors, wines, or cordials are sold in quantities less than one pint, or to be drunk on the premises, shall be regarded as a bar-room, sample-room, or tippling-house. And the possession of distilled, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors, with the means and appliances for carrying on the business of disposing of the same, to be drunk where sold, shall constitute the premises a beer saloon, bar-room, sample-room, or tippling-house within the meaning of this act.

And no spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors shall be sold except in compliance with the provisions of this act, nor to minors, nor intoxicated persons, nor on Sunday, nor shall any bar or other place where liquors are usually sold be open on Sunday during any part of the day or night; and all such places shall be kept closed after 12 o'clock midnight and until 4 o'clock in the morning.

SEC. 3. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $200, and in addition thereto his license may be revoked by the commissioners. And it is hereby made the special duty of the police department to promptly arrest and bring before the proper officers all persons who may violate any of the provisions of this act, and see that they are duly prosecuted to final trial and judgment.

SEC. 4. That the police court shall, upon complaint duly made before the judge thereof for that purpose, issue a warrant against any person for the violation of any of the provisions of this act, which warrant may be addressed to any policeman, and made returnable before the police court. Such judge issuing such warrant shall keep a docket, stating the names of the persons issued against, the date, to whom directed, for what offense, and on whose information.

SEC. 5. That the fines, penalties, and forfeitures provided for in this act shall be imposed by judgment or sentence in the police court upon information filed therein, on behalf of the District of Columbia, by the attorney of the District, or by his regular or special assistant, as nearly as possible in the mode prescribed in the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a police court for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 17, 1870.

SEC. 6. That in all informations it shall be sufficient to set forth, in brief and clear terms, the nature of the charge which may be preferred against any individual or individuals; and no information shall be quashed on account of misnomer, technicality, or mere clerical errors, where the matter complained of is stated so as to clearly indicate to the party accused the matter or thing which he is called on to answer; but all such errors may be amended in the police court, on motion, at the time of trial, or on appeal to the criminal court.

SEC. 7. That in any case of appeal from the decision of the police court to the criminal court of said District, in which the defendant shall on appeal be duly convicted of any violation of any of the provisions of this act, and shall fail immediately to pay or secure the payment of such fine, penalty, or forfeiture imposed by law for such offense, such person shall be committed to the workhouse till such fine or penalty and costs thereon be paid; but in no case, in the event of non-payment, shall such imprisonment be for a period less than five nor more than ninety days for any one offense.

SEC. 8. That all fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed for any violation of any of the provisions of this act, upon information, filed as aforesaid, shall be collected and applied to the use of the District unless otherwise specially provided.

SEC. 9. That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to create a revenue in the District of Columbia by levying a tax upon all dogs therein, to make such dogs personal property, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "That there shall be, and hereby is, levied a tax or license of $2 each per annum upon all dogs owned or kept in the District of Columbia, said tax or license to be collected as other licenses in said District are or may be collected; and it shall be unlawful for any person to keep or harbor any animal of the dog kind until he has complied with the provisions of this act; and any person so unlawfully keeping or harboring any dog shall, on conviction thereof, be liable to a fine of not more than $20 for each offense."

SEC. 10. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed. And this act shall take effect from and after its passage. But it shall not be construed and held to release or extinguish any fine, penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under any other law or ordinance of the District of Columbia, but the same shall be prosecuted to final trial and judgment the same as if this act had never been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. MCDILL. I wish to amend section 3 by adding after the word "act," in the second line, the words "or any act relating to licenses."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCDILL. I want to add the same words after the word "act," in the fourth line of section 4.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGES IN GEORGIA.

The bill (H. R. 6683) to authorize the construction of bridges over the Ogeechee, Oconee, Ocmulgee, Flint, and Chattahoochee Rivers, in the State of Georgia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK DRONEY.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have put on its passage a House pension bill. It is Order of Business 1065, being the bill (H. R. 718) granting a pension to Patrick Droney. It was passed over. I will state to the Senate the exact condition of it. There was an adverse report in this case; but since it was made, the Senate in another case, upon full discussion and upon the yeas and nays, reversed the decision of the committee, and this is a case precisely like the one that has been passed by the Senate on the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It does not follow that the Senate will adhere to its decision.

Mr. DAWES. I know; but if the Senate does not adhere, that will be the end of it. The report of the committee, which was adverse, was overruled by the Senate on full discussion and on the yeas and nays.

Mr. JACKSON. It was understood that adverse reports should not be taken up.

Mr. DAWES. I know it can not be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next House bill will be stated.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 6597) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. GARLAND. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not object to the bill. It is a simple bill allowing these people to enter the courts. It affects a great many people in my State.

Mr. GARLAND. It is a simple bill that the Senate has sat down on three or four times.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will not sit down on it at this hour of the night.

Mr. GARLAND. I say that it will be debated here until 12 o'clock to-morrow, the time for the session to expire. I object to its consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. LAPHAM. It will be impossible to dispose of this bill in the remaining hours of this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection? [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. MCDILL. I call for a division.

Mr. FRYE. If this is taken up the rest of the Calendar is gone.

The question being put, the ayes were 11.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the yeas and nays on the consideration of this bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORMAN. I raise the point of order that under the rule adopted this morning a single objection will cause any bill to be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can not tell unless he sees everything that has been done.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the yeas and nays will be ordered, and then we can dispose of the bill in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the point of order is withdrawn, the yeas and nays can be taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can dispose of it quicker by taking the yeas and nays than by discussing the point of order.

Mr. GROOME. The President pro tempore has ruled several times to-day that a single objection takes a bill over.

Mr. ALLISON. So it does, but I move to consider this bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The President of the Senate was here when the rule was adopted. The yeas and nays are demanded on taking up the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Allison,	Ingalls,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Jones of Nevada,	Miller of Cal.,	Sherman,
Conger,	Kellogg,	Mitchell,	Tabor,
Harrison,	McDill,	Plumb,	Vance,
Hill,	McMillan,	Sawyer,	Van Wyck.

NAYS—33.

Blair,	Frye,	Lamar,	Rollins,
Brown,	Garland,	Lapham,	Saulsbury,
Call,	George,	Maxey,	Slater,

So the motion was not agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2433) to amend sections 6 and 7 of the act providing for the publication of the Revised Statutes and the laws of the United States, approved June 20, 1876;

A bill (H. R. 5300) to amend chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, relating to contracts under the War Department;

A bill (H. R. 7240) for the relief William H. Donohoe;

Joint resolution (S. R. 64) authorizing the sale of the Congressional Directory and the current numbers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD;

Joint resolution (S. R. 95) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department;

Joint resolution (S. R. 139) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 143) authorizing the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer relative to the maps, &c., for the census reports.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The bill (H. R. 7061) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, to encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and to amend the laws relating to the shipment and discharge of seamen was announced as next in order.

Mr. COKE. This is a bill of considerable length, containing fifteen pages. It is an exceedingly important bill. It will lead necessarily to a great deal of debate, because it makes radical changes in the navigation laws; it changes a number of sections of the Revised Statutes, it makes changes in the tariff laws, and makes very general changes with reference to the entire subject of American shipping. I do not believe that such a bill as this should be taken up at this time of night. I do not believe that it can be examined properly in the time that intervenes between now and final adjournment. To take it up now and act upon it would not allow that consideration which the importance of the subject entitles it to receive.

I therefore, in view of these facts, while I dislike to make an objection, object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I could not hear what the Senator from Texas said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois). He objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from Texas will not object. I ask the Senator to hear me just one moment.

Mr. CONGER. I wanted to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I will give way in a moment. Preparatory to a motion to take up the bill, notwithstanding the objection, I desire to say that the House and the Senate at the last session by joint action appointed a joint committee to examine this matter, to listen to the complaints of shipping men and the requests of shipping men as to amendments of the law. That joint committee met and spent several days in taking the testimony and opinions of men on the subject of improvements in our shipping laws. They reported to the House and to the Senate by way of a bill and a report the result of their examinations. They spent a great deal of time in pursuance of the joint order of the two bodies. The House passed in an amended form the bill reported by the joint committee.

While the bill does not go to the extent which the select committee desired, still it does take up the subject of the burdens and imperfections of the laws and makes recommendations to Congress for an improvement of those laws.

This bill is the result of the House action upon the subject. The Senate Committee on Commerce, of which the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is a member, were unanimous in their recommendation of the main provisions of the bill as the joint select committee were unanimous in reporting the bill which was presented to this body.

There are provisions in this bill which probably the Senate would not adopt. There is one provision in the bill with which the Senate would not concur, and a provision in the amendment of the Senate Committee to the bill which perhaps might not be agreed to. Aside from those two provisions, two sections of the bill, I do not think there is a single objection in the mind of any one whatever to the passage of the remaining portion of the bill.

I hope we may submit to the Senate the bill, make the amendments which the Senator from Texas and I desire, and send the bill back to the House for their concurrence in our amendments. I hope the objection will be withdrawn, and that we may take up the bill and see if we can not amend it so that it shall be satisfactory to all and become a law, and do that which we have been trying for years to do, pass some law for the benefit of American transportation and commerce on the high seas. This is a step in the right direction, and when properly amended, I think there will be no objection to it. There can be none except to those matters relating to the change of tonnage tax and the contracts for carrying the mails. I have heard no objection from any one except to those two provisions. With the exception of section 15, which relates to the tax on tonnage, and section 22, which relates to the carrying of mails, I have not been advised that there is any objection to any of the provisions of the bill, even by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senator if he is also willing to strike out section 14?

Mr. CONGER. That is the present law.

Mr. FRYE. That is existing law.

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt about that section. It is the law now.

Mr. COKE. Why re-enact it if it is already the law?

Mr. VEST. Because the committee thought the enactment ought to be consistent entirely and that the acts ought to be systematized and go together. That is no new enactment.

Mr. CONGER. There was a provision in the bill as reported by the select committee in addition to that section. The House struck that out and left the law just as it is, as I understand. Section 15 is one in which there are changes in regard to tonnage, and section 22 in regard to the carrying of the mails. I understood from the Senator from Texas and from others that with those two sections considered and perhaps stricken out, to all the other sections as yet there was no objection. I ask the Senator from Texas to withdraw his objection.

Mr. COKE. With the understanding that the section relating to tonnage and the section relating to postage shall be stricken out, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. CONGER. I can not say what the Senate may do, but I say for myself I am willing that these two sections shall be stricken out.

Mr. COKE. With that understanding I withdraw the objection.

Mr. CONGER. Now I will yield to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. FRYE. The objection having been withdrawn, I do not wish to say anything.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has charge of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I feel an intense interest in the provision which the Senate committee have put on for the carrying of the mails; and also in section 15, relating to tonnage, but from inquiry, and careful inquiry, I have satisfied myself that if we put those two provisions into the bill it is the end of the bill. Therefore reluctantly I consent in behalf of the ship-building interests which I represent that those two sections may be taken out of the bill.

Mr. COKE. I make no objection to the consideration of the bill.

WILLIAM D. MARTIN.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Missouri and the Senate to allow me to make a report from a committee at this moment. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3837) for the relief of William D. Martin, direct me to report it without amendment, and with the recommendation that it be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present reception of the report? The Chair hears none. Does the Senator from Tennessee ask for its immediate consideration?

Mr. HARRIS. No, sir; I simply desire that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

UTAH COMMISSION.

Mr. BROWN. I introduced the other day a resolution instructing the Public Printer to print the report and the rules and regulations in the case of the Utah commissioners. The Public Printer sent a messenger to see me about it, to know where he could get the rules and regulations and oaths prescribed by the Utah commissioners. I sent a message to the Secretary of the Interior asking for them, and he sent me a copy of what he had. I was able to procure from the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], now in the chair, a pamphlet that he had bound, but he could not guarantee that they were really the regulations. I sent that to the Secretary of the Interior and had it compared, and I was unable to make out what was exactly the report. I want now to introduce a resolution instructing the Utah commissioners to report those facts, together with certain other facts that some of us think are essential, because we think they have transcended their legal boundary, and ask that they be instructed to make the report on the first Monday of December next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent to offer at this time a resolution. It will be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Utah commissioners are hereby instructed to report to the Senate on the first Monday in December next all rules and regulations adopted by them, with copies of all oaths prescribed for voters and for all officials of every character in the Territory of Utah, together with all removals from office, if any, and all appointments to office made by them. And that they report whether by their order or direction or by virtue of any rule prescribed by them any person or persons in said Territory has or have been denied the right to vote or to hold office on account of the opinion of such person or persons on the subject of polygamy or bigamy, or as to the lawfulness of polygamy or bigamy. And that they report whether such cases not ordered by them have come within their knowledge in practice.

Resolved, That said commissioners are further instructed to report what number of persons, as nearly as they can ascertain, have been excluded from voting or holding office on account of the practice or the alleged practice of polygamy or bigamy, who have not been convicted of such practice in any court having competent jurisdiction to try and on conviction to sentence such persons to be punished according to law.

Mr. FRYE. How did that get in here in place of the shipping bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent to consider the resolution at this time. The Chair had it read for information in order to call for objection.

Mr. BROWN. It is simply calling on the Utah commissioners to make a report.

Mr. HOAR. I should like before that goes through to inquire of the Senator from Georgia if the law creating those commissioners imposed upon them the duty of reporting to either branch of Congress upon its order?

Mr. BROWN. I am not censuring them for not having reported, but I propose to call upon them to report to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator does not understand my question. I do not understand that the Senate of the United States has a right to order any public officer to do anything except in the case of heads of Departments, where the law reserves that power to either branch of Congress.

Mr. FRYE. To save any further trouble I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I was going to object unless the Senator could answer that question affirmatively.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it lie over under the rule until to-morrow.

Mr. BROWN. Then it will only have to lay over two minutes, as it lacks but two minutes of being midnight, and I will call it up to-morrow.

Mr. FRYE. I call for the regular order.

PRINTING OF TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have two small matters from the Committee on Printing which I should like to have attended to now, if they are to be attended to at all. I report favorably from that committee a resolution which I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form 1,500 copies of the act passed at the present session entitled "An act to reduce internal revenue, and for other purposes," for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reception of the resolution at this time?

Mr. HARRIS. Precisely a similar resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing two hours ago at the instance of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. HAWLEY. This is precisely the same resolution. It is now reported back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to considering the resolution at this time?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

THE JEANNETTE INQUIRY.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 5,500 additional copies of the "report of the proceedings of the court of inquiry to investigate the loss of the steamer Jeannette in the arctic seas" be printed, of which 1,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House, and 1,000 for the use of the Secretary of the Navy.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7061) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, to encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and to amend the laws relating to the shipment and discharge of seamen.

Mr. MAXEY. I understand that section 15 is agreed to be stricken out.

Mr. FRYE. I will vote myself to strike it out.

Mr. MAXEY. Then section 22 down to and including line 30——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with, and the amendments will be acted upon after the bill is read.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to section 15.

Mr. COKE. If in order I will move to strike out section 15.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order until the reading is concluded.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce is, on page 9, to strike out section 13.

Mr. BAYARD. I suggest that on page 10, at the end of section 14, in line 14, these words should be inserted:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to vessels built prior to January 1, 1883.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce to strike out section 13. We have not yet reached section 14.

Mr. BAYARD. I beg pardon.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Delaware will permit the question to be taken first on the pending amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I will await action on the amendments of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee striking out section 13, which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 13. That all masters and owners of vessels shall have the right to ship and pay off the men they employ and that all laws or parts of laws requiring the payment of any remuneration to the shipping commission for the shipment of seamen, if shipped by said masters or owners, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That the duties performed by the shipping commissioner at home ports shall be performed by the collector of the several ports of the United States, and that no fee shall be charged for said services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out, after "section 14," the words:

That section 2514 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows: "SEC. 2514."

Mr. VEST. That is a mere formal amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The suggestion of the Senator from Delaware will now be received.

Mr. BAYARD. I suggest, if it be agreeable to the committee, that I should move an amendment now at the end of section 14, after the words "legal representatives," to insert:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to vessels built prior to January 1, 1883.

The obvious necessity for the amendment I think will appear, as without it there would be no limitation for recoupment against the Treasury for vessels built at any time in the history of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the amendment now if there be no objection, but other amendments of the Committee on Commerce are still undisposed of.

Mr. VEST. Let the amendments of the committee be disposed of first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the next amendment of the Committee on Commerce will be reported.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to insert as section 22 the following:

SEC. 22. That section 3976 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and all other compulsory laws and parts of laws that oblige American vessels to carry the mails of the United States arbitrarily or that prevent the clearance of vessels until they shall have taken mail matter on board, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and that section 4009 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows, to wit:

"SEC. 4009. For transporting the mails of the United States between any port of the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the Atlantic and ports in the Pacific, touching at any foreign port, a sum not exceeding $1 per mile, on the trip each way, of actual nautical miles traveled between terminal points, for each trip actually made; but such service shall be performed only under contract entered into by the Postmaster-General, after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, and the aggregate amount to be expended for such service shall not exceed $1,500,000 per annum. The ships with which such contracts shall be made shall be ships of American registry only, and contracts shall be for a term of not less than four years; and the general laws regulating the transportation of inland mails shall be applicable to such contracts, except as herein provided. And all vessels engaged in such contracts shall in time of war be subject to purchase or charter by the United States at reasonable rates; and all foreign vessels or sailing vessels carrying the mails of the United States may be allowed a sum not exceeding the sea postage now allowed by law."

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senate to non-concur in this amendment of the committee. I hope it will be disagreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that amendment will not be pressed and I will make no argument against it. It is a subsidy, and therefore it ought not to be adopted.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say in justice to the committee and this whole subject that the remark of the Senator from Delaware is not correct. This is not a subsidy in any sense of the word whatever. It is open to bidders; it is exactly like every bid for mail contracts on land in the United States, the same law and the same provision, with what we have not had in land contracts, a limitation of the amount governing the discretion or power of the Postmaster-General to be paid per mile on the route and a limitation of the whole amount to be used in this service, it in any event not to exceed $1 per mile going and returning and as much less as the bids may be, and not to exceed in the expenditure for the sea-service in carrying the mail $1,500,000. The provision is exactly the same and for the same object, but with more careful limitations than is made on all the star-routes and on all the steamboat routes for carrying the mail on our inland waters and on land.

I am sorry to hear the Senator from Delaware say that this is in any sense a subsidy, because the committee took particular pains to make it a matter of contract open to bids from anybody and everybody who might come in complying with the requirement that it should be an American vessel.

I do not know whether it will be best to adopt or reject this provision. If the provision be rejected, then section 15 should be. Under our present tonnage laws all vessels, foreign and domestic, pay a duty of 30 cents per ton per year. The result of it is that our American vessels making long voyages, perhaps six months, ten months, a year, or more than a year, as some of them do, into the remote island regions, Australia and that region, with which they trade, pay 30 cents a ton per year for one voyage or less than one voyage a year it may be, or for half a year, while foreign vessels passing between the United States and Liverpool, Bremen, or Havre, which make ten trips a year, pay but 30 cents a year tonnage.

The object of the committee was not to oppress our own vessels by increasing the tonnage tax, but to make vessels which have the benefit of our lights and our harbor improvements pay the same tonnage dues that the English law charges upon American vessels. We have made in section 15 the law correspond exactly with the English law under different heads, as there is a tonnage tax which includes light tax, sound tax, harbor tax, and things of that kind.

Our object was to make a change in the tonnage dues and make contracts with out own lines of vessels to carry the mails under a contract and under bids open to all. The two go together. The result would be in changing this tonnage tax to increase the burdens upon our own lines making short trips back and forth to Europe, to which we were all opposed and should be opposed. If such a law were enforced, the remedy for the hardship upon our own vessels would be in giving them these mail contracts, not a subsidy but a right to earn more money by carrying the mail for the reason that they would have to pay increased tonnage under the section.

These two sections should go or fall together. I believe it would be well to make our tonnage dues correspond to the English tonnage dues, but I do not believe it would be well to do it unless we can pay for mail contracts made with any vessels or lines that desire to enter into them subject to the limitations and restrictions provided in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Commerce to insert section 22.

Mr. BAYARD. I regret, sir, that I should not have had more opportunity to discuss a bill of this importance, but the impression has been given to me that the amendment was not to be pressed.

The question of the repeal in section 22 of the obligatory features compelling all American ships to carry the mails is a very debatable one. It would seem harsh in one respect, but there is the fact in connection with it that the mails are after all the very arteries of commerce itself, and the vessel that carries the letters carries the orders to fill her with cargo. Merchandise is commanded by correspondence, and the vessel whose duty it is or whose interest it is to become the carrier of merchandise must therefore be benefited by carrying the correspondence that demands transportation.

I do not propose to argue that question in the abstract or the general policy, nor do I care now to open up a question that is almost endless, if we were to consider, in the few hours left of this session, the policy or impolicy of paying bounties to ships in the shape of subsides. I have declared myself too often in opposition to the payment of public moneys for private ends in that way, whether it be by means of the protection per se of a tariff or by means of a bounty directly paid to ships, as proposed in this case.

I only can say that I hope the amendment will not be pressed by those having charge of the bill and that it will be defeated in Committee of the Whole, because I am satisfied when the bill comes into the Senate it will be open to opposition upon the principle of granting subsidies to private individuals to assist them in their private undertakings and for their own behalf.

I hope the amendment will not be accepted by the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Missouri to yield to me to take up a case that will take but a moment. It is the second case on the Calendar. It relates to a constituent of mine, and I am compelled to be absent from the Senate on a conference committee.

Mr. BAYARD. Let the shipping bill be laid aside informally.

Mr. ALLISON. Informally. My bill will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to lay aside the pending order informally in order that the Senate may consider House bill No. 301.

STEPHEN P. YEOMANS AND ANDREW LEECH.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 301) for the relief of Stephen P. Yeomans and Andrew Leech. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Stephen P. Yeomans, late register of the United States land office at Sioux City, Iowa, $7,500, in full for all extraordinary services or expenses rendered or incurred by him during his term of office as such register, and to pay Andrew Leech, late receiver of the United States land office at Sioux City, Iowa, $4,050, in full as indemnity for all extraordinary expenses incurred by him during his term of office as such receiver.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the shipping bill, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce to insert section 22 as a new section.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] has characterized the proposed section which provides for the payment of ocean postage as a subsidy. I desire simply to say that I have never voted for a subsidy; that I never propose to vote for one; and I want the Senator from Delaware to make good his assertion that this is a subsidy. The postage which is paid on the inland routes of the United States has no assailants; it is conceded to be just and proper. The special committee on shipping unanimously reported that the same principle should apply to the ocean routes. I ask the Senator from Delaware if he does not think that principle to be correct and just?

Under the laws of the United States as they now exist, a steamship which carries the mails of the United States 5,000 miles receives 2 cents for every letter; and the proof before the special committee of which I was a member was that the expenses of carrying the mails from the steamships in San Francisco up to the office of the consul at that port exceeded the total amount of the postage received by the line in carrying the letter for 3,000 miles. Does the Senator from Delaware say that that is right? Is there a Senator upon this floor who will stand here to-day in his place and say that is just or proper?

I have no connection with any mail line whatever. I have not the slightest connection with Mr. John Roach, with the Northern Pacific Line, or any other line. I do not know a stockholder. I do not know an officer. I simply, as a member of the committee, have recommended that the same sort of postage should be paid upon the ocean routes as is paid upon the inland routes of the United States. Is there any Senator here who will stand in his place and say that this principle is not correct? I pause for a reply. If the Senator from Delaware will say now that the same principle should not apply upon the ocean as upon the land, I want him to say it.

Mr. BAYARD. I did not expect to argue the principle and the very much-vexed question in regard to this matter of ocean mail carriage; but there occur to my mind very obvious differences between a route within our own territory and through our own territory of mail facilities for our own people and the connection between foreign lands and our people. I do not mean to say that there is not a general service of the same character, but I do mean to say that there is a different practical effect between carrying the mail throughout the continuous territory of a single government and transporting it across the ocean to a foreign people and a different government.

I am not prepared to state all the incidents and the philosophy of the question, but there is a very obvious distinction between carrying mails from route to route and point to point within the territory of the United States and expanding their transportation over the high seas to foreign lands.

The very fact of correspondence by mail is a tie in human intercourse all the stronger within a country and weaker without the country. You can not expand the mails as they were expanded some years ago from what was then the frontier, where the home of the Senator from Missouri now lies, to the Pacific coast, without touching territory that has become the habitation of American citizens. Where once there was a wilderness there are now populous and thriving towns. Where once there was a desert are now active scenes of trade and intercourse between our own people, and nothing has tended so much to create that as the extension of mail-routes. It is the communication by mail that brings men closer together, that creates commerce, that creates intercourse, and by creating commerce and intercourse creates the postal revenue that makes what is called a self-sustaining mail-route.

Such things can never occur by sea, and they do always occur by land. When the Senator from Missouri asks me for a difference between the two, I think I have answered him reasonably; I do not say satisfactorily to him, perhaps not fully to myself or to the Senate, but I have given him an answer why a mail-route across the trackless ocean is different from a mail-route across the land embraced within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. A mail-route is an artery of life on the land, but it can not be so termed upon the sea. The sea is not within the jurisdiction of the United States: it is the common territory of all people and of all governments, over which we have no more control than they; perhaps to-day we have less.

I did not mean in using the word "subsidy" to offend the sensibilities of any Senator who has voted against subsidies. I only meant to say that in effect if we voted one million and a half of money to-day for the highest bidder upon ocean mail-routes, the condition of shipbuilding and ship-owning in this country would probably leave the bids without active competition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The Senator's five minutes have expired.

Mr. VEST. I hope his time will be extended. This is a very important question and there ought not to be any limitation on debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the Senator from Delaware will proceed.

Mr. BAYARD. I was not aware that the five-minute rule had been adopted.

Mr. INGALLS. It is very important that there should be an executive session as early as possible, and on that account I hope that the rules will be enforced, so that we may save all the time that can be properly devoted to those matters.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator from Delaware will permit, I will observe that I interposed an objection to the consideration of this bill which would not have been withdrawn if the friends of the bill had not agreed that sections 15 and 22 should go out of it; and I do not see how any debate can properly be had on those sections.

Mr. BAYARD. I had that impression.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will not press that motion.

Mr. INGALLS. For a few moments only. There are some nominations that should be referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. BAYARD. May I say one word? I ask that I may be permitted to state one fact.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw the motion for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn. The Senator from Delaware will proceed.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wish to assure the Committee on Commerce of my appreciation of the care which they have bestowed upon this bill, of my sense of its great importance, and of my great desire that it should become a law; and I must apologize for the fact that I stand here to criticise their measures at a time when I did not expect to be called on to do so, that I am not able to do so more satisfactorily and at greater length, for just in proportion to the importance of measures comes our duty to consider them carefully.

I only say this lest my friends who have charge of this bill may suppose that I have the slightest desire to obstruct its passage. I had the idea in common with the Senator from Texas that this proposition would not be pressed.

Mr. VEST. I will say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves an executive session.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Kansas will allow me to say a word.

Mr. FRYE. Will not the Senator give ten minutes to finish the bill?

Mr. BAYARD. I have no more to say. I have expressed my opinion upon the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I will move for an executive session at 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion for an executive session is withdrawn for the present; and the Senator from Missouri has the floor upon the pending question.

Mr. VEST. I am so anxious to pass some sections of the bill that I shall give way to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] without answering the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD].

Mr. FRYE. When the bill was taken up, as a friend of the bill, as a friend of this section, and as a member who has fought for a provision of this kind for ten years, and recognizing the condition of the Senate at this moment, recognizing what a division of the Senate might develop, recognizing the fact that an executive session is a necessity, recognizing the fact that the other House is within ten or twelve hours of dissolution, recognizing the importance to our shipping interests of the enactment into law of the earlier provisions of this bill, I stated that, notwithstanding I was as strong and warm a friend of what the Senator called a "subsidy"—I would just as lief he should call it that as anything—notwithstanding I am as warm a friend as there is on earth of that provision, I consented that, so far as I was concerned, it should go out of this bill, and I hope now that section 15 will go out of the bill, and that then the bill will be passed and sent to the House before the ten minutes are up.

Mr. CONGER. I made the same statement myself, that I should be willing both sections should go out. I merely wanted to explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, adding section 22 to the bill.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COKE. I move to strike out section 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York calls for the yeas and nays on the previous amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will not do that. The Senator knows perfectly well I am as desirous of having that part of the law of the land as any Senator here can possibly be, and I have been over to the House to see what can be done, and I am entirely confident that unless these sections are stricken out the bill can not become a law.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I object to the Senator telling us what can be done in the House in regard to this measure. I had the honor of being a member of the joint committee which considered this whole question. There were other items of vast importance that were put into it that were believed to be important by that entire committee, particularly the one relating to drawbacks, which were not only stricken out by the House, but which the Senate committee, after fully considering it, decided to leave out, and they put in place of it this one in regard to carrying the mails by ocean.

What the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Michigan have said in regard to the injustice of compelling American ships to carry these mails for the sea postage could be elaborated and hours of talk could be made upon it, and figures could be brought here to show that the pay they now receive is a mere bagatelle, and that in many cases it is not even sufficient to pay the cartage for carrying the mails from the post-office to the dock and from the steamer and delivering them to the post-office in the foreign country. Still you compel every American ship, before she can sail out of a port, before she can get a clearance anywhere, that she shall take on board and furnish suitable room and accommodations for carrying all such mails as may be delivered to that ship by a postmaster or by a consul in any foreign country where our ships may touch.

I do not hesitate to say that there is not enough in this bill worth talking about or worth delaying the Senate for a single moment, except the amendment which is now proposed to be given away by the friends of this measure and by Senators who rise here and tell us that they have fought for this measure, and they are willing to continue to fight for it. There are a few little burdens taken off the shipping interest in this bill, but they are insignificant.

The trouble with our merchant marine to-day is not the cost of building ships, it is not consular fees, it is not advance wages, it is not the shipping commission, but it is the fact that it does not pay to run ships. If the American people want to revive their merchant marine, they can only do it by paying suitable and fair rates for carrying foreign mails. All other nations do it. Out of $250,000 which we are paying yearly for carrying foreign mails, more than $200,000 is paid to foreign steamship companies, and less than $50,000 to American steamship companies.

If we want to do anything to revive American shipping, we can only do it by putting in some such provision as this. It is not in any sense a subsidy; it is simply that the Postmaster-General shall contract with the lowest bidder for the carrying of the foreign mails, and he is limited in the price which he shall pay to $1 per mile, and he is limited in the total amount which he can contract to a yearly expenditure of one million and a half of dollars.

We collect to-day out of the tonnage tax alone more money than it is proposed in this bill to pay to all American ships for carrying the mails. We collect out of the tonnage tax upon foreign steamships coming into our ports and foreign sailing vessels about $1,500,000, and that is all that under any circumstances would be given to American ships for carrying the mails. The money which we thus take into the Treasury, I insist, can not be better expended, it can not be appropriated for any more worthy purpose than for the purpose put into this amendment and attached to this bill. If that is to fall, then I do not hesitate to say that the bill instead of being an act to encourage American shipping, to build up an American merchant marine, will simply prove a delusion and a snare, and that there is little or nothing in it.

I stand here to protest against the friends of this measure, against those who have worked in the committee to perfect it, giving it away in this way and saying that it is done simply because if this shall be put in the bill will be defeated in the House. We have no right to consider that question at all. The committee have given this subject full and fair and open consideration, and as one of the committee I demand that the sense of the Senate shall be tested upon it. For that reason I demanded the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, upon which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to say that I see no necessity for this provision. Only a few years ago when this same question was before the Senate we had a communication from the Postmaster-General stating explicitly that he had no difficulty in having the mails carried for the regular sea-postages.

Why, therefore, should we attempt now to increase the expenses of the Postal Department by giving the sum named in this section? The Postmaster-General has not informed the Senate that he has any difficulty in having the mails carried at the regular sea-postages, and why we are so anxious to spend the public money in this manner, which will inure to the benefit of the private interests of John Roach to the prejudice of other men engaged in building vessels, I can not tell. Gentlemen may think the compensation is not adequate, and yet the owners and masters of vessels are perfectly willing to take the mail and carry it to every part of the world at the present sea-postage allowed.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to say that there is no American ship which can clear from any American port except on condition of carrying the mails for the postage? Consequently they have no option as to whether they will carry the mail, for they must carry the mail or they can not clear.

Mr. SAULSBURY. A communication from the late Postmaster-General stated explicitly, as my colleagues on the Post-Office Committee will doubtless remember, that he had no difficulty in having the mails carried. Can the Senator from Kansas state that the present Postmaster-General has met with any difficulty whatever in having the mails carried over the sea? I am sure there never has been any complaint from the Postmaster-General that he was unable to have the mails transported for the present sea-postage.

I can see no reason, therefore, for depleting the Treasury to this large amount for that service, when it is not required by the Postmaster-General or by the postal service. Gentlemen dislike a mail subsidy, and I suppose no member of the Senate or of the committee who has had the bill in charge desires to give away the public money, but at the same time that is the effect of it. We can have the mails carried as effectively for the sea-postage as we can for this pay. There is no complaint, there never has been any complaint, that the mails of this country can not be transported across the seas for the regular sea-pay. Why, therefore, should we appropriate hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars to have a service performed that has been performed in the past and which can hereafter be performed for the regular sea-pay?

Mr. VEST. I do not want to discuss this question. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME] suggests that I should not do it now; but I do not choose that what has been said by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] that this is a subsidy, and that this is a payment to Mr. John Roach, should go without notice. I have not the slightest sympathy with the views of Mr. John Roach on the question of American shipping; and if any gentleman will do the special committee on shipping the honor to examine the testimony that was taken and the questions which were put by the members of that committee he will see that I was not at all in sympathy with Mr. John Roach and with his views in regard to the causes which have produced the present decline of American shipping.

I do not propose, as a matter of course, at this late stage in the session to go into a discussion of what I believe are the reasons why the maritime interests of the United States have come to their present condition. To-day of the entire commerce of the United States 85 per cent. is carried in foreign bottoms, and only 15 per cent. in American bottoms. The great question presented now to the American Congress is why is this thing so? I have in my hand the answers of the Postmaster-General as to the amount paid to steamships for carrying the ocean mails of the United States. Two hundred and eighty-seven thousand dollars is paid to American vessels for carrying the mails of the United States, and over $5,000,000 is paid to-day to foreign steamships and to foreign vessels. What the committee wish to do is to increase the amount of postage paid to American vessels if possible.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] says that this is a subsidy paid to Mr. John Roach. It is not so, Mr. President. That simply amounts to the assertion that Mr. John Roach alone can build these steamships and can carry the mails. The fact is now that one single line, I speak of the transatlantic lines, that from Philadelphia to Liverpool, which is partially in the control of American owners, has been compelled to put its ships under the British flag, for, as the president of that company told me to-day, out of eight steamships two of them only are under the American flag and six of them are under the British flag, and out of seventy-nine lines in transatlantic commerce really but two American steamship lines are engaged in that great traffic and commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. INGALLS. I renew my motion for an executive session. It will not take ten minutes.

Mr. VEST. If we go into executive session that will be the last of the shipping bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 11, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the Senate be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish, if I may be allowed to say a word, that the Senate would consent to a very brief executive session for the purpose of referring nominations on the table. It may not require more than five minutes. It is very essential, because they can not be reported if they are not referred.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Missouri will consent to take a vote upon the passage of this bill in the next few minutes, would it not be better that we dispose of this bill, and then everybody will be ready to go into executive session?

Mr. PLUMB. Let the vote be taken again on going into executive session. ["No objection."]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand from the Chair that a quorum is in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, a quorum is in the Chamber.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So the record will be right.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VANCE. There is a little bill on the Calendar, giving a constituent of mine $200, which has been favorably reported. I ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND). There is already a pending question before the Senate. The Senator will have to move to postpone the consideration of the pending order.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent to call it up. I will not take a moment. That favor has been extended to several other Senators.

Mr. INGALLS. What has become of the shipping bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is pending, and the Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that it be laid aside for the purpose of taking up the bill he has indicated.

Mr. INGALLS. What does the Senator from Maine say to that?

Mr. FRYE. I want to go on with the shipping bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks for unanimous consent.

Mr. FRYE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine objects.

Mr. VANCE. I am very sorry he does.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to ask the same favor for the purpose of having the same reply. I ask to take up House bill 7462.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri object to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. VEST. Of course I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7061) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, to encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and to amend the laws relating to the shipment and discharge of seamen, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce to insert section 22 as an additional section in the bill.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], I believe, asked for the yeas and nays on the pending motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the demand of the Senator from New York.

Mr. VEST. In order to get any portion of the shipping bill through I hope the Senator from New York will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays and let this objectionable section be stricken out and let us get just as much of the bill as we can.

Mr. FRYE. I join with the Senator from Missouri in making the request.

Mr. PLUMB. I want simply to say that unless section 22 be stricken out the shipping bill is not going to pass. The question of shipping is one of those things that the people of my part of the county are not supposed to know all about. I do not know, of course, the many regulations that apply to it, and many things that persons of experience and interest in the matter know; but I look at the thing from the standpoint of the whole country. I want that which ministers to the commerce and the prosperity of the entire country. I want something which gives us an outlet at the mouth of the Mississippi for the flour, the wheat, the pork, and the beef of Kansas and of Missouri, and of all the Mississippi Valley. We have had here, presumably under the auspices and by the direction of those who live on the eastern shores of this country, who have been potential in its legislation, obstructive legislation in regard to the shipping interests of the country. They have controlled it; they have made it; they have imposed upon this country a hide-bound policy; they have built a Chinese wall around it, and have prevented the development of the internal portion of the country in order to minister to their own profit. They have seen fit for some purpose or other to introduce a shipping bill. They have become dissatisfied with their own policy.

So far as this bill is concerned, irrespective of section 22, it is a matter of no possible consequence, as I understand it, to anybody except to the people who maneuver the few wooden ships represented by the shipbuilding interest of the State of Maine and some few localities of that kind. If we can not have a policy which shall minister to the foreign commerce of this country, which shall give it a chance to be enlarged, to be developed, to carry all the products of this country under the American flag, if it is to be carried on upon the two-penny policy that has heretofore prevailed, if they are nursing and keeping up specific interests, then I do not want any shipping bill at all. I do not think any shipping bill will be passed at this session unless we can have a better consideration of this question and from a better standpoint. As part of my remarks I send up to the desk to have read——

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will allow it to be printed in his remarks, and not have it read now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The five minutes of the Senator from Kansas have expired.

Mr. VEST. The Senator can not kill the bill by reading documents. Now, Mr. President, I want to say to my friend——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has already spoken on the amendment, and under the rule he can not speak again.

Mr. VEST. I have spoken once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A Senator can not speak twice, under the rule.

Mr. VEST. I have not spoken twice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator spoke on the amendment before the Senate went into executive session. The question is on agreeing to the amendment adding section 22 as an additional section, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment, after the word "port," in line 13. I move to strike out the words "a sum not exceeding $1 per mile, on the trip each way, of actual nautical miles traveled between terminal points for each trip actually made."

Mr. VEST. I have not spoken on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas has the floor, if he wants it, first.

Mr. PLUMB. I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I believe there ought to be free shipping. I have an amendment pending here in favor of free ships. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] says he will vote for it; but I do not believe that at this stage of the session that amendment can be properly disposed of. In the mean time I recognize the fact that there are certain amendments to the shipping laws that ought to be made. The State of Missouri has not one single ship, and yet I know and feel that the maritime interests of the United States affect that State as much as they do the States upon the Atlantic seaboard.

The Senator from Kansas says that this is no time to consider such a bill as this. It is true, sir, that we can not go into this whole question of free ships, that we can not now at this stage of the session discuss the question entirely; but we can make one step in the right direction, and there are certain sections in this bill about which there can be no sort of controversy. There are sections in this bill about which Senators from the Atlantic seaboard, from the Pacific seaboard, from the Middle States, from the Western States have all agreed. Why can not we take up these sections of the bill and pass them? The question as to postage can be disposed of now by putting it off till next session. I do not insist upon it, although I believe in the principle that is asserted in the amendment that the committee has offered; but all I ask now is that we should take up this bill and pass upon the sections about which there can be no dispute from any quarter of the Union, from any Senator, whether he represents a State upon the seaboard or one of the internal States in this country.

Mr. BAYARD. Why not ask the Senator from New York to withdraw his call for the yeas and nays and let us go on then?

Mr. VEST. I have asked the Senator from New York to do that. Let us go on just as far as we can at this stage of the session, and then at the next session let us take up the same question and try to frame a perfect measure. Let us then take up the reports that have been made and dispose of the whole question.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Senator from Missouri has appealed to me to withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays. In connection with the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Michigan I gave a great deal of attention to this measure. We came to the unanimous conclusion that has been reported here to the Senate; and particularly upon the amendment relating to the repeal of the present compulsory laws compelling American ships to carry the mails there was not a single dissenting voice; and so it was upon the other proposition contained in the amendment, by which the Postmaster-General is authorized to contract, after advertisement, by perfectly open bidding, for the carrying of our mails at a rate not exceeding $1 per mile actually traveled upon the high seas, limited also in his total expenditure to a million and a half dollars.

We believed that in that section alone we were doing more for the cause of the American marine, for the building up of our merchant marine, than in all the other sections which are contained in this bill. And I do not hesitate to reiterate my faith that there is more in that one single section than in all the other sections combined; for if the evidence taken by the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress proved anything, it was that the trouble with the American merchant marine to-day was in the cost of running, that it was more expensive to run American vessels with American seamen and American officers than to run foreign vessels; and the question how this difference could be met, how we could encourage our own merchant marine, was answered very largely by this proposition put into this bill.

But, Mr. President, as both of the members of the sub-committee who served with me, the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Missouri, have here publicly on the floor of the Senate abandoned their own child and their own proposition, and have now appealed to me to withdraw even my demand for the yeas and nays, I suppose I must do so. But, Mr. President, there has been no obstruction in my demand for the yeas and nays. I simply desired to test the judgment of the Senate upon this question; but it is looked upon by those two Senators and perhaps by a majority of the Senate that that is obstruction. As I say, the members of the committee who were particularly instrumental in proposing this amendment and putting it on the bill have themselves publicly abandoned it and appealed to me to withdraw my call for the yeas and nays; and although I feel that it is unwise, although I feel that we are sacrificing nearly everything that there is in the bill, I feel bound to yield to their judgment rather than to be found obstructing this bill. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York withdraws his call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I move to consider the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves that notwithstanding the objection the Senate continue the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I offer a privileged report from a conference committee.

The Acting Secretary read the report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 9, 10, 11, 13, 21, 22, 27, 31, 41, 42, and 50.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17½, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 43, 44, 48, 49, 51, and 52; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment insert the following:

"And the salaries due all District employés for current services shall be paid in full, notwithstanding suspensions heretofore made in the accounts of the commissioners of the District by the accounting officers of the Treasury."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,319.43;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"To pay D. F. Murphy, Official Reporter of the Senate, for extra services and for clerk-hire paid out by him, $1,000, for the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert as a new paragraph after said amendment the following:

"To pay Charles Carter for cleaning extra room of Committee on Appropriations, $60."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert as a new paragraph after said amendment the following:

"To pay W. B. Green, for clerical work in completing the records of the Committee on Accounts, a sum equal to one month's pay, $180."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "second" and insert "seventh;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
WM. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to this report?

The report was concurred in.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7061) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, to encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and to amend the laws relating to the shipment and discharge of seamen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, This bill is now before the Senate by a vote of the Senate. As I understand, that takes it out of the limitation of debate imposed by the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. VEST. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to strike out certain words, which will be read.

Mr. BUTLER. Before those words are read, I move that the Anthony rule be applied to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina moves that what is known as the Anthony rule as to the limitation of debate be applied to the consideration of this bill. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment is to strike out, in line 13, page 14, the words:

A sum not exceeding $1 per mile, on the trip each way, of actual nautical miles traveled between terminal points, for each trip actually made.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, upon which the yeas and nays were ordered, but the call was withdrawn. The Secretary will now report the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. That amendment was rejected on a vote of the Senate, and the yeas and nays being withdrawn it stands rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such is the fact. The amendment was rejected by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. COKE. Then section 22 falls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the state of the question.

Mr. COKE. I move that section 15 be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion has been made and carried.

Mr. COKE. I did not know the Chair had declared that motion carried.

Mr. FRYE. Now I move the adoption of the committee's amendment to section 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the committee's amendment to strike out section 13, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Acting Secretary read the section proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

SEC. 13. That all masters and owners of vessels shall have the right to ship and pay off the men they employ, and that all laws or parts of laws requiring the payment of any remuneration to the shipping commission for the shipment of seamen, if shipped by said masters or owners, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That the duties performed by the shipping commissioner at home ports shall be performed by the collector of the several ports of the United States, and that no fee shall be charged for said services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out of section 14 the following words:

SEC. 14. That section 2514 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. What has become of section 22?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 22 was stricken out.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

POSTMASTERS' SALARIES.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the table House bill No. 7611, to adjust the salaries of postmasters. The occasion of it is the change from the 3-cent to the 2-cent postage, and it is very important that the bill pass. I have examined it and most of the committee have, though we have not had a formal meeting. I think there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the next bill on the list, the Dakota land-district bill, take its place first, and then I will yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SAWYER. Why not let this bill go through?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the bill indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin by title.

The Acting Secretary read the title of the bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and it will be read.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAKOTA LAND DISTRICTS.

Mr. PUGH. I ask the consent of the Senate to allow me to call up a House joint resolution, which will not take more than five minutes. I have not before asked the Senate for such a favor.

Several SENATORS. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is objection, it requires a vote of the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. If the Senator will allow one bill to pass I shall not object.

Several SENATORS. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next bill in order under the rule.

The bill (H. R. 7462) to create three additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND ATLANTIC RAILROAD.

The next House bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6625) to authorize the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock in the morning. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. MCMILLAN. We have a few cases left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate take a recess——

Mr. MCMILLAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the motion for the present.

LOUISA F. STONE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next House bill on the Calendar under the rule.

The bill (H. R. 6889) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa F. Stone was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Mrs. Louisa F. Stone, widow of the late Dr. Thomas J. Stone, of $170 for professional services rendered by her late husband to the United States troops stationed at Leonardtown, Maryland, during the months of October and November, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 832) for the relief of Marzel Altmann;

A bill (H. R. 3220) to ratify the issuance of duplicate checks in certain cases by the superintendent of the mint of the United States at San Fransisco;

A bill (H. R. 3243) for the relief of Ernest F. Unland;

A bill (H. R. 6236) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. 7289) to confer upon the senior associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in the absence or inability of the chief-justice of said court, the powers and duties now conferred upon said chief-justice relative to the extradition of fugitives from justice; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 277) providing for a new mixed commission in accordance with the treaty of April 25, 1866, with the United States of Venezuela.

E. S. MONTELL.

The bill (H. R. 4999) for the relief of E. S. Montell, executrix of the estate of James E. Montell, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to E. S. Montell, executrix of the estate of James E. Montell, deceased, of Baltimore, Maryland, $859.20, or so much thereof as the executrix shall prove, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that James E. Montell expended in the purchase of revenue-stamps to stamp seventy-two cases of smoking-tobacco purchased by him from S. Rosenfeld & Co., of Baltimore, upon which a tax had been previously paid under the revenue laws in force at the time of its manufacture and sale, but which was made liable to be stamped under the act of July 20, 1868, thus requiring a double tax on the same tobacco.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. H. MILLER.

The bill (H. R. 6308) for the relief of C. H. Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to C. H. Miller of the sum of $318, being the amount of three Oregon war bonds numbered 860, 861, and 862, for $100 each, and the accrued interest, purchased by him of Patrick Miller, of Portland, Oregon, in 1870, as to which there has been an alleged defective assignment.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES KORTZENBORN.

The bill (H. R. 4926) for the relief of Charles Kortzenborn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Charles Kortzenborn of $125 for the redemption of certain internal-revenue stamps for a special tax which he purchased in the year 1875 and never used; but the stamps are to be delivered to the Treasury Department to be canceled.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAINT VINCENT PORT OF ENTRY.

The bill (H. R. 814) making Saint Vincent, in the State of Minnesota, a port of entry, in lieu of Pembina, in the Territory of Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABBIE SHARP.

The bill (H. R. 306) for the relief of Abbie Sharp was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not reported favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is reported without recommendation. It will be laid aside, not being reported favorably.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to know what the rule is. The rule excludes adverse reports only.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; it includes only favorable reports.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of the Senate was in these words:

First, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending pension bills after the unfinished business is disposed of; second, to House bills reported favorably, commencing at the point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration.

Several SENATORS. Proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill will be reported.

MAIL CONTRACTS.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It validates and declares to be in force the contracts executed by the Postmaster-General for routes numbered 6772, in the State of New York, under advertisement of February 10, 1881; 3266, in the State of Massachusetts, under advertisement of February 10, 1881; 23532, in the State of Illinois, under advertisement of June 20, 1879; 10295, in the District of Columbia, under advertisement of March 10, 1882.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. W. BUTTON.

The bill (H. R. 3842) to pay Charles W. Button the costs of advertising property levied on by the collector of United States internal revenue in the fifth district of the State of Virginia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Charles W. Button, editor and proprietor of the Lynchburgh Virginian, of $80.93, the balance due him on account for advertising the sale of property levied on by E. Boyd Pendleton, late collector of the United States internal revenue for the fifth district of Virginia.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH WESCOTT & SON.

The bill (H. R. 3850) for the relief of Joseph Wescott & Son was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $3,468 for the purpose of paying Joseph Wescott & Son, of Portland, Maine, a balance due to them for cut granite furnished by them, under contract and otherwise, for the construction of two stairways in the east wing of the State, War, and Navy Departments building in Washington, and to reimburse them for cut granite omitted by mistake from their estimates for that contract, and for other granite ordered by the Government independently of said contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT L. M'CONNAUGHEY.

The bill (H. R. 4218) for the relief of Robert L. McConnaughey was read by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was reported to-day. Is there objection to its present consideration? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the payment to Robert L. McConnaughey, of North Carolina, of $200, for carrying the mails in the year 1866 on route No. 5151, in the State of North Carolina.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. DAVID S. BOOTH.

The bill (H. R. 151) for the relief of David S. Booth, M. D., was read by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was reported to-day, and is subject to objection. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the payment to David S. Booth, of Sparta, Randolph County, Illinois, of $1,781.89, in full payment of all claims he may have against the Government of the United States for bounty due him as assistant surgeon on board of the ram Queen of the West on account of the capture and destruction of the rebel vessels A. W. Baker, Moro, Berwick Bay, and City of Vicksburg.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM D. MARTIN.

The bill (H. R. 3837) for the relief of William D. Martin was read by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was reported to-day. Is there objection to its present consideration?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to William D. Martin, of Bedford County, Virginia, $47.25, being the amount of tax assessed and penalty imposed for non-payment thereof, which was collected from and paid by Martin to the collector for the fifth district of Virginia, upon forty-seven gallons of brandy which were swept away and destroyed by a flood in the James River, in November, 1877, and without fault or improper negligence of Martin.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK HORAN.

The bill (H. R. 6501) granting a pension to Patrick Horan was read by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was reported to-day. Is there objection to its present consideration? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read.

Mr. PLATT. Let that bill be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that he was mistaken. The bill was not reported to-day, but was reconsidered to-day and restored to the Calendar. The bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Patrick Horan, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, with the same rate of pension to which a private soldier would be entitled for like disabilities.

Mr. PLATT. Was that reported favorably? It was up the other day and objected to and passed over.

Several SENATORS. Let the report be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL February 27:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 6501, granting a pension to Patrick Horan, have examined the same, and report:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, in the consideration of the above bill, report as follows:

"The petitioner, Patrick Horan, of Joliet, Illinois, was enrolled on or about September 15, 1861, as a teamster of the quartermaster's department, by Captain G. E. D. Diamond, at Saint Louis, Missouri. He was never discharged, but paid last at Fort Riley, Kansas, and sent back to Saint Louis on the 28th of November, 1866.

"While serving as a teamster he was taken prisoner of war at the battle of Poisons Springs, and was confined at Camp Ford, Tyler, Texas, from about April, 1864, to about the middle of February, 1865. While a prisoner he was without shelter or covering of any kind, and in June, 1864, was exposed to a rain-storm of fourteen days' duration. During his confinement he dug a hole in the ground, in which he slept. In consequence of his exposure and suffering he was stricken with paralysis, from which disease he has been suffering to the present time.

"His statement as to his imprisonment, exposure, and incurrence of paralysis in rebel prisons is corroborated by the testimony of Henry B. Clark, himself an inmate of said prisons, and by the testimony of John B. Arnold, of the Chicago Mercantile Battery.

"The evidence also shows that prior to and on his arrival at said prison he was in sound health. The testimony of neighbors, of Joliet, Illinois, shows that upon his return to Joliet, after the war, he was afflicted with paralysis, which has continued to the present time, making him completely unable to perform any physical labor.

"Dr. W. Dougall, of Will County, Illinois, states that since 1874 petitioner has been under his treatment; that he has carefully studied his case; that he is suffering from "locomotor ataxia," caused by exposure and sleeping upon damp ground; that it gradually grows worse; is incurable, and will soon render him entirely helpless. His claim was rejected by the Pension Office, on the ground that petitioner was not in the military service of the United States, and therefore does not come under the general provisions of the pension law; but the Pension Bureau is of opinion that his claim is a meritorious one and should be allowed by "special act;" and that, if such special act is granted, the pension should commence from the date of its passage at such rate as the claimant, upon examination, may be found to be entitled to.

"Your committee find the facts set forth in the above report substantially correct. There can be no doubt from the evidence on file that his disability originated while in the discharge of his duties as teamster in the Quartermaster's Department; in other words, he was performing actual service for the Government and while so engaged became permanently disabled, and, as is stated by examining surgeons, "he is incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor," and "his disease is incurable."

"Your committee believe this to be a meritorious case, and in justice the claimant should receive the relief asked for, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. PLATT. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut objects to the consideration of the bill. Under the rule it goes over.

SAMUEL CHASE BARNEY.

Mr. GROOME. This morning, upon the objection of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], a bill upon the Calendar, No. 1022 in the Order of Business, went over. The Senator from Illinois has since examined the bill and no longer objects. I ask that it may now be taken up and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 660) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent to go back on the Calendar and take up a bill, the title of which has just been read. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 660) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney.

Mr. GROOME. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the word "that," in line 3, and insert——

Mr. MORRILL. Is there a report in that case? If there is I should like to hear it.

Mr. GROOME. There is a voluminous report made by the committee of the House at this Congress. The Senator from Illinois, who objected this morning, has examined that report carefully and is satisfied that the bill ought to pass in its amended form.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like a brief statement of the facts.

Mr. GROOME. I made a statement this morning to the Senate, but I can make it again if required.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to know what the bill means.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "that," in line 3, and insert:

The President be, and he hereby is, authorized, if he deems it proper, to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Samuel Chase Barney, late a lieutenant in the United States Navy, to be a lieutenant in the Navy on the retired-list, and from and after his appointment he shall be entitled to the pay of a retired lieutenant of the Navy, but the said Samuel Chase Barney shall not receive any pay or allowance for the period between his dismissal from the Navy and his reappointment by authority of this act.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator from Maryland ought to state what this man was dismissed from the Navy for.

Mr. GROOME. I will state that in a single word. This gentleman was unfortunate in his marital relations and his wife obtained a divorce from him and the custody of the children. After her death litigation ensued about the guardianship of the children, and the father took possession of them after a decree of the circuit court that a decision of the orphan's court giving another party the guardianship was coram non judice and that the father was entitled to the guardianship. That act of the father was misrepresented to the President of the United States in such terms that he summarily dismissed the officer. This bill is to reinstate him, and thus to right as far as may be the wrong which was done him and which, so far as the President was concerned, was doubtless done unintentionally.

Mr. HAWLEY. Was there a court-martial?

Mr. MORRILL. When were the facts ascertained?

Mr. GROOME. It never could be ascertained until 1876, when Mr. Robeson was Secretary of the Navy, what the cause of the dismissal was. The officer demanded the cause in a few days after the dismissal, but could get no reply to his communication and never did ascertain the cause until Mr. Robeson informed him in answer to inquiries made by him that the only cause ascertainable by the records of the office was certain letters making charges against him of misconduct in taking possession of his children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. PUGH. I now ask the Senate to take up the House joint resolution 338.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take up a House resolution, which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read by its title the joint resolution (H. Res. 338) in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States, for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made.

Mr. INGALLS. Has that been read before?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read twice, once to-day, and is subject to objection.

Mr. INGALLS. I object until there is some explanation made.

Mr. PUGH. The resolution explains all the facts on its face. Dr. Read claims that he was the inventor of the present system of projectiles and that the Government of the United States, under a contract with the Secretary of War, tried experiments with the projectiles and that they went into use in the Government service and are now in use by the Government. He claims that under that contract he was to receive such compensation as a board of Army officers, appointed by the Secretary of War, should find that he was entitled to upon all the facts. This is a resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint that board with power to investigate and report all the facts and the value of the projectiles to the Government, if any; what use was made of them by the Government, if any, and to report all the evidence to the next Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. I have an indistinct recollection, Mr. President, that some claimant of this name (whether it is the same individual or not I do not know) had an invention of this kind that he sold to the confederate government and subsequently himself went into the rebel service, which he had an entire right to do if he saw fit. If this is the same individual and the same claim and it is a fact that his invention was used by the enemies of the Government of the United States by his consent and procurement, I should hesitate some time to give my consent to the resolution.

Mr. PUGH. I ask the Senate to allow the investigation to be made by this board of all the facts in regard to it and in reference to the character of the claim The use that the Government has made of the invention does not conclude the Government against making any inquiry when this board makes its report. It is a matter open for all time.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator state to me who Dr. Read is?

Mr. PUGH. He lives in the city of Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

Mr. INGALLS. Was the invention used in the confederate army?

Mr. PUGH. I understand that it was.

Mr. INGALLS. And sold by him?

Mr. PUGH. I do not know whether there was a sale or an appropriation by the confederate government without his consent or with it. I understand that it was used and that it has been in use by the Government of the United States since the close of the war and before, and that it is now in the use of the Government.

Mr. INGALLS. If Dr. Read should succeed in securing compensation from the Government of the United States after having sold his invention to the Confederate States and having it employed against the United States he would be a very fortunate man.

Mr. PUGH. I do not claim that he is entitled to anything under the report of the board until Congress allows it to him upon the evidence that is found by the board.

Mr. INGALLS. I think I shall object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas objects. The resolution can not be further considered.

CLARA WIBLE.

Mr. VAN WYCK. From the Committee on Pensions I desire to report two House bills which should have been reported a few days ago and placed upon the Calendar. I ask consent to report them at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to report at this time two bills from the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. 3267) granting a pension to Clara Wible was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Clara Wible, widow of John M. Wible, deceased, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has it been considered in committee?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It has been considered in committee and is reported by the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it a short report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read for information.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3267) granting a pension to Clara Wible, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The facts are substantially stated in the House report, which your committee adopts as its own, including recommendations thereof:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3267) granting a pension to Clara Wible, has had the same under consideration, and begs leave to submit the following report:

"The claimant is the widow of John M. Wible, who, according to the evidence before this committee, was killed in an engagement with the forces of the confederate general, John Morgan, at Salem, Indiana, July 10, 1863.

"Wible belonged to a command composed of citizens of Orange, Harrison, and Washington Counties, Indiana, under the command of Major J. A. Cravens, organized to repel the invasion of the State by said Morgan.

"Major Cravens and others testify to the death of John M. Wible at the time, place, and circumstances above set forth.

"The command was not mustered into the service of the United States, and therefore the widow is not entitled to pension under the general pension laws. Congress, however, has granted relief in similar cases by special legislation, and, being of opinion that this is a case equally meritorious, the committee reports favorably on the bill and asks that it do pass."

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN GLENN.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I send up the other bill. The facts are substantially the same as in the other case. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2294) granting a pension to John Glenn. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Glenn, late a member of the Indiana State Militia, who was wounded and disabled in the Morgan raid in July, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to have somebody on the committee explain to us a little about that case. During the raids of John Morgan and others there were a great number of citizens of Ohio and adjoining States who turned out to repel the invasion. I found it a little difficult to say a word against a pension to the widow of a man who was killed, but here is a pension for a man who was wounded in repelling one of those raids. If the Committee on Pensions say it is all right I shall make no particular objection any further. But there were thousands of people who turned out any length of time from one up to three or four weeks all over that country, and finally Morgan went back. It is a little difficult to tell where the line is to be drawn. Perhaps not everybody who got sick during those few weeks should have a pension. I will not object if the Committee on Pensions say it is right.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The committee have reported it, sir.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. No. 1089 in the Order of Business is precisely similar to a bill that was passed by the Senate and sent to the House and is now on the Speaker's table there. This bill has been reported favorably from the Committee on Territories. It was passed over on the objection of the Senator from Kansas; but the Senator from Connecticut assures me that the Senator from Kansas has withdrawn his objection. I therefore ask that the bill he taken up and passed. It will only take a second.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1926) to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes so as not to exclude retired Army officers from holding civil office in the Territories.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I hope not at this moment.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will yield for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MEMORIAL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, in the chair) presented a memorial of the Legislature of Montana in regard to the military reservation at Fort Keogh; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

YACHTS.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1226) to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, relating to yachts, have instructed me to report it back without amendment and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read:

SEC. 4214. The Secretary of the Treasury may cause yachts, used and employed exclusively as pleasure vessels or designed as models of naval architecture, if built and owned in compliance with the provisions of sections 4133 to 4135, to be licensed on terms which will authorize them to proceed from port to port in the United States, and by sea to foreign ports, without entering or clearing at the custom-house. Such license shall be in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The owner of any such vessel, before taking out such license, shall give a bond in such form and for such amount as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, conditioned that the vessel shall not engage in any trade, nor in any way violate the revenue laws of the United States, and shall comply with the laws in all other respects. Such vessels, so enrolled and licensed, shall not be allowed to transport merchandise or carry passengers for pay. Such vessels shall have their name and port placed on some conspicuous portion of their hulls. Such vessels shall in all respects, except as above, be subject to the laws of the United States, and shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture for any violation of the provisions of this title: Provided, That all charges for license and inspection fees for any pleasure vessel or yacht shall not exceed $5, and for admeasurement shall not exceed 10 cents per ton.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRAIN-SHOVEL PATENT.

Mr. CALL. I have a motion here to which I think there will be no objection from any quarter. On the 29th day of May, 1882, I asked the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 1057) for the relief of George Milsom, Henry Spendelow, and George V. Watson was indefinitely postponed. The bill was postponed upon the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who consents now, inasmuch as no further action can be had, that it shall be reconsidered. I ask unanimous consent, so that it may come before another Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks for a reconsideration.

Mr. CALL. There is no objection to the reconsideration. It is simply in order that the parties may come before the next Congress without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not understand what advantage a reconsideration would give them in the next Congress. That patent has been quite fully discussed. It is an application for the renewal of a patent, which has been discussed here and rejected.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the patent?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is the grain-shovel patent.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Connecticut sees any advantage to any one in opposing the motion, I have made it at the request of the Senator from New York and other parties, and if there is objection to it I will withdraw it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I voted against that on my best judgment and after much consideration. I feel bound to object.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask, Mr. President, to take up the Senate resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections for the relief of Mrs. Underwood, widow of John C. Underwood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir; there is objection.

Mr. LAPHAM. I hope not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An objection carries over.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask permission to take from the table a House bill which will take but a moment. It is in relation to a bridge.

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not understand that an objection carries the Underwood resolution over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves to take up the Underwood resolution.

Mr. LAPHAM. If there is a bill under consideration, I will wait until that is disposed of.

Mr. COCKRELL. The case is simply this——

Mr. LOGAN. Let my bill be acted on.

Mr. LAPHAM. I will wait until the bill is disposed of.

ILLINOIS RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill called up by the Senator from Illinois will be reported.

Mr. LOGAN. It was reported yesterday and I have had it lying on the table, and I ask it to be taken up. Three bills came over from the House, one for the Missouri River, which has been passed, one for the Connecticut River, which has been passed, and this for the Illinois, which has not yet been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was referred, but has it been reported back? The Secretary says not.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to discharge the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not referred, the Secretary says. It is lying on the table, having been read twice.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7148) to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within five miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within five miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYTLE MONUMENT.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 6408) granting eight condemned cannon to be used in the erection of a statue to the memory of General William H. Lytle, of Ohio.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is an adverse report.

Mr. PENDLETON. I hope there will be no objection.

Several SENATORS (to Mr. COCKRELL). Do not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. Justice is justice, and right is right. There have been about one hundred of these bills reported adversely and postponed indefinitely. If this is taken up I shall insist on reconsidering all of them and having them all passed and having the Senate go back upon its record and upon the record of the committee. I object.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will agree to take up anything the Senator wants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri objects; therefore the bill is not before the Senate.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move to take up the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The bill was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill was reported adversely; it was postponed indefinitely; and that vote was by consent reconsidered, not for the purpose of being passed. There was no such intimation; and I say to the Senator from Ohio if he had intimated that that was the purpose of the reconsideration it would not have been reconsidered. Now, it is not fair, it is not right, that the Senator should come in at this time and undertake to pass it in such a style.

Mr. PENDLETON. A bill is never reconsidered for the purpose of not being passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri objects; and the Senator from Ohio moves that the bill be considered notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6408) granting eight condemned cannon to be used in the erection of a statue to the memory of General William H. Lytle, of Ohio.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move an amendment. I ask the Secretary to get the record of all these other bills that were postponed, so that I can offer them all as amendments to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not all together?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will offer each one separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills are not here.

Mr. COCKRELL. A page can go to the document-room and get all the condemned-cannon bills, every one of them. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is deeply interested in one of these bills, and he had it put on the Calendar, so that it has not been indefinitely postponed. That is Senate bill 2321.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate postpone this for a moment until these other bills can be got?

Mr. HAMPTON. I move to postpone this bill temporarily with a view of making a motion.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will not object to a temporary postponement.

TENEDORE TEN EYCK.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 1745.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1745) to authorize the President to restore Tenedore Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army, and to place him upon the retired-list of Army officers.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. HAMPTON. There is a report.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear it read.

Mr. HAMPTON. I will read the report, and I beg to say to the Senate that it is the unanimous report of the Military Committee:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1745) to authorize the President to restore Tenedore Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army, and to place him upon the retired-list of Army officers, beg leave to report:

That an examination of the papers shows the following facts: Captain Ten Eyck entered the volunteer service as a private, and was commissioned as a captain in the Eighteenth United States Infantry in 1862. In 1863 he was brevetted major, United States Army, for gallant conduct, and at the battle of Chickamauga he was taken prisoner. After his exchange he rejoined his regiment, serving with it on the western frontier until 1871, when he was dropped from the rolls under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 15, 1870. As a general rule the committee have not recommended the restoration to the Army of officers dropped under the operation of this act, and they make an exception in the case of Captain Ten Eyck only for the following reasons:

In 1870, while on sick leave, and a confirmed invalid on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty, he was ordered before a medical board for examination, with a view to retirement. This board, composed of two Army surgeons, while admitting the chronic character of the disease from which Major Ten Eyck was suffering, reported him as, in their opinion, fit for duty. But his health has not been restored, and certificates from a large number of prominent physicians, laid before the committee, show that from the time of his examination to the present he has been a great sufferer and a confirmed invalid. This fact indicates that the examining board were mistaken in the opinion they expressed, that Major Ten Eyck would be fit for duty. Subsequent events have shown that his health had been permanently impaired at the time of his examination, and that he can look for no improvement in the future. In view of these facts your committee regard this case as an exceptional one, where justice requires that Major Ten Eyck should be placed on the retired-list. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill as amended by adding in the twelfth line the words "and provided further that he shall receive no pension from and after the passage of this act."

Now, Mr. President, I simply have one word to say. The certificates brought before the committee from the most distinguished surgeons prove that Major Ten Eyck was at the time of his examination a confirmed invalid, and he is now probably on his death-bed. I am told that he will hardly live until he can be placed on the retired-list. As this is a unanimous report from the committee, I ask the indulgence of the Senate, and request that the bill may be passed.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs was to add to the bill:

And provided further, That he shall receive no pension from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYTLE MONUMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves an amendment to the bill of the Senator from Ohio, which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to deliver, if the same can be done without detriment to the Government, to the Dubuque Veteran Corps, Dubuque, Iowa, four condemned cast-iron cannon and twenty cannon-balls, to be placed on their lot in the Linwood Cemetery.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hoped that when the bill called up by the Senator from Ohio was taken up the Senate would quietly content itself with voting it down; but I confess that the Senator from Missouri is quite right in principle in desiring to add all the rest of the rejected bills. The Committee on Military Affairs, as I think the Senate has been informed several times, inquired into this matter and was entirely willing that these various people erecting monuments should have their condemned cannon if there were such on hand.

We found on inquiry there were no more left of the kind adapted to this use. I told the Senate the other day that there are a large number of old cannon still at some of the forts and some of the stations near the cities which are so large that nobody will carry them away. The Government does not transport them and deliver them. It merely gives permission under these bills for people to go and get them. There are no cannon left, and we have been denying a large number of these applications. I have assisted in denying one from my own State. I explained the state of facts and it has been accepted gracefully by the people concerned. Now I hope the Senate will vote the whole thing down.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to inquire whether the adverse report on all the bills for giving condemned cannon all through the country was made with any reference to having four left for this bill?

Mr. PLATT. This was reported adversely.

Mr. HAWLEY. This was reported adversely and indefinitely postponed, but a motion to reconsider was made.

Mr. CONGER. It would look a little as if the adverse report upon all the rest would leave an opening for somebody to come in now. If that is the case, I should like to know it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. HAWLEY. If there be nobody else to do it, I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. PENDLETON. I hope that will not be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] moves to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate take a recess for fifteen minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.) took a recess until 4 o'clock, at which time it reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 301) for the relief of Stephen P. Yeomans and Andrew Leech;

A bill (H. R. 6683) to authorize the construction of bridges over the Ogeechee, Oconee, Ocmulgee, Flint, and Chattahoochee Rivers, in the State of Georgia; and

A bill (H. R. 6930) to levy an assessment of the real estate in the District of Columbia in the year 1883, and every third year thereafter, for purposes of taxation.

RECESS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am just informed by an officer of the House that the sundry civil bill has only just got to the House. I think we had better take a recess for ten minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we may take a recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Allow me to introduce a resolution first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate take a recess for fifteen minutes.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 13, noes 7.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll. Having called three names without a response,

Mr. HAWLEY. No one has answered to his name. I ask leave by unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I only asked the privilege of submitting a resolution, to which the Senator objected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Connecticut to ask leave to withdraw his motion?

Mr. HAWLEY. I was going to ask unanimous consent to withdraw it in the interest of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not require unanimous consent. It can be withdrawn by leave of the Senate, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HAWLEY. I withdraw it, if I may do so by the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the Senator from Connecticut have leave to withdraw his motion for a recess? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded? Only two Senators rising, not one-fifth of the Senators present, the yeas and nays are not ordered. The motion for a recess is withdrawn.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I call up the conference report on the sundry civil bill and ask the Senate to adopt it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the conference report on the sundry civil bill, so called, be now taken up. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 26, 31, 38, 40, 43, 56, 57, 58, 67, 73, 74, 77, 83, 84, 88, 89, 90, 91, 99, 102, 112, 116, 119, and 135.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, 27, 28, 30, 32, 35, 39, 41, 42, 48, 49, 51, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 70, 71, 72, 75, 76, 78, 81, 85, 86, 87, 93, 94, 95, 96, 100, 101, 103, 105, 106, 108, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, and 134, and agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 2 and 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$1,500" insert "$1,800;" and in lieu of "$2,500" insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$630,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and strike out in line 6, page 10 of the bill, the word "ten" and insert "seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and in line 8, page 10 of the bill, strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 35, line 10 of the bill, after the word "approved," insert "March 3;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$275,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$60,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 82: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$425,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert:

"For the purpose of procuring the assent of the Sioux Indians as provided by article 12 of the treaty between the United States and the different bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians made and concluded April 29, 1868, to agreement made with said Sioux Indians transmitted to the Senate February 3, 1883, by the President, with such modification of said agreement as will fully secure to them a title to the land remaining in the several reservations set apart to them by said agreement, and to the Santee Sioux the proceeds of that portion of their separate reservation not allotted in severalty, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and in line 10, page 10 of the bill, strike out "1,000" and insert "700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and strike out after the word "dollars," in line 26, page 21 of the bill, down to and including line 4, page 22; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"FOR THE NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

"For compensation and personal expenses of members of the board, $10,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert "for the enlargement and construction of such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $200,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$42,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 16, page 33 of the bill, after the word "law," insert "and exclusive of officers detailed for Arctic Sea service;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of "forty-five" insert "twenty-five," and after the word "mules," in line 14, page 34 of the bill, insert the words "and six horses;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$4,500" insert "$3,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$57,651.75;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 118: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,402,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 132 and 133: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 132 and 133, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendments insert:

"To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, borne on the annual and session rolls, on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month's extra pay at the rate of compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

"That a joint commission consisting of three Senators, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and three members-elect of the Forty-eighth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall during the recess of Congress consider the question of the salaries and compensation of the officers and employés of the Senate and House, respectively; and also the number of such employés necessary for the official transaction of the business of the two Houses, and shall report to the two Houses on the second Monday of December next their conclusions with reference to the whole subject, and shall recommend legislation respecting the same, if in their judgment any legislation is necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
FRANK HISCOCK,
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. INGALLS. Upon the Calendar is a joint resolution (H. Res. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay. It was read twice and referred to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate August 2, 1882, and reported August 8, 1882, by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], from that committee. For some reason the Senator from Iowa is unwilling to call up the joint resolution, and requests me to do it. As all the other employés have received additional compensation, I can see no reason why the same benefaction should not be extended to the members of the Capitol police. I therefore ask that the joint resolution may receive the action of the Senate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the joint resolution be read the third time? [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it. The "noes" have it; and the third reading of the joint resolution is refused.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate take a recess until the hour of 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes a. m., Sunday, March 4) the Senate took a recess until 10 o'clock a. m.

MORNING SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 10 o'clock on Sunday, March 4). The recess having expired, the Senate resumes its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 138) concerning the erection of a memorial column at Washington's Headquarters at Newburgh, New York.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 367) making appropriations for the alteration of internal-revenue dies, plates, and stamps, and for providing blanks for rebate; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 8,000 extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Forestry.

The message announced that the House insisted on its amendments to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. R. T. VAN HORN of Missouri, Mr. JOHN A. ANDERSON of Kansas, and Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, the managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 151) for the relief of David S. Booth, M. D.;

A bill (H. R. 814) making Saint Vincent, in the State of Minnesota, a port of entry in lieu of Pembina, in the Territory of Dakota;

A bill (H. R. 1226) to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, relating to yachts;

A bill (H. R. 1926) to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes so as not to exclude retired Army officers from holding civil office in the Territories;

A bill (H. R. 2294) granting a pension to John Glenn;

A bill (H. R. 3837) for the relief of William D. Martin;

A bill (H. R. 3850) for the relief of Joseph Wescott & Son;

A bill (H. R. 3267) granting a pension to Clara Wible;

A bill (H. R. 3842) to pay Charles W. Button the costs of advertising property levied on by the collector of United States internal revenue in the fifth district of the State of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. 4218) for the relief of Robert L. McConnaughey;

A bill (H. R. 4926) for the relief of Charles Kortzenborn;

A bill (H. R. 4999) for the relief of E. S. Montell, executrix of the estate of James E. Montell;

A bill (H. R. 6308) for the relief of C. H. Miller;

A bill (H. R. 6889) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa F. Stone;

A bill (H. R. 7148) to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within five miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within five miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois;

A bill (H. R. 7462) to create three additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General.

PREPARATION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE DIES, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution received from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 367) making appropriations for the alteration of internal-revenue dies, plates, and stamps, and for providing blanks for rebate, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. The resolution just read is one that ought to pass at this session. I ask that it may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the House joint resolution the title of which has just been read be now taken up for consideration. Is there objection?

The joint resolution was read the second time at length and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. This is made necessary by the passage of the internal-revenue bill yesterday.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, last session the House of Representatives passed a joint resolution, No. 281, and yesterday or this morning early I understand that it was called up and voted down without much consideration. The fact is that all the employés at both ends of the Capitol have been allowed an extra month's compensation except the Capitol police. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask the Senate to reconsider its decision this morning and put this resolution on its passage. I believe it to be right and just that the Capitol police should be treated as all others have been treated here.

I ask that the vote of this morning rejecting the joint resolution be reconsidered.

Mr. LAPHAM. I only desire to add that this resolution proceeds on the supposition that the Capitol police are entitled first of all others to the consideration of having an extra month's pay, and I trust the motion to reconsider will prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the vote of the Senate taken to-day by which the third reading of this House joint resolution was refused be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote is reconsidered. The joint resolution will now be read for information.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the joint resolution be read the third time?

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply mean to say that I want to vote against the proposition, but I do not intend to call for the yeas and nays. I am opposed to all these propositions introduced in the last hours of the session to appropriate money out of the Treasury to pay people for services they have not rendered, or rather to pay them for time in which they have not worked, and to increase their pay under the name of a nominal bounty by allowing thirty days' additional pay. I simply wish to vote against it. I know it to be ineffective. For many years I know such resolutions have passed, but they are not right.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have usually, perhaps uniformly, voted with the Senator from Ohio in the direction he now indicates; but here is a distinction, and a very broad one. The entire force of the Capitol at both ends have been allowed an extra month's salary, but the police in some way have been omitted. This resolution was passed, it will be seen by reference to it, by the House at the last session and sent over here and recommended unanimously by the Committee on Appropriations. I am this morning directed by that committee to call it up, believing it to be just. I agree with the Senator from Ohio, and I am glad to say that the Committee on Appropriations at the two ends of the Capitol have now come to the conclusion that hereafter they will prevent this, and make the practice more uniform generally, directing by law what shall be paid, and when it shall be paid, and not have these continual extras at the end of the session. This ought to pass.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will simply say that that virtuous resolution has been announced on the passage of every measure of this kind for the last twenty years; the next year they will not do it, and they will never do it again, and yet every year at the end of the session appeals of this kind are brought to Senators and we yield.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand it is proposed to make a law for the future. I hope there will be no change of it and no resolution to give extra allowances hereafter. This is meritorious and ought to pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the joint resolution to a third reading.

The resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIST OF PENSIONERS.

Mr. BECK. The Secretary of the Interior sent us on the first instant, and it is now on our table, a response to a resolution calling for an alphabetical list of the pensioners on the roll January 1, 1883. I want to call it up and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky presents from the Committee on Appropriations a communication from the Secretary of the Interior on the subject of alphabetical lists of pensioners and moves that it be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer the following resolution from the Committee on Pensions:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be continued as now constituted until the first Monday of December next, and that it have authority to sit during the vacation to consider bills to revise the pension laws and continue the examination ordered by the Senate as to extortion by agents or attorneys in pension and other claims, and shall have power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer; and the expenses shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Does that come from the committee through its chairman?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not informed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The chairman is not here.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to be informed, is it the action of the committee?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is the wish of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it the action of the committee?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir, the action of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Have they voted to have this resolution passed?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not by vote, but they have expressed their opinion.

Mr. INGALLS. I then object to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution can not be considered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Committee on Enrolled Bills to correct a clerical error in the bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7327) to establish certain post-routes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CORRECTION OF A BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks unanimous consent to lay before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives on the subject of correcting an error in an enrolled bill.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and they are hereby, authorized to correct a clerical error in the bill of the House (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters, by inserting after the word "two" the word "hundred," under the third class, where the gross receipts do not exceed $2,700.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive business the doors were reopened.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FORESTRY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a House concurrent resolution, which will be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 8,000 extra copies of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Forestry, transmitted to the House in May last by the Commissioner of Agriculture; 5,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 copies for the Commissioner of Forestry.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I hope it will be considered at once.

Mr. ANTHONY. It may as well be considered at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island can report it.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. LAPHAM. Pursuant to notice I gave last night I move to call up the resolution for the relief of Mrs. Underwood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the Calendar, under the Anthony rule. The Senator from New York moves to lay aside the Calendar for the purpose of taking up the resolution he has indicated.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope it will not be done. It will take all morning and nothing else will be done.

Mr. LAPHAM. It can not take but a little time. I trust it will be done.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Before that is called up, I ask consent to take up the House resolution about printing the forestry report and act upon it. I did not understand that anybody objected to it.

Mr. LAPHAM. I did not design to interfere with that.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FORESTRY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that under the statute there should be the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That reference has been made. Is the committee ready to report.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the report.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that this resolution comes to us too late for us to get an estimate, although we have an idea of what the cost of the work will be. It is very late to send us resolutions for printing of this kind; but I have consulted my colleagues on the committee, and they have concluded to report it favorably without amendment and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] now moves to lay aside the Calendar.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to say one word before this motion is put. This resolution, which is a Senate resolution, coming from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, grants the widow of the late John C. Underwood——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the resolution to which the Senator refers is a Senate resolution now upon the Calendar. He is entitled, therefore, to call it up without laying the Calendar aside under the regular order.

Mr. LAPHAM. I supposed that was so, and I asked to take it up with that view. Now I desire to say in reference to it that this is a resolution for the relief of the widow of the late Judge Underwood, of Virginia. He was chosen, by what was known as the Peirpont government, one of the Senators to represent that State in this body. Mr. Segar and Judge Underwood were elected at the same time. Neither of them was ever permitted to take a seat in the Senate, and yet the government which chose them was the recognized government of the State of Virginia for more than two years. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON], now a member of this body, was appointed a judge by that government and administered justice in that State for a period of nearly two years. Judge Underwood died, leaving a widow and a daughter, and they are in needy circumstances. They ask now simply that the amount of money which he expended in good faith in his efforts to secure a seat here shall be reimbursed by this resolution. I can not see why any one can object to it. There are repeated instances in the history of this body in which members of the House of Representatives, who were receiving their pay as members of Congress during all the time, have been granted compensation for their efforts to secure seats here which were unavailing. The books are full of precedents in favor of just such relief as is asked in this case; and in the case of Mr. Segar, who was chosen at the same time with Judge Underwood, the same committee, the Committee on Privileges and Elections of this body, reported in his favor two years ago that he should be paid the sum of $5,000 to cover his expenses while he was making his efforts to secure a seat here.

There is another precedent, and a very striking one, and that grows out of the election of Hon. George Vickers, a Senator from Maryland, set by the Senate in 1872. I have the report of the committee of this body signed by Judge Thurman, Mr. Rice, Mr. Carpenter, Mr. Hill, and Mr. ANTHONY—a report made, if I remember aright, by Mr. Thurman from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The committee state the question raised by the following letter:

JUNE 8, 1872.

Hon. HENRY B. ANTHONY,
President pro tempore of the Senate:

Hon. Philip Francis Thomas was elected to the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of Maryland, for six years, commencing on the 4th of March, 1867, and ending on the 4th of March, 1873.

Mr. Thomas was not admitted to his seat, and did not receive any compensation from the United States.

On the 7th of March, 1868, George Vickers was elected to the Senate for the balance of the term, ending March 4, 1873.

Under the late decision made in the case of Hon. Mr. RANSOM, of North Carolina, am I not entitled to compensation from March 4, 1867, to March 4, 1868?

GEORGE VICKERS.

And they report—

That, according to the practice of each House of Congress since the passage of the act of July 12, 1862, Mr. Vickers was entitled to pay commencing March 4, 1867. His case differs in no essential particular from that of Mr. RANSOM, Senator from North Carolina, in which this construction of the act was approved by the Senate at the present session. But Mr. Vickers did not draw his pay for the year commencing March 4, 1867, to which he was entitled.

Your committee report the following resolution and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That George Vickers, a Senator from Maryland, is entitled to receive pay as such for the year commencing March 4, 1867.

A. G. THURMAN.
B. F. RICE.
M. H. CARPENTER.
JOSHUA HILL.
H. B. ANTHONY.

There is a much stronger case than this. Now it is said that Judge Underwood held the office of district judge in the State of Virginia during the period covered by his efforts to secure a seat here. What of that? Suppose he did hold such office. He had a right to choose between continuing in that office and becoming a Senator, and he had a right to make all reasonable and proper efforts to secure his seat here, which of course would have vacated his office of judge. If he spent his salary in an honest effort to secure his seat here, as this report finds he did, why should he not be reimbursed?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this is a very strong case; and when we come down to the fact that this amount of money was given to Mr. Segar, who was elected at the same time, it seems to me that the discrimination against this poor widow and her daughter would be an unjust discrimination and reflect discredit instead of honor upon the Senate.

Now, I do trust that on this legislative yesterday, a day occurring in a season when, in the opinion of the Christian world the minds of men are chastened and purified, a day given to noble and charitable and patriotic deeds, the Senate will not so far forget itself as to refuse to this widow and her daughter that which was given to the gentleman who was elected with the husband and father at the same time. I trust that even my friend from Missouri, who is so vehement at times in his denunciation against these measures, will remember that this act will reflect credit upon him as well as upon all the rest of us. "So shines a good deed in a naughty world," and I commend the maxim to the consideration of my friend from Missouri.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION FOR 1881.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask leave to submit a report concerning the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks for the present consideration of the conference report made by him. Will the Senate now consider the report? The Chairs hears no objection, and it is before the Senate.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the resolution to print 32,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives numbered 1 and 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendmenf as follows: Insert in lieu of the proposed amendment the word "twelve."

JOS. R. HAWLEY,
H. W. BLAIR,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

R. T. VAN HORN,
SAM. J. RANDALL,
J. C. SHERWIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have some few objections to the passage of this resolution. It will take me an hour or two probably, or more, to get all the data together which will be presented to the Senate before this resolution is acted upon.

Mr. INGALLS. Has the resolution yet been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been read.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not hear it. I should like to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for information.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for the time and expenses of said John C. Underwood in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Virginia.

Mr. INGALLS. Have the committee made any report in writing?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is no report in writing. It was reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections May 19, 1882.

Mr. LAPHAM. Yes, sir, there is a report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a report in writing. Does the Senator from Missouri yield for the reading of the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. LAPHAM May 29, 1882:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the petition of Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, asking payment for salary and mileage of the said John C. Underwood from the 4th of March, 1865, to the 4th of March, 1871, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

That on the 9th day of December, 1864, the petitioner's intestate was duly elected a Senator from the State of Virginia, for the term of six years from the 4th day of March, 1865; that he received a certificate of such election in the words and figures following:

"VIRGINIA, to wit:

"The Legislature of this State having, on the 9th day of December, 1864, in pursuance of the Constitution for the United States, chosen John C. Underwood, esquire, a Senator from this State for six years from the 4th day of March next, I, Francis H. Peirpont, being governor of the Commonwealth, do hereby certify the same to the Senate of the United States.

"Given under my hand and the seal of the Commonwealth this the 14th day of December, 1864.

"[SEAL OF VIRGINIA.] F. H. PEIRPONT.

"By the governor:

"W. J. COWING,

"Secretary of the Commonwealth."

That the said John C. Underwood duly presented his certificate and credentials as aforesaid, on the 9th day of March, 1865, to the Senate of the United States, and made efforts to obtain his seat in the said Senate, traveling from his home in Virginia to the city of Washington from time to time, and incurred a very considerable expenditure of time and money in so doing; that on the same day of the election of said John C. Underwood one Joseph Segar was also duly elected a Senator from said State, and presented his credentials to the Senate; that neither the said Segar nor the said Underwood were admitted to take their seats in the Senate; that the said Segar duly presented his memorial to the Senate during the Forty-fifth Congress, at its second session, asking payment for his salary and mileage as Senator from the 9th of December, 1864, to the 4th of March, 1869, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the committee recommended the passage of a resolution in words and figures following:

"Resolved, That there be allowed and paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Joseph Segar the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for his expenses in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Virginia."

Which resolution was adopted by the Senate, and the amount therein named was paid to the said Segar. The report of the committee in Segar's case contained the following statements:

"If the petitioner had been admitted to the seat which he claimed, his salary and mileage would have amounted to more than $21,000. He was not admitted, and having never performed the duties of a Senator, under the most recent precedent he is not entitled to compensation and mileage as such. By the same precedent, if he prosecuted in good faith and on reasonable grounds a claim for such seat, he should be allowed a moderate compensation for the expenses incurred by him in such prosecution."

On the 23d day of February, 1863, the Legislature of Virginia assembled at Wheeling, in said State, the greater portion of the State, including the city of Richmond, its former seat of government, being then in rebellion, and elected one Bowden a United States Senator from that State. Said Bowden was admitted to his seat, the Senate thereby recognizing the legal existence of the Legislature which elected him. West Virginia, including the city of Wheeling, was then erected into a separate State. The Legislature of Virginia, after such formation of a new State, assembled at the city of Alexandria, and continued the functions of a State Legislature of Virginia. Said Bowden died on the 2d of January, 1864, and said Segar was elected to succeed him at the same time of the election of John C. Underwood, as aforesaid.

The committee in Segar's case further reported as follows:

"The Alexandria government was recognized as a valid State organization by President Lincoln in his amnesty proclamation of December 8, 1863. It gave its constitutional assent to the adoption of the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and its assent is treated by Mr. Seward in his proclamation announcing the adoption of the amendment as necessary thereto.

"Under these circumstances the petitioner was well warranted in presenting his claim to a seat in the Senate. If the practice then prevailing were now acted upon he would receive full salary and mileage. The Senate in the cases of Ray and McMillan, at the present session, preferred to allow to such claimants only a compensation for reasonable and moderate expenses. As this is a new rule, it would be clearly unjust to require of claimants to furnish minute items and vouchers. We think the sum of $5,000 a reasonable and moderate allowance to Mr. Segar for three years' prosecution of his claim. We therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying resolution."

The cases of said Underwood and Segar are alike in all respects, except the terms for which they were chosen. It is true no actual service as Senator was rendered by either, but each stood ready to perform his duties whenever the Senate should allow it; that the said Underwood performed no such service was the fault of the Senate, not his. The precedents fully justify the allowance to said Segar and the allowance asked by the petitioner. The House of Representatives has frequently paid large sums of money to unsuccessful contestants for seats in that body; and the Senate, at the same session during which the allowance was made to Segar, also paid Messrs. Ray and McMillan, and has also paid two claimants for seats from the State of Georgia, although none of them were allowed to occupy their seats in the Senate. The valuable services rendered by said Underwood to the Government in its struggle for national supremacy are matters of history and need not here be repeated. We think the sum allowed and paid to Mr. Segar is a precedent which should be followed in this case, and recommend the passage of the accompanying resolution:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for the time and expenses of the said John C. Underwood in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Virginia.

COMPILATION OF TARIFF LAWS.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to offer an order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following order.

Ordered, That the Committee on Finance of the Senate prepare a compilation and index of existing tariff laws, together with tabulated comparative statements of the rates of duties and imposts under the several tariff acts since the organization of the Government; and such other statistics relating thereto as the committee may deem proper.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to amend that so as to include the rates under the existing tariff act just passed.

Mr. MORRILL. This will include that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it is all right.

The order was agreed to.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to the administratrix of John C. Underwood.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask that the memorial of Mrs. Underwood be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield to listen to the memorial. These things will have to be read anyway.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Memorial of Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of J. C. Underwood.

The undersigned, a citizen of Virginia, respectfully asks your attention to these facts:

On the 8th day of December, 1864, John C. Underwood was elected United States Senator by the Virginia Legislature (see credentials on file in the secretary's office) for the term of six years from March 4, 1865. He at once presented his credentials, and as in duty bound to his State and himself made the usual effort to obtain the seat, and in passing hither and thither between the seat of Government and his home in Virginia incurred necessarily very considerable expenditure of time and money.

Now, as the action of the Senate induced his election as Senator by the Alexandria Legislature, and this expenditure and expectation, is not the Senate responsible for it, and bound alike in consistency and justice to make some indemnity?

This seems the manifest equity, if not the law of the case. Nor is precedent wanting. The House of Representatives very recently voted $5,000 to each of four unsuccessful contestants. And the Senate itself paid the two Georgia claimants, though they had not occupied seats for a moment; and the Senate has paid Messrs. McMillan and Ray of Louisiana their expenses, and Hon. Joseph Segar, who was elected on the same day and by the same Legislature as your memorialist's husband, the sum of $5,000, the Senate committee having, without division, reported that resolution.

The Supreme Court, too, in the case of Virginia vs. West Virginia, has affirmed the legality of the Wheeling or West Virginia government, and in doing that it settled also the legitimacy of the Alexandria government; for the two are in principle, origin, progress, and result as identical as any two human things can by possibility be, the latter being, indeed, a fac-simile or duplicate of the former.

The State of West Virginia, formed of and by the loyal people of Northwest Virginia separating from the old State, which had seceded, is styled by the court "the new-born State;" and in reciting the creation and history of the "State of West Virginia," it says: "The first step taken in this matter was taken by the organic convention of the State of Virginia, which, in 1861, reorganized that State and formed for it what was known as the 'Peirpoint government,' an organization which was recognized by the President and by Congress as the State of Virginia, and which passed the four statutes set forth in the exhibits in the bill of complaint."

Under this government we lived from May, 1863, till it was supplanted by military rule, in 1867, under the reconstruction acts, and under it we had the blessings of a well-ordered, peaceful, and free government. We had a judiciary worthy of the palmiest days of Virginia. In her court of appeals she had Judges Joynes and Moncure, the peers of Spencer Roane, John Wickham, and Daniel Call, while in her circuit courts she had jurists who would do honor to any government. One of them was JOHN W. JOHNSTON, now one of her Senators in Congress.

A government that was formed under circumstances so interesting and honorable deserves respect, sympathy, and admiration.

A government is a government, and a State a State, without regard to size. The little State of Delaware, scarcely equal in extent to a single county in Virginia, is as much and as proud a State as her empire sister, New York, just (to use an illustration of Vattel) as a "dwarf is as much a man as a giant, and the smallest republic as much a state as the greatest empire."

But the one basis on which this claim immovably stands is, that the action of the exalted body invited him to seek and to accept, through the Alexandria legislature, a seat in this body. Its faith is plighted and ought to be sacredly observed. Public faith has been denominated the philosophy of nations, and in the judgment of your memorialist the Senate is as much bound in honor to do all it can to allow your memorialist pay to the time the Alexandria government was superseded by the reconstruction measures, as it is to pay the interest on the public debt.

Hon. John C. Underwood performed no actual service as Senator, it is true; neither did the two Georgia Senators who were fully paid. But he was ready to do the duties of a Senator whenever the Senate should allow him. That he did not was their fault, not his.

For these several reasons, the action of the Senate itself, the recognition by Congress of the basis of the claim, the obligations of the public faith, and, lastly, the opinion of the Supreme Court, whose decisions are to all wise and good citizens the highest of American law, your memorialist respectfully asks your honorable bodies to make her, as administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, such allowance as to them in equity and good conscience shall seem fit. Whether she shall receive a session's pay, or pay until the termination of the Alexandria government, or any at all, she submits to your judgment.

MARIA G. UNDERWOOD, Administratrix.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this resolution the Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

SALARY OF COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT CHICAGO.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask, before the Senator from Missouri proceeds, to make a report from the Committee on Finance on the bill (H. R. 6682) to fix the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. If there be no objection I ask for the consideration of that bill. This is a bill to reduce the salary of the collector of customs at Chicago, and it is only about ten lines. I should be very glad if the Senate would allow it to be acted on. It has been in that committee for a year. The salary is now paid in fees, which amounts to sometimes twice the amount of this. This fixes the salary at $7,000 and requires him to pay the balance of the fees over into the Treasury of the United States. I hope the Senate will allow the bill to pass. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to consider at this time the bill just reported from the Committee on Finance. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Acting Secretary read the bill. It provides that from and after the 30th of June, 1882, the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois, shall be $7,000 per annum, in lieu of all salary, commissions, fees, and charges now allowed by law as compensation of that officer. All fees and emoluments now received by him and applied to his compensation under the provisions of existing law, from and after the 30th of June, 1882, are to be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator from Illinois to say this was a reduction.

Mr. LOGAN. I do say so.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the present compensation?

Mr. LOGAN. That is a matter I can not state. It ranges, I am told, from $10,000 to $14,000 in fees and commissions. This requires the fees to be returned to the Treasury and the officer paid a stipulated salary.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask if the reading was correct that this is for payment from and after the 30th day of June, 1882, so that it is retrospective?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think that will affect the bill. I do not want it to go back to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the bill, and it is before the Senate in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to the administratrix of John C. Underwood.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to state in about three sentences this case as it appears to me, and I have the leave of the Senator from Missouri to do it.

This is a case where the petitioner's husband incurred certain expenses in prosecuting a title to a seat in the Senate. The committee propose to reimburse those reasonable expenses—not to pay the salary. The salary would amount to $22,000. The reasonable expenses are but $5,000. The petitioner's husband held another office under the United States at the time, that of judge, and drew a salary for that office.

Now, it is settled upon the precedents of the Senate, from the beginning of the Government, that where there is a reasonable and fair ground for claiming a seat in this body, it is a public duty to prosecute that claim and bring it to the judgment of the Senate, and persons so doing are reimbursed. There was very clearly a reasonable ground of claim in this case.

The petitioner's title to a seat in the Senate rests upon the same constitutional authority as the assent of the State of Virginia to its division and the creation of the State of West Virginia stands. It rests upon the same constitutional authority as one of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States. So it is clear that the petitioner is within the class of precedents which allows a compensation for actual expenses incurred in the prosecution of a reasonable claim.

Then, does the fact that the petitioner's husband held another United States office furnish a reason why these reasonable expenses should not be allowed? That also is settled by abundant and recent precedent. A person holding the office of Senator of the United States, exercising its functions and drawing its salary, has four or five times within the last few years been held entitled to the reasonable expenses incurred in defending the title. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG], and I think one or two others holding this United States office and drawing its salary have been awarded by the Senate and have received from the Senate the actual expenses or a portion of the actual expenses so reasonably and necessarily incurred.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator which one of the Senators to whom he refers held a United States office which disqualified him from holding the position of Senator?

Mr. HOAR. None of them. They held a United States office as Senator. The office of Judge of United States court was a United States office which disqualified the holder from receiving the position of Senator when his title was conferred; and thereby of course he would have vacated the United States office of judge. The question——

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HOAR. No, let me finish this sentence, if you please.

The question is, was it this man's public duty? Suppose he had been a postmaster, suppose he had been a district attorney, suppose he had been an officer of a State, a governor, elected Senator, and there was a fair and reasonable ground of claim, was there any reason on earth that he should not prosecute that claim? Was it not his duty? Suppose my honorable friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who graces one of the seats from that State, had in the close contest which he has just passed through, by fraud, or by a legal judgment, or in any other way been denied the seat to which he has been elected, would it not have been his duty to prosecute his claim, his public duty? If that be true, then suppose he had been a postmaster, or a governor, or a judge. This is not a question of two salaries; it is a question of whether the man sitting as judge or governor, or acting as postmaster, or district attorney, or whatever else, ought to employ a lawyer, to summon witnesses, to employ proper and just and pure agencies to prosecute his claim to a seat here. If that is denied him he goes on with his old office; if that is allowed him he vacates his old office and takes his seat as Senator.

Mr. GARLAND. I want to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator remember the reasons alleged for the non-admission of Underwood to a seat?

Mr. HOAR. I am unable to state at this moment.

Mr. GARLAND. Why was he not admitted, does the Senator recollect, because this is a matter of importance to govern other cases that may arise?

Mr. HOAR. I do not suppose I can state a clear constitutional reason. As I understand it, the persons then governing the country were divided somewhat about the legality of the existence of the State of Virginia. The State of Virginia died out and ended for a while; but the State of Virginia was a constitutional State. The little fragment at Alexandria and the little fragment at Fortress Monroe or Yorktown or wherever else performed as great duties as ever were performed by a State in this Union. If the State of Virginia were not de facto, and being de facto, then for the time being de jure a constitutional State, there is no thirteenth amendment. If it were not de facto and therefore for the time being de jure a constitutional State, you, sir, have no title to the seat which you hold as a Senator from the State of West Virginia [addressing Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia].

This is not a question of the legality of all the proceedings during the war. It is a question whether it was not an honest public duty of a man chosen by a State, or by a community which had as much show of title to deem herself a State and with a title to a seat unquestioned from the Legislature acting for and governing so much of the territory of Virginia as was not in rebellion—whether it was not his public duty to prosecute that title, and whether therefore we should not reimburse him his expenses so incurred. The Senate having that question before it, has decided it once. The colleague of this man, whose title to a seat stood on precisely the same ground, was allowed his compensation for prosecuting that title.

Is there a Senator on this floor who, if he had been chosen Senator from the State of Virginia, with a Legislature, with a governor, with a share in the adoption of the constitutional amendments and which had given its constitutional assent to the division of that State, would not have felt it his duty to himself and his people to present that claim? It can not make the slightest difference that, while his lawyer and his witnesses were presenting the claim here, he was performing the functions of another office elsewhere. It is not two salaries, but expenses that we are talking about. There can not be any more reason for denying this allowance than there would have been for denying to the honorable Senator from Kansas or from South Carolina or from Louisiana, while they were performing so ably the duties of Senators of the United States, a reasonable compensation for defending the title which they owed not to themselves but to the community which had honored them to defend by all reasonable and constitutional and honest methods.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the Senator from Massachusetts, who is a great constitutional lawyer, to answer this proposition: John C. Underwood was duly appointed and confirmed a United States judge on the 25th day of January, 1864——

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to offer a privileged resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose I shall have to yield to my good friend.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of two members of the Senate be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that Congress having finished its business is now ready to close its session by adjournment.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How shall this committee be appointed?

Mr. ANTHONY. By the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair names the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] as the committee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

Joint resolution (S. R. 138) concerning the erection of a memorial column at Washington's Headquarters at Newburgh, New York;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 367) making appropriations for the alteration of internal-revenue dies, plates, and stamps, and for providing blanks for rebate; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to offer an order for the withdrawal of some papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROWN. I ask him to yield until I obtain an order for the withdrawal of papers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BROWN. I submit the following order:

Ordered, That W. O. Tuggle, agent of the State of Georgia, have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate under the usual rule, there having been no unfavorable report in said case, the papers in the case in which a bill passed the Senate at the present session to repay to the State of Georgia $27,175.50, money advanced by said State for the defense of her frontier against the Indians from 1795 to 1818, and not heretofore repaid.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia a question for information before the resolution passes. I ask whether the State of Georgia has not another claim pending against the United States; and would it not be, in view of that fact, very important that copies of these papers under the rule should be left on the files of the Senate?

Mr. BROWN. I do not expect anything else than to conform to the rule. I understand that when there is an adverse report copies should be left. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that this is a case where the rights of Georgia were made so plain at this session that the bill passed the Senate with very little opposition, but it failed to be reached in the House of Representatives. It is desired that the agent of the State should be authorized to withdraw the papers.

Mr. BARROW. Furthermore, Mr. President, the claim to which the Senator from Missouri refers is one that these papers will throw no light upon at all. It is entirely a different transaction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]?

Mr. PLATT. Let it be reported again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The order was again read.

Mr. CONGER. Are those the papers upon which the claim of the last century was allowed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to inform the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I can not hear the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Gentlemen in the rear of the seats are appealed to to cease conversation or withdraw to the cloak-room. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that the request is executed.

Mr. CONGER. I inquired whether the papers referred to were those accompanying the claim of 1777 on which the Senate acted last night.

Mr. BROWN. No; this is another claim entirely, that the Senate passed at this session almost unanimously. The bill passed here and went over to the House of Representatives, and it has not been reached there and not acted on, and I simply ask the usual order, that the agent of the State of Georgia have leave to withdraw the papers and take them away, as is usual in such cases. It is nothing but the common order to withdraw papers under the usual rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this order? The Chair hears none. The Chair will take it to be agreed to if there be no objection; and it is so ordered.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution in relation to the administratrix of John C. Underwood.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question I desired to propound to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts was this: I have the record, and will read it whenever it is necessary, but I make this statement, that the records of the Senate show that John C. Underwood was duly confirmed a United States judge on the 25th of January, 1864, before his election or pretended election to the United States Senate, and he qualified and took upon himself the duties of that office, and he held that office from a time prior to the date of his alleged election until long after the expiration of the alleged term for which he was elected, all that time drawing the pay and emoluments of the office of judge. Now, in clause 2 of section 6 of article 1 of the Constitution this language is used:

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

"No person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office." Judge Underwood did not resign. How could he be a Senator?

Mr. HOAR. Why, Mr. President, suppose he did hold another office; it is not incompatible with one office under the Constitution to prosecute a claim for another. This is not a request for two salaries. Suppose he had been a member of the House of Representatives; suppose a member of the House of Representatives had been elected to fill the unexpired term of one of our friends who went into the Cabinet; he could not hold two offices at the same time, but he might properly, and it might be his duty as a citizen, to prosecute his claim to the office of Senator, and if he employed counsel, or summoned witnesses, or had printing done, what has the fact that he was performing the duties of his other office to do with his claim to be repaid for that printing and counsel fee and those witnesses?

Mr. LAPHAM. Both the Georgia Senators were sitting in the other House, and drawing their pay at the very time they were allowed for their expenses as claimants here.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from New York reminds me that both the Georgia members, whose case he cited, sat in the other House and drew their pay, and still were allowed the expense of prosecuting their title here.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know to what Georgia Senators reference is made, but am I to understand that the Georgia members while members of the House of Representatives were prosecuting a claim to a seat in the United States Senate which was then in existence?

Mr. HOAR. So the Senator from New York says.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to be shown the record of that.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to answer a question in the Yankee fashion by another. I am told now the reference is to the Louisiana claimants, Kay and McMillan, and not to any cases from Georgia; but that is immaterial. What in the world has that to do with it? Suppose the Chief-Justice of the United States were elected a Senator from the State of Ohio, as my honorable and distinguished friend from Illinois was elected a Senator from that State, he sitting and holding his court, and he deemed it his duty to prosecute that claim and to accept that office if it were established, why should he not do it? And doing it, if it were a fair claim to prosecute, why should he not be allowed the expenses of doing it? Is a contestant of a doubtful claim to relinquish all other human occupations?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the Senator has fully answered the point.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to make one further suggestion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield.

Mr. LAPHAM. The salary of Judge Underwood during the period covered between the time of his election and the time when the government of Virginia was supplanted by military rule would have amounted to over $21,000. It is not his salary we are giving him at all; we are giving simply a sum of money to cover the expenses incurred by him in good faith in his efforts to get his seat.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the Senator from New York, who is a distinguished constitutional lawyer, to answer this question; the Senator from Massachusetts did not answer it. I hold in my hand the alleged credentials; they are dated on the 14th day of December, 1864, and they purport to give him a right to a seat from the 4th day of March, 1865. These credentials, according to the records of the Senate, were presented in the Senate of the United States on the 9th of March, 1865. Judge Underwood claimed that he was then a Senator and had been since the 4th of March, 1865. It was a right to a present seat, a right which had begun on the 4th of March, 1865, to which he was prosecuting his title. He was United States judge at and before and during all that time. How could he hold one office and prosecute a present right to another; not a prospective right, but an absolute present right? He never resigned his position of judge.

Mr. LAPHAM. There is no difficulty whatever in that. He had a perfect right to hold the office which he had received prior to his election as Senator until it was decided whether or not he could take his seat as Senator. That very thing was done by General Blair and General Schenck, both of whom were elected to Congress; but they held on to their offices as generals until it was determined that they were entitled to their seats in the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was a military, not a civil office.

Mr. LAPHAM. That does not make any difference. It is not the salary of the office that the petitioner in this case is asking, I repeat; it is simply compensation for expenses incurred.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from New York has answered the question, and I do not think it can be answered.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have endeavored to answer it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know. Let me make my point a little clearer.

Mr. LAPHAM. I will state now——

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks indulgence to read to the Senate a note received from the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR].

March 3, 1883.

Mr. PRESIDENT: I respectfully ask to be excused from further service on the Committee on Education and Labor.

JAMES G. FAIR.

The question is, Will the Senate excuse the Senator from Nevada from further service on that committee?

The question being put, it was determined in the affirmative.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. GEORGE M. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee a committee of three members of the House to join a similar committee of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States to inform him that the two Houses of Congress are ready to adjourn if he has no further communication to make to them.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to the administratrix of John C. Underwood.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will hear the Senator from New York.

Mr. LAPHAM. A single word only. The constitutional provision to which the Senator from Missouri refers prohibits a man from accepting a Federal office while he holds the office of Senator. If Judge Underwood had been appointed judge after he was elected Senator, and had accepted that office, I grant that would have vacated all claim to the office of Senator; but he had been appointed a judge before he was elected Senator, and he had a right when he was elected Senator to get the Senatorial seat if he could properly do so. It was not incompatible with the provision at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, I am sure the Senator has just reversed in his mind and in his argument the provision of the Constitution. It is this:

And no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

The Senator from New York did not meet this point, that no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office. It is not whether a member of either House can accept another office, but the question is, under this clause of the Constitution can any person holding any office under the United States be eligible to and legally and constitutionally prosecute a right to a seat either in the Senate or House?

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Missouri yields to me for a moment to make a motion that the Chair fill the vacancy in the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] moves that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancy in the Committee on Education and Labor occasioned by the resignation of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair will appoint the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] to fill the vacancy.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution in relation to the administratrix of John C. Underwood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to direct the attention of the Senator from New York to that peculiar language of the Constitution which he seems to have reversed in his argument and interpretation of the Constitution; that is, that a Senator or Member could prosecute a claim to some other office. That is not the question.

No person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Judge Underwood was at and before the date of the beginning of this term a United States judge holding an office under the United States, confirmed by the Senate, drawing his regular salary, and he did not resign that office. He held it during the entire Senatorial term and he held it long after that term and drew the regular salary. I say under the Constitution he had no right to prosecute a claim to a seat in the United States Senate and no right to incur any costs in prosecuting such a claim. If he believed his right was valid, legal, and constitutional, he should have given up the prior right to the United States judgeship. That is the point I make.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The inquiry is this: Is this resolution being considered under the Anthony rule or not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Senator from New York can probably give the present occupant of the chair some information on that point.

Mr. HOAR. It is a resolution on the Calendar.

Mr. LAPHAM. I moved to take it up, and it was taken up by a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution was on the Calendar, and it was taken up by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator from Wisconsin want five minutes to speak?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If I did want five minutes there is no prospect of my getting them.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will yield if the Senator wants five minutes to explain this case, for I wish light upon it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Go on.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will yield with pleasure because I want to get at the facts of the case. Here is a grave constitutional problem.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire a vote. I do not desire to discuss it.

Mr. LAPHAM. I trust we shall have a vote upon the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I raised this constitutional question; the Senator from New York dared not meet the question. It is a plain proposition. I challenge him to show to the Senate how a United States judge holding that office and drawing that salary had a right to go and lobby around the corridors of the United States Senate for a seat upon the Senate floor while he was drawing his pay as a judge. I want the Senator to explain that to the Senate to show how it was that he could do this.

Mr. LAPHAM. Both the Senator from Massachusetts and myself have done that, and done it fully. It is unnecessary to repeat it to consume time.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 6682) to fix the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution in relation to the administratrix of John C. Underwood.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, there may have been a more fragile and insubstantial and nebulous claim than this presented for the consideration of the Senate at some time in its history, but I do not now recall it. The original vice of the proposition of the Senator from New York appears to me to be in the assumption that there ever was a State from which this claimant could have been accredited as a member of the Senate of the United States. Three or four hundred people in a time of war, when the entire territory of the State of Virginia, with the exception of a small fringe along the coast of the Potomac River, was in the control of the rebel government, assembled at Alexandria, and under the guns of the Federal fleet and forts assumed to exercise the functions of a State government.

Mr. LAPHAM. Why, it was the consent of that State that gave us one of the constitutional amendments.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from New York informs me with a menacing gesture of his fist that it was the assent of this assumed State government that rendered the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution valid. I beg to assure that Senator that so absolutely without foundation is that assertion that the States of Virginia and West Virginia were compelled by acts of Congress, as a consideration for their admission into the Union under the reconstruction acts——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Kansas permit the Chair to receive a communication from a committee of the Senate?

Mr. INGALLS. I proceed with great difficulty in my argument under so many interruptions, but I yield.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, the committee appointed by the two Houses of Congress to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that if he had no further communication to make they were ready to adjourn, have performed the duty assigned them. The President informed us that he had no further communication to make.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate for the printing of the report on industrial education furnished by the Commissioner of Education, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

WIDOW OF J. C. UNDERWOOD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] is entitled to the floor on the Underwood resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will yield a moment, I move that this resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield for that purpose?

Mr. INGALLS. I was proceeding to say that so absolutely destitute of foundation was the claim that the validity of the fourteenth amendment rested upon the assumed assent of this alleged State government in Virginia under which the claimant asserts that he was accredited here, that under the reconstruction acts it was expressly demanded by Congress as a condition precedent for the readmission of Virginia that it should assent to the validity of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. After the exercise of a very few brief functions this State government at Alexandria vanished,

> And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
> Leave not a rack behind.

And so far from this claimant ever having had a standing before the Senate of the United States, his credentials were never even referred to a committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is correct; I have the record.

Mr. INGALLS. After a very brief consideration they were ignominiously and contumeliously rejected by the Senate as unworthy of consideration.

Mr. President, this claim bears a venerable aspect. It is getting to be rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun. At every session of Congress since I have been here, again and again, iterum iterumque, the claim of Underwood for alleged services as a Senator in this body is presented here with exactly the same result.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the Senator tell me where it was ever presented before it was submitted in the last session of Congress?

Mr. INGALLS. I have been familiar with this case by name, although I do not know that I have ever been personally introduced to it.

Mr. LAPHAM. This is the first time.

Mr. INGALLS. I have been familiar with this case by name for a great many years. It dates back to a period when we may say that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. [Laughter.] I congratulate the Senator from New York upon his vigorous presentation of this antiquated claim, which I venture to say will never be urged by any member of this body who has been here longer than a single Congress. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. LAPHAM. Permit me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAPHAM. If the Senator will permit me I beg to say that at the last session of this Congress this resolution was presented by me, as the organ of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that is the first time, as far as my information goes, that it ever has been brought to the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Well, Mr. President, I hope it will be the last time. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAPHAM. That is another question.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that this resolution be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. On that motion I desire to say, the resolution being reported from a committee of which I am a member, that I never consented to its being reported, but was opposed to it in committee as I am here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMISSION TO ADJUST SALARIES OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, assuming that what is called the sundry civil bill will be or has been signed by the President of the United States, in pursuance of the command of a provision in that statute appoints Senator PLATT of Connecticut, Senator CAMERON of Wisconsin, and Senator COCKRELL of Missouri, to be commissioners on the part of the Senate to inquire into the salaries of the officers of the two Houses, and the Secretary will inform the House of Representatives of this appointment.

STATUE OF PROFESSOR HENRY.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement to the Senate. Some weeks ago both Houses of Congress accepted the invitation of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution to attend the unveiling of the statue of Professor Henry, and the Senate voted in conjunction with the House that a committee of a certain number of Senators, I think nine, and fifteen members of the House, should represent the two Houses on the occasion. I am informed at the desk that that committee has not been appointed. I ask unanimous consent that the Presiding Officer be authorized to designate that committee after the adjournment, in case he shall not be able to do it before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Presiding Officer of the Senate may be authorized after the adjournment to designate the committee on the part of the Senate to attend the ceremonies of the unveiling of the statue of Joseph Henry, which is to take place after the adjournment of Congress. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2299) to fix and render certain the terms of the United States circuit and district courts in the eastern and northern districts of Texas.

The message also announced that the House had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. J. C. S. BLACKBURN of Kentucky, and Mr. WILLIAM H. FORNEY of Alabama, the members on the part of the House of the joint committee authorized in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, to consider the question of the salaries and compensation of the employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, and also as to the number of such employés necessary for the official transaction of business of the two Houses.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (S. 143) authorizing the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer relative to the maps, &c., for the census reports;

An act (S. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers;

An act (S. 719) for the relief of the representatives of Sterling T. Austin, deceased;

An act (S. 729) for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins, of the United States Army;

An act (S. 826) for the relief of Powers and Newman, and D. and B. Powers.

An act (S. 964) for the relief of Joseph C. Irwin;

An act (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home, located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

An act (S. 1829) to amend an act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts;

An act (S. 2433) to amend sections 6 and 7 of the act providing for the publication of the Revised Statutes and the laws of the United States, approved June 20, 1876;

Joint resolution (S. R. 64) authorizing the sale of the Congressional Directory and the current numbers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD;

Joint resolution (S. R. 95) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department; and Joint resolution (S. R. 139) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at the hour of 12 o'clock m.). Senators, the hour has arrived at which, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the Forty-seventh Congress terminates, and it becomes the duty of the Chair therefore to declare this session adjourned without day, and in doing so he wishes to each one of you a pleasant and safe journey to his home, and to all of you every felicity in the future of your lives.

The Senate stands adjourned without day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 3, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. The Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER, offered the following prayer:

O God! Thou art our God; and we worship Thee. Thou art our Father; and we adore Thee. In Thee we "live and move and have our being." We confess our dependence upon Thee. We praise Thee for Thy majesty and give Thee thanks for Thy great glory. Every day bears testimony to Thy tender mercies which are over all Thy works. Thou art God; and there is none else beside Thee.

For all the care that Thou hast shown these Thy servants during the days of their service to the state, for all the wise and useful legislation that Thou hast permitted them to do, for the guidance and mercy that Thou has shown our nation, we praise Thee, O Lord.

We thank Thee for all that Thou hast done for us and for all that Thou hast permitted us to do for Thee and for men.

And now, O Lord, during the closing hours of this Congress, we pray the forgiveness of all our errors and sins. We pray that Thou wilt grant restoration in safety to their homes to these Thy servants. We pray for their guidance, blessing, and usefulness, and for them in the end the gift of eternal life.

The Lord in great mercy keep and bless the Republic, and these Thy servants, and all who exercise authority and rule in the land, and make Thine own name glorious among us forevermore. We ask it in the name of Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal. During the reading the following proceedings took place:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5543) to confirm certain entries on the public lands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2504) to amend the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers;

A bill (S. 729) for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins, of the United States Army;

A bill (S. 964) for the relief Joseph C. Irwin;

A bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

THE JOURNAL.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, the further reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

CORECTIONS.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I find on examination of the RECORD of March 2, on the passage of the river and harbor bill my vote is not recorded. I voted in the negative. I wish the correction made.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. KNOTT. My vote is not recorded on the river and harbor bill. I was paired with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD]. Had I been present, I would have voted in the negative and Mr. BELFORD in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Pairs are only announced once.

GLACIATION, BIRDS, ETC.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish, as soon as convenient, to the Speaker of this House copies of documents in possession of his Department containing observations on glaciation, birds, natural history, and the medical notes upon cruises of revenue-cutters in the year 1881.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALEX. B. THOMAS AND WILSON GRICE.

Mr. URNER, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, directed to retain upon the laborers' roll, until otherwise ordered, the name of Alex. B. Thomas, now in charge of the cloak-room, at the rate of $60 a month.

Mr. MATSON. I offer an amendment to insert the name of Wilson Grice at the same pay. I wish to say to the House that the employé named in the resolution is on that side of the House. By reason of extra work required during the vacation, it is necessary one should be employed on our side. I think I voice the sentiment of this side of the House that we should like to have Mr. Grice.

Mr. MATSON'S amendment was adopted; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL LABORERS.

Mr. URNER also, from the Committee on Accounts, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to employ three additional laborers, whose compensation shall be at the rate of $60 per month each, to be employed in arranging and placing away the books and other documents in the Clerk's document-room and transferring the original documents to the newly fitted quarters in the upper story of the House in the Capitol: Provided, Such employment shall not continue beyond the period of three months, and shall be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT OF 1883.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, called up the

Mr. HOAR. It is a resolution on the Calendar.

Mr. LAPHAM. I moved to take it up, and it was taken up by a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution was on the Calendar, and it was taken up by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator from Wisconsin want five minutes to speak?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If I did want five minutes there is no prospect of my getting them.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal. During the reading the following proceedings took place:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5543) to confirm certain entries on the public lands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2504) to amend the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers;

A bill (S. 729) for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins, of the United States Army;

A bill (S. 964) for the relief Joseph C. Irwin;

A bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

THE JOURNAL.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, the further reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

CORECTIONS.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I find on examination of the RECORD of March 2, on the passage of the river and harbor bill my vote is not recorded. I voted in the negative. I wish the correction made.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. KNOTT. My vote is not recorded on the river and harbor bill. I was paired with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD]. Had I been present, I would have voted in the negative and Mr. BELFORD in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Pairs are only announced once.

GLACIATION, BIRDS, ETC.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish, as soon as convenient, to the Speaker of this House copies of documents in possession of his Department containing observations on glaciation, birds, natural history, and the medical notes upon cruises of revenue-cutters in the year 1881.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALEX. B. THOMAS AND WILSON GRICE.

Mr. URNER, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, directed to retain upon the laborers' roll, until otherwise ordered, the name of Alex. B. Thomas, now in charge of the cloak-room, at the rate of $60 a month.

Mr. MATSON. I offer an amendment to insert the name of Wilson Grice at the same pay. I wish to say to the House that the employé named in the resolution is on that side of the House. By reason of extra work required during the vacation, it is necessary one should be employed on our side. I think I voice the sentiment of this side of the House that we should like to have Mr. Grice.

Mr. MATSON's amendment was adopted; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL LABORERS.

Mr. URNER also, from the Committee on Accounts, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to employ three additional laborers, whose compensation shall be at the rate of $60 per month each, to be employed in arranging and placing away the books and other documents in the Clerk's document-room and transferring the original documents to the newly fitted quarters in the upper story of the House in the Capitol: Provided, Such employment shall not continue beyond the period of three months, and shall be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT OF 1883.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, called up the Senate amendment to the joint resolution (H. Res. 331) for the printing of the Agricultural Report for the year 1883.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of line 11 insert:

"And the sum of $20000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray the cost of the publication."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VOLUSIA BAR.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the establishment of a light on Volusia Bar, Saint George River, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

OCEAN FREIGHTS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics relative to ocean freights on exports and imports for the year ending June 30, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COOK VS. CUTTS.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the adoption of the following resolution, on which the previous question was ordered:

Resolved, That M. E. Cutts was not elected as a Representative from the sixth Congressional district of Iowa, and is not entitled to a seat on the floor of this House.

Resolved, That John C. Cook was duly elected as a Representative from the sixth district of Iowa, and is entitled to a seat on the floor of this House.

Mr. RANNEY demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MOULTON and Mr. RANNEY were appointed.

The yeas and nays were ordered (50 voting in favor thereof).

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 154, nays 81, not voting 56; as follows:

Mr. HISCOCK with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, with Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER with Mr. DEUSTER.

On motion of Mr. CALKINS, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOULTON. I now ask that Mr. Cook be sworn in.

Mr. J. C. COOK, having appeared at the bar of the House, was duly qualified, taking the oath prescribed by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5674) for the relief of Edward Bellows;

A bill (H. R. 3258) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hendrickson; and

A bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands of Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KELLEY. I rise to a privileged report.

Mr. CALKINS. I call up another election case under the instruction of my committee, the last one, the case of Lee against Richardson.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolutions.

Mr. KELLEY. A conference report is in order, I believe? I present a privileged report from the committee of conference on the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged report. But the right to proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case is also a question of privilege, and one of the highest constitutional character—the right of a man to his seat.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question. Will the House proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case?

The question being taken, the House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 70.

Mr. CALKINS. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were refused (not one-fifth of the last vote rising in favor thereof).

So the House refused to proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the tariff revision bill. Before the report is read I desire to make a brief statement to the House, pointing out one or two typographical or clerical errors which gentlemen may notice in the printed report.

Mr. BAYNE. Is this report submitted for present consideration?

Mr. KELLEY. As I have said, I desire before the Clerk begins to read the report to say to the members of the House that the conference report is before them in print——

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to reserve the right to make the point of order against the submission of this report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The point of order is reserved.

The SPEAKER. The report is not formally presented as yet.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If it is desired to make the point of order now I will do so, otherwise I will withhold the point.

Mr. KELLEY. If the House will kindly hear me, I will be glad to make a statement for which I think members will be grateful. The committee of conference have caused their report to be printed in bill form, that it may be accessible to every member, a thing that never has been done before in connection with the consideration of a tariff or tax measure. In the preparation of the bill a clerical mistake or two occurred to which I wish to invite the attention of gentlemen. On page 24 of the printed report the words "earthen-ware, stone, and crockery"——

Several MEMBERS. What line?

Mr. KELLEY. If gentlemen will permit me to read a carefully prepared statement which will tell them, I will be glad to do it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks before the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeds the report ought to be formally presented.

Mr. KELLEY. I have formally presented the report. If the Chair thinks it ought to be read——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman sent the report forward and then said he desired to make a preliminary statement. The Chair suggests, however, that it had better be formally presented before the gentleman makes the statement.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. BAYNE. I think it had better be read. If, however, the report is now considered as formally presented, I desire to make the point of order against it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 5538, to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. BAYNE. Now I raise the question of order.

Mr. KELLEY. In order now to enable members to know what this is, I ask leave to make the statement which I had already begun.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will suspend. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] raises the point of order. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to the point of order against the report. Under the language of Rule XXIX I make the point of order that this report does not conform to the rule. That rule provides:

And there shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there is no such explicit statement accompanying this report. Therefore I make the point that it can not be received under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] whether there is accompanying the report a statement signed by the conferees as to the effect of the amendments agreed to by the conference committee upon the bill?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir; I wish to state that there is an index accompanying the bill of changes proposed by the committee of conference, giving the page and line of the report, which is appended to every printed report in the hands of members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is only dealing with those papers which have been furnished to the House. The Chair desires to ask if there is such a report as the rule requires.

Mr. KELLEY. I send it up, sir, to the desk as accompanying the report. It is on the last pages of the printed report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the matter to which the gentleman refers does not form such a statement as to bring it within the terms of strict compliance with the rule.

Mr. KELLEY. Well, sir, we believe that it is a compliance with the rule.

The SPEAKER. If there is anything in the form of an accompanying statement the gentleman had better send it to the desk.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the accompanying statement must be in writing, signed by the members of the conference committee selected by the House as its managers upon the conference, and it must be a statement so explicit in its terms as to enable the House to understand the effect of the different changes made in the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. The statement accompanying the bill goes over every amendment made in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The index to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers is simply appended to the report. There is no trouble about that. The rule, however, requires a written statement. There is no point made on the report, as the Chair understands; but the point of order is made that no statement such as is required by the rule accompanies it.

Mr. BAYNE. The point of order I made is that there is no explicit statement accompanying the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point of order made by the gentleman. This is a question of fact. If there be no such accompanying statement the Chair would recommend that the report be withdrawn until one can be prepared and furnished.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object to its being withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. It is a mere question of fact with which the Chair is now dealing, as to whether or not there is such a statement.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to make a statement of fact.

The SPEAKER. The written paper is what the Chair is looking for.

Mr. BLACKBURN. A report which was offered yesterday was refused because of the absence of the accompanying detailed statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL], not to reason this, but if there is any such paper as is required by Rule XXIX the Chair will hear the gentleman in regard to that.

Mr. HASKELL. There is. That is what I want to state.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas if there is such a paper and it is furnished it will put an end to all this discussion; but it can not be furnished by talk.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the Speaker give me a chance to state the fact?

The SPEAKER. If the paper is here that will be the best evidence that the rule has been complied with.

Mr. HASKELL. The rule has been followed strictly by the committee. The statement required under the rule was from the peculiar condition of a tariff bill made a part and parcel of the conference report. The conference report is signed, and accompanying it and forming a part of it and covered by the same signatures is the report required under the rule. But the conference committee, for the purpose of giving the House more accurate information than even the rule required, took this bill and had it printed with every line marked and with an index to it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Is it signed?

Mr. HASKELL. The report is signed and is on the desk. The statement required under the rule as to the condition of the bill is in the report of the conference committee and lies before this House signed. The printed copy is not signed. That was given to the House by the courtesy of the committee, and is more than the rule required.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to know when this signed report was presented.

Mr. HASKELL. It was presented just now.

Mr. McMILLIN. Where and by whom was it signed?

Mr. HASKELL. It is signed by the conference committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. My question is as to the statement required by Rule XXIX. When was that signed?

Mr. HASKELL. That is a part and parcel of the report. And it has been printed so as to give the House more full information than could possibly be given by any written statement.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish the gentleman to state whether he has not signed that paper since he was on the floor.

Mr. HASKELL. I signed the conference report in conference. Does the gentleman understand good plain English?

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand good plain English and I understand an evasion.

Mr. HASKELL. In the conference committee the report of the conference and the statement required by the rule were incorporated in one document; and the signature made in the conference committee covers the report and this explanation required by the rule.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understood the Speaker to hold that the written report required under the rule was not presented; and hence my inquiry.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question. The report presented this morning by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was signed as I understand by the conferees on the part both of the Senate and the House?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALKINS. Do I understand, and is it the fact, that the little printed index that is appended to this bill forms also a part of the report which is upon the Speaker's table and which has been presented to the House by the chairman of the committee?

Mr. HASKELL. It does.

Mr. CALKINS. And that that also is signed by the conferees on the part of the House?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir; the whole thing is included.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. May I ask for the reading of the signatures to the report?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object to the filing of any additional papers.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. There seems to be some question about the signatures. Is the paper signed? That is questioned here.

The SPEAKER. The report is signed. There is no controversy about the report.

Mr. KELLEY. It was signed in the conference last evening.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As I understand, the paper sent up to the Speaker is not a report; it is simply a statement, and I make the point of order——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is making the same point of order that is now pending.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I suppose every gentleman wants to get at the substance and not linger on mere technicalities. Therefore, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us have order. The gentleman from Massachusetts can not be heard.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I suppose no one is making objections simply to delay on this last day of the session and that everybody will try to facilitate the consideration of this proposition. Now, I submit when it is said the statement must be in writing, that is not in the rule at all. "A detailed statement;" that is all. Not a detailed statement in writing. And even if the rule employed the words "in writing," it has always been held that print is sufficient.

The SPEAKER. There is no trouble about that question; the requirements would be satisfied if the statement was in print.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The Chair says there is no trouble about that question; then I pass on. The Chair ruled last night, and I beg to call his attention to it, in regard to the statement to accompany the conference report on the Army bill, on the objection made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] that the statement was not sufficient, that the Chair would not undertake to decide whether it was sufficient or not; there was a statement that was signed. I do not profess to give the exact words of the Chair, but they were something to that effect. Of course I would not misrepresent or misstate at all.

The only point is, whether there is a statement here sufficiently in detail to give the House upon consideration a true understanding of the changes proposed by the conference report. What is the statement? I understand, and if I am in error I will be corrected, that the conferees on the part of the House have signed as that statement the latter part of this report; that is sent up as the statement.

Now, is that sufficiently detailed to give everybody an understanding of what we are trying to do? That is all there is about it. What does that statement do? It takes every subject in the bill and refers to that subject by reference to printed pages and lines of the document which we have before us. And any gentleman who can read, and we all can, by looking at that statement can turn right back to the report and find for instance that "50 per cent." is stricken out in one place and "40 per cent." inserted. Now, everybody knows what that means. All the way through it is stated in the same way.

I trust that the Chair will not upon the merest technicality, I hope nobody will insist that there has been no compliance with the rule, when it is plain that the spirit of the rule is answered entirely. Of course we all understand that if it is held that this must wait, it will not take many minutes, for the conference committee have only to withdraw the report, and in a few moments prepare and submit a statement.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That will raise another question, whether it can be withdrawn in face of objection.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think it can be.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We have not raised that question yet.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I understand that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the point of order I wish to say this: The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. KELLEY] tells this House that undertaking to comply with Rule XXIX he files with the report what he states is an index of the changes proposed. Now, I insist that is not a compliance either substantially or technically with the second clause of Rule XXIX.

I admit that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] is correct when he says that it is not necessary that this statement shall be in writing; I am willing that it should be in print. But I say that no verbal statement will suffice.

I say that yesterday a committee of conference undertook through the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HENDERSON] to submit a report without compliance with that rule, and the report was refused, and I say that neither the present occupant of the chair nor any one of his predecessors, since the adoption of this rule, ever allowed a conference committee to make a report that was not accompanied with a statement either in print or in writing, which complied substantially with the second clause of the twenty-ninth rule. The census report from a conference committee was rejected on that very ground. That second clause of Rule XXIX provides:

> And there shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

Now, I hold this bill in my hand with its index; and I ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to tell me what information can this House get, what can any member of this House ever ascertain or know, as to the results or effects of proposed amendments from the two pages of printed matter—not two pages, a page and a half—which they have brought here entitled an index?

And let me say further, this committee was sent out to deal with more subjects than one. The highest constitutional prerogative known to this House was intrusted to its keeping. It was directed to inquire into the question as to whether the constitutional prerogatives of this House had been invaded. Now, let the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means tell me where or how, from this printed index, this House is to find out what conclusion its conferees reached upon that high question of prerogative.

Is there aught either of verbal statement (which is not to be accepted) or of written matter or of printed matter which will form any guide to any member of this House as to what course that committee of conference has taken on that question, or what the effect of their report is to be?

More than that; they bring us back a report of one hundred and fourteen pages of print, exclusive of their index. The index upon which they rely to comply with this requirement of the rule does not indicate to us a single solitary sentence, line, word, or syllable that was ever proposed in this House or offered in the Senate by way of amendment.

There is no compliance with this rule. The conferees stand here at this instant asking us to accept a report without any guide at all given to us by which we may ascertain not only how they have discharged their duties but whether they have discharged them at all or not. They were charged by this House with the duty of investigating whether the Senate had transgressed the limitations of the Federal Constitution. I find no statement here in answer; I hear none from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. Then I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the fact that the resolution which charged the conference committee with the investigation of that constitutional question said that it "may make a report if it found it necessary."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the gentleman for that word.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman will permit me to remind him of the scene in this House when he himself rebuked the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] for even raising that question, perhaps he will spare us much of this discourse on the constitutional question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from Maine will permit me to suggest to him that I did no such thing. I simply stated, and the RECORD will show it, that the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Georgia was not, so far as I knew, the result of a party conference or caucus—that and nothing more.

Now, I thank the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] for his suggestion. He admits that this conference report makes no reply as to the manner in which these conferees have discharged the duties imposed upon them by the House. He answers by way of confession and avoidance and says that the resolution under which the committee acted made it discretionary with the conference committee to inquire into and report upon the constitutional prerogative of this House or not. Now, I want to know, Mr. Speaker, whether that resolution was introduced with a view of answering the purpose to which it seems now to be prostituted. Was it to mislead, was it to misguide, was it to deceive, was it to impose upon this House by making us believe that a committee of conference was going to inquire into that matter and vindicate the dignity and rights of this House, when in point of fact there was no such purpose? Such is the result.

Mr. CALKINS. I suggest to the gentleman whether the point of order now presented does not go simply to the sufficiency of the statement submitted, which is a matter within the control of the House?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is, I take it, fairly debatable under this point of order; for the second clause of the twenty-ninth rule declares that the conferees shall accompany their report with a detailed statement showing precisely the result of the changes or amendments recommended.

Mr. CALKINS. But when there is in fact a statement, can the Speaker rule upon the question of its sufficiency? Is not that a matter for the House?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is the very question, whether any such statement as is required by the rule is here. I insist that it is not, and that no other report can come from this conference committee and be considered by this House until it shall meet the requirement of the rule and respond to the duty with which the conference committee stands charged. It is incumbent upon the Chair to see that the duties imposed upon that committee have been met and that the rules of this House have been observed in the manner of procedure adopted by the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman will allow me to remind him before he takes his seat that this paper which is pretended to be a statement of the conference committee is not signed by the Senate conferees.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I not only insist upon all I have claimed but I insist that the report when it shall be submitted to this House for consideration shall be accompanied by a statement which, whether in writing or in print, shall fully come up to the demand of the rule, and shall be signed—not here on the floor at the eleventh hour—by the conferees on the part of the House and the conferees on the part of the Senate as well.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman hold that the Senate conferees must conform to a rule of the House?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I mean to say that under the practice known in this House from its organization until now no conference report was ever submitted here that was not signed by the Senate conferees as well as the conferees of the House.

I ask consent to append to my remarks portions of the discussion which took place on the adoption of this rule when the report of the Committee on Rules revising the rules of the House was under consideration in the last Congress:

RULE XXIX.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I offer the following as an amendment to the rule which has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"And such reports, instead of referring by number to the amendments or propositions agreed to in conference, shall be so written out as to inform the House from the reading of the report what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate."

"So that, if adopted, the rule will read as follows:

"'The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition; and such reports, instead of referring by number to the amendments or propositions agreed to in conference, shall be so written out as to inform the House from the reading of the report what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.'"

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin, speaking for myself, and I doubt not the Committee on Rules, that there is no objection to the proposed amendment except in this: it must of necessity be effected by incorporation into the joint rules of the two Houses. This House has no power by any action which it may propose to bind the conferees on the part of the Senate; so that, to accomplish the purpose which the gentleman's amendment seeks to reach, there must be a provision made in the joint rules between the two Houses that will bind the conferees of both. Of course the same conference report made to this House must be made to the Senate, and we can not bind the Senate through its conferees to anything unless we do it by a general rule. I am in favor of the gentleman's proposion.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin allow me to suggest an amendment which has been suggested to me by the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? A conference report must be a report to the two Houses, and must be identical in word and line and syllable. But if the gentleman by his amendment will simply require that the members of the conference on the part of the House shall append that statement to their conference report, I will support it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I very gladly accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the modification of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is that the amendment be altered so as simply to require the House members of a committee of conference to append to their conference report a statement of the points covered by the numbers of the amendments which the conference report embraces.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I hope it will not be said, "append to their report," but that the statement will be included in the report to the House. Then the House conferees, in obedience to the House rule, would not consent to a report until the information the rule requires is embodied in the regular conference report, the duplicates respectively for the House and for the Senate being the same.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We can not coerce the Senate by a rule of this House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am speaking of what would be the practical working of such a rule.

Mr. BLACKBURN. A conference report means the report of the conference committee of the two Houses. The reports to the two Houses must be duplicates the one of the other. There can not be a syllable in the conference report made to this House that is not embraced in the report made to the Senate. We can not compel the Senate to do what is here suggested; but I pledge myself I will use my best endeavors as a member of the Committee on Rules and of the Joint Committee on Rules to have this incorporated into a joint rule to govern the two Houses. While assenting to the idea of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I am in favor of so modifying his amendment as to require the House members of the committee of conference to furnish with each conference report an explanation by a statement in detail of the points in controversy covered by such report.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the reports must be identical, and that is the reason why I do not want to modify this rule so as to require the House members of the committee to state something in addition to the report.

Mr. HAYES. The House members of the committee of conference could not live up to this rule in case it should be adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the gentleman that I do not see anything inexplicable or difficult of comprehension in the suggestion I have made. Does not the gentleman know as well as he may know anything that there is under general parliamentary law no power given to a committee of conference to inject anything into a conference report that is not already in dispute between the two Houses?

Mr. KEIFER. Let me answer the question by asking the gentleman if he does not know that in a conference report made to a former Congress a whole body of legislation, amounting to a long bill, amounting to pages of print, as it appeared afterward, in reference to postal matters, was introduced into a conference report, because there was a little dispute about some post-office matter? Does not the gentleman know that the whole matter of postage on different classes of mail matter was reorganized in a conference report, although up to that time we had not heard anything of it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not know to what the gentleman refers, unless it be the Brazilian mail feature; if so, that was lost.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, that was lost; it was adopted in the Senate and lost in the conference; but that is not what I refer to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have only this to say; the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] and myself understand each other. I am in favor of requiring the House members of every conference committee to accompany every conference report with an explanatory statement, showing exactly what points are covered by that report. I am in favor of putting that in the rules of the House, if the gentleman will consent to so modify his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Allow me to make a single suggestion. My amendment goes simply to the matter of form rather than to that of substance. It requires that the conference committee shall use apt and proper words instead of numbers in their report. Now, can there be any doubt in the world that if we adopt a rule requiring the members of our committee of conference to adopt a certain form of report, the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate will accept it? I am willing to accept any amendment which the gentleman may propose, if it will accomplish the purpose I have in view.

Mr. RANDALL (the Speaker). Then accept his modification.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I will accept it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must dispose of this question.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will the Chair hear me for one moment?

The SPEAKER. For what purpose?

Mr. COX, of New York. On the point of order. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to a very conspicuous illustration of the carrying out of this rule. When in a former Congress I made here a report as the chairman of the Census Committee, Mr. CONGER, of Michigan, then a member and now a Senator, raised the point of order that I must make out a written statement of the meaning and intent of the conference report. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] occupied the chair for half an hour, and I was compelled to write the statement here on the floor of the House. It does not matter whether the statement be written now, or whether it has been written; whether it be in print or manuscript. The object of this rule, Mr. Speaker, is to give the House an explanation of what the conference report means. There is no other object in the rule. A mere oral statement does not comply with the rule. It has been decided again and again on points of order made on both sides that the statement must not be merely oral, but must be submitted in writing or print.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to dispose of this question.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to submit a fuller statement from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question here seems to be a very simple one, and it is not a new one. On yesterday the Chair did say, as has been stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON], that it was not called upon to decide the effect of a report. The point of order was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] that the conference report itself was not sufficiently explicit. The Chair declined to go into that question, declined to undertake to analyze the report, and decide for the House or the conferees what language should be used in it. That is as far as the Chair went on the occasion referred to. But prior to that, on yesterday, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] presented a conference report, and it was discovered there was no statement at all accompanying it, and the report was not received.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. May I be allowed to interrupt the Chair for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I beg to correct the Chair by saying at the time the point of order was made the report of the committee on conference had not been read, but only the statement, as will appear by inspection of the RECORD. Therefore the point of order was only made against the statement.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will look a little closer at the RECORD he will see that the language used was this: The gentleman from Wisconsin said, "I make the point of order against that report that it does not conform to the rules of the House." That was the language, and it was on that the Chair used the language the gentleman from Massachusetts has quoted. The rule provides that the statement accompanying the report of the committee of conference shall show the effect of proposed changes. Both the statement and report had been read, and the point was made against the report and not the statement.

The question is presented whether this conference report can be received from the conferees at all without an accompanying statement, and under the rule it is perfectly clear that it can not.

Then the question is whether there is an accompanying statement. At the time the point of order was made the Chair was not able to ascertain anything that purported to be an accompanying statement was in existence. Since that point of order was made a paper has been furnished at the desk which is entitled "Index to changes proposed by the committee of conference," which seems to be signed by a majority of the conferees on the part of the House. But this does not purport to be an accompanying statement giving any sort of effect to proposed changes. The Chair thinks there should be an accompanying statement and the report can not be received until there is one for consideration. It does not require unanimous consent to withdraw the report.

Mr. KELLEY. I present, Mr. Speaker, the conference report with a written statement signed by a majority of the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order that it must be signed on the part of the conferees of the Senate as well. [Cries of "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The practice is the other way. The House rules could not require the Senate conferees to sign such a statement.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think the Chair misunderstands me.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. In support of the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky I should like to have an extract from the Manual read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Chair misunderstands me. It is not the accompanying statement I am anxious should be signed by the conferees of the Senate, but the conference report.

The SPEAKER. That is signed by a majority of the conferees of the Senate as well as of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Chair say it is signed by the conferees of the Senate as well as the conferees of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is signed by the conferees on the part of the Senate as well as on the part of the House. The Chair thought it was the accompanying statement to which the gentleman referred.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; it was to the report.

Mr. REED. I do not think the gentleman from Kentucky referred to the accompanying statement; but there is confusion in his mind between the conference report and the statement accompanying it which will be cleared up in a little while.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am delighted to know that, but I have not become so thoroughly confused on this question as not to be able to determine whether I favor tariff legislation or not. I wish the gentleman from Maine was equally as clear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] presents the conference report with an accompanying statement, and the accompanying statement will now be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation submit the following written statement in explanation of the conference report:

As agreed in conference the bill provides for an estimated aggregate reduction of $67,000,000. Of this amount it is estimated that about $35,000,000 will result from the changes made in the internal-revenue laws and thirty to thirty-two million dollars in customs duties.

The only distinct method of informing the House with precision, the effect of the changes made in detail, is to furnish an index of those changes and accompany the same with references to the page and line of the bill in which the changes are made. The same being read as a part of this statement will give to the House accurate information of such changes effected by the conference report. They submit as a part of this statement said index and the clauses of the bill so changed.

Mr. CARLISLE. I make the point of order that this is not such a statement as is required by the rule; all that it does is to state the effect of the proposed amendments of the Senate; whereas the rule requires a statement sufficiently explanatory to show the effect of the propositions reported by the committee. What has been just read is an attempt to state how much this legislation, if enacted into a law, would reduce the revenues; but it makes no attempt whatever to state what would be the effect of the various changes proposed by the committee of conference, or made by them in the Senate amendments such as the rule requires.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to call attention to the fact——

The SPEAKER. One moment.

The Chair will state in response to the gentleman from Kentucky that the language contained in this statement does not appear to bear out the criticism he makes, that it refers only to the amendments of the Senate. It relates to the proposed amendments reported by the conference committee; and the index accompanying the report of the committee is made a part of this statement, the index showing the proposed changes made by the conference committee. The Chair can not pass upon the effect of the statement, or the question as to whether or not it covers all that it might contain; or hold that it should be more full and explicit and embody all that every member of the House might desire it to embody. The Chair believes this to be a statement entitled to be called such under the rule; and although, as the Chair has said, it may not go to the extent that every gentleman might desire, the Chair thinks it is nevertheless a statement within the meaning of the rule, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire now, Mr. Speaker, the Clerk to read a brief memorandum which I attempted to read as preliminary to the report. I will then propose to make a brief statement of the effects of the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to inquire whether the reading of this report is waived by permitting the gentleman to begin his argument or explanation at this time?

Mr. KELLEY. These are a part of my remarks that I am sending to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to ask if it is proper to begin the discussion before the reading of the report, if the reading shall be called for?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not yield the floor to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks if the report is to be read, its reading ought to precede any debate upon it.

Mr. KELLEY. This is not debate. It is an explanation of the effect, or rather an explanation as to certain typographical errors which crept into the preparation of the report and were printed with it.

Mr. SPRINGER. My object is simply to reserve the right to demand the reading. I do not desire that right to be waived.

The SPEAKER. Reserving the right of gentlemen to demand the reading of the report, if desired, the Chair will direct the Clerk to read what has been forwarded to the desk by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Correct the report as follows: On page 24 of the printed report the words "earthen, stone, and crockery" should have been inserted after the word "bisque," in line 418, and the words in lines 421 and 422 printed in Roman should be struck out. At the beginning of line 427 the word "or" should be inserted, and in the same line the words "printed, painted, dipped, or cream-colored" should be struck out. In line 429, after the word "fifty," the word "five" should be inserted, so it will read "fifty-five."

On page 36, in lines 716 and 717, the words "and on steel circular-saw plates" should be stricken out; and at the end of line 718 the following should be added: "and on steel circular-saw plates there shall be paid 1 cent per pound in addition to the rate provided for in this act."

On page 64 the exception provided in lines 1422 and 1423 should be inclosed in parentheses.

Mr. SPRINGER. The statement furnished by the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to the changes to be made in the bill as a part of it. But, of course, that being a detailed statement or report embodying the whole tariff, we can not vote upon the proposition without hearing it read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the reading of the report?

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HASKELL. That demand for the reading is a demand for the reading of the statement accompanying the report, I presume?

The SPEAKER. It is a demand for the reading of the report, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HASKELL. Does that go farther than reading the amendments to the text?

The SPEAKER. It goes to the extent of reading the whole report, whatever it is. The Chair will not undertake to say what it is, not having examined. Whatever the report contains, however, if it be a matter which the House is required to vote upon, will have to be read if the demand for the reading is made.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Chair rule that this bill is to be read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so rule. The Chair holds that the report is to be read if demanded.

Mr. PAGE. What is the report?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it, whatever it is. All matters that the House is required to vote directly upon must be read upon the demand of any one member.

Mr. ANDERSON. As that report is so long, will not the gentleman from Illinois withdraw the demand?

Mr. BERRY. No. I demand its reading.

Mr. HASKELL. That requires the reading only of the amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not suppose the House would undertake to pass a bill revising and amending the entire tariff from schedule as to the very end of the whole tariff system, without having it read in the presence and hearing of the House.

The SPEAKER. This is not debatable. The Chair simply directs the Clerk to read the report as submitted.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman or any gentleman demands the reading, there is nothing else in order but that reading. I hope, therefore, we will proceed at once, so as not to consume any more time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading of the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the Clerk reading?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk is reading the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not hear the reading.

Mr. VAN HORN. Is there no rule of this House that prevents cruelty to the clerks?

Mr. FLOWER. I would like to ask if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] can not relieve the Clerk?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will ask that by unanimous consent the Speaker be authorized to employ such additional reading-clerks as may be necessary for the remainder of this session.

Mr. McCOOK. If this is to be read, let it be read at once.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There are enough of us here who will volunteer to assist the clerks in the reading. We appreciate the fact that their labors have been heavy, and this is a very lengthy report. I myself will certainly assist in this labor, if necessary.

Mr. McCOOK. We will be willing, any of us, to do that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had chosen Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont, President pro tempore of the Senate in the place of Hon. DAVID DAVIS, resigned.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of certain officers of the Army for services actually performed during the rebellion; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5200) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just received from the Senate, the bill (H. R. 5200) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, with amendments by the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table, when I shall move that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

There was no objection.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "direct official application or."
Page 1, line 32, strike out "application."
Page 2, line 4, before "entitled" insert "or legal representative."

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report of the committee of conference, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Strike out sections 1, 2, and 3, and insert the following:

[NOTE.—The bill as passed by the Senate is printed in roman. The changes made by the conference committee are indicated as follows: Parts struck out are inclosed in brackets; parts inserted are printed in italic.]

That the taxes herein specified imposed by the laws now in force be, and the same are hereby, repealed, as hereinafter provided, namely: On capital and deposits of banks, [and] bankers, and national banking associations, except such taxes as are now due and payable; and on and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-three, the stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers, and the tax on matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations, and other articles imposed by Schedule A following section thirty-four hundred and thirty-seven of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That no drawback shall be allowed upon articles embraced in said schedule that shall be exported on and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-three: Provided, further, That on and after May fifteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-three, matches may be removed by manufacturers thereof from the place of manufacture to warehouses within the United States without attaching thereto the stamps required by law, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 2. That [from] on and after the first day of May, eighteen hundred and eighty-three, dealers in leaf tobacco shall annually pay twelve dollars; dealers in manufactured tobacco shall pay two dollars and forty cents; all manufacturers of tobacco shall pay six dollars; manufacturers of cigars shall pay six dollars; peddlers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars shall pay special taxes as follows: Peddlers of the first class, as now defined by law, shall pay thirty dollars; peddlers of the second class shall pay fifteen dollars; peddlers of the third class shall pay seven dollars and twenty cents; and peddlers of the fourth class shall pay three dollars and sixty cents. Retail dealers in leaf tobacco shall pay two hundred and fifty dollars, and thirty cents for each dollar on the amount of their monthly sales in excess of the rate of five hundred dollars per annum: Provided, That farmers and producers of tobacco may sell at the place of production tobacco of their own growth and raising at retail directly to consumers, to an amount not exceeding one hundred dollars annually.

SEC. 3. That hereafter the special tax of a dealer in manufactured tobacco shall not be required from any farmer, planter, or lumberman who furnishes such tobacco only as rations or supplies to his laborers or employés in the same manner as other supplies are furnished by him to them: Provided, That the aggregate of the supplies of tobacco so by him furnished shall not exceed in quantity one hundred pounds in any one special tax year; that is, from the first day of May in any year until the thirtieth day of April in the next year: And provided further, That such farmer, planter, or lumberman shall not be, at the time he is furnishing such supplies, engaged in the general business of selling dry goods, groceries, or other similar supplies in the manner of a merchant or storekeeper to others than his own employés or laborers.

SEC. 4. That [from] on and after [July] May first, eighteen hundred and eighty-three, the internal taxes on snuff, smoking, and manufactured tobacco, shall be eight cents per pound; and on cigars which shall be manufactured and sold or removed for consumption or sale on and after the first day of [July] May, eighteen hundred and eighty-three, there shall be assessed and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof: On cigars of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, three dollars per thousand; on cigarettes weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, fifty cents per thousand; on cigarettes weighing more than three pounds per thousand, three dollars per thousand: Provided, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such reduction shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of the reduction, but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim [is less than ten dollars and] has not been [ascertained or] presented within [thirty] sixty days following the date of the reduction; and such rebate to manufacturers may be paid in stamps at the reduced rate; and no claim shall be allowed or drawback paid for a less amount than ten dollars. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect.

SEC. 5. That from and after the passage of this act every manufacturer of tobacco or snuff shall, in addition to all other requirements of law, print on each package, or securely affix by pasting on each package containing tobacco or snuff manufactured by or for him, a label on which shall be printed the number of the manufactory, the district and State in which it is situated, and these words:

NOTICE.

The manufacturer of this tobacco has complied with all requirements of law. Every person is cautioned, under penalties of law, not to use this package for tobacco again.

SEC. 6. That [from] on and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-three, the following sections shall constitute and be a substitute for title thirty-three of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

TITLE XXXIII.

DUTIES UPON IMPORTS.

SEC. 2491. All persons are prohibited from importing into the United States from any foreign country, any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, drawing, or other representation, figure or image on or of paper or other material, or any cast, instrument, or other article of an immoral nature, or any drug or medicine, or any article whatever, for the prevention of conception, or for causing unlawful abortion. No invoice or package whatever, or any part of one, in which any such articles are contained shall be admitted to entry; and all invoices and packages whereof any such articles shall compose a part are liable to be proceeded against, seized, and forfeited by due course of law. All such prohibited articles in the course of importation shall be detained by the officer of customs, and proceedings taken against the same as prescribed in the following section: Provided, That the drugs hereinbefore mentioned, when imported in bulk and not put up for any of the purposes hereinbefore specified, are excepted from the operation of this section.

SEC. 2492. Whoever, being an officer, agent, or employé of the Government of the United States, shall knowingly aid or abet any person engaged in any violation of any of the provisions of law prohibiting importing, advertising, dealing in, exhibiting, or sending or receiving by mail obscene or indecent publications or representations, or means for preventing conception or procuring abortion, or other articles of indecent or immoral use or tendency, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for every offense be punishable by a fine of not more than five thousand dollars or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 2493. Any judge of any district or circuit court of the United States, within the proper district, before whom complaint in writing of any violation of the preceding sections is made, to the satisfaction of such judge, and founded on knowledge or belief, and, if upon belief, setting forth the grounds of such belief, and supported by oath or affirmation of the complainant, may issue, conformably to the Constitution, a warrant directed to the marshal, or any deputy marshal, in the proper district, directing him to search for, seize, and take possession of any such article or thing hereinbefore mentioned, and to make due and immediate return thereof to the end that the same may be condemned and destroyed by proceedings, which shall be conducted in the same manner as other proceedings in the case of municipal seizure, and with the same right of appeal or writ of error.

SEC. 2494. The importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from any foreign country into the United States is prohibited: Provided, That the operation of this section shall be suspended as to any foreign country or countries, or any parts of such country or countries, whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall officially determine, and give public notice thereof, that such importation will not tend to the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases among the cattle of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered, and it shall be his duty, to make all necessary orders and regulations to carry this law into effect, or to suspend the same as therein provided, and to send copies thereof to the proper officers in the United States, and to such officers or agents of the United States in foreign countries as he shall judge necessary.

SEC. 2495. Any person convicted of a willful violation of any of the provisions of the preceding section shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2496. No watches, watch-cases, watch-movements, or parts of watch-movements, or any other articles of foreign manufacture, which shall copy or simulate the name or trade-mark of any domestic manufacture, shall be admitted to entry at the custom-houses of the United States, unless such domestic manufacturer is the importer of the same. And in order to aid the officers of the customs in enforcing this prohibition, any domestic manufacturer [of watches] who has adopted trade-marks may require his name and residence and a description of his trade-marks to be recorded in books which shall be kept for that purpose in the Department of the Treasury, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and may furnish to the Department fac-similes of such trade-marks; and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause one or more copies of the same to be transmitted to each collector or other proper officer of the customs.

SEC. 2497. No goods, wares, or merchandise, unless in cases provided for by treaty, shall be imported into the United States from any foreign port or place, except in vessels of the United States, or in such foreign vessels as truly and wholly belong to the citizens or subjects of that country of which the goods are the growth, production, or manufacture; or from which such goods, wares, or merchandise can only be, or most usually are, first shipped for transportation. All goods, wares, or merchandise imported contrary to this section, and the vessel wherein the same shall be imported, together with her cargo, tackle, apparel, and furniture, shall be forfeited to the United States; and such goods, wares, or merchandise, ship, or vessel, and cargo shall be liable to be seized, prosecuted, and condemned, in like manner, and under the same regulations, restrictions, and provisions, as have been heretofore established for the recovery, collection, distribution, and remission of forfeitures to the United States by the several revenue laws.

SEC. 2498. The preceding section shall not apply to vessels, or goods, wares, or merchandise, imported in vessels of a foreign nation which does not maintain a similar regulation against vessels of the United States.

SEC. 2499. There shall be levied, collected, and paid on each and every non-enumerated article which bears a similitude, either in material, quality, texture, or the use to which it may be applied, to any article enumerated in this title as chargeable with duty, the same rate of duty which is levied and charged on the enumerated article which it most resembles in any of the particulars before mentioned; and if any non-enumerated article equally resembles two or more enumerated articles on which different rates are chargeable, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on such non-enumerated article the same rate of duty as is chargeable on the article which it resembles paying the highest duty; and on all articles manufactured from two or more materials the duty shall be assessed at the highest rates at which the component material of chief value may be chargeable. If two or more rates of duty should be applicable to any imported article, it shall be classified for duty under the highest of such rates: Provided, That non-enumerated articles similar in material and quality and texture, and the use to which they may be applied, to articles on the free list, and in the manufacture of which no dutiable materials are used, shall be free.

SEC. 2500. Upon the reimportation of articles once exported of the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States, upon which no internal tax has been assessed or paid, or upon which such tax has been paid and refunded by allowance or drawback, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty equal to the tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws upon such articles.

SEC. 2501. A discriminating duty of ten per centum ad valorem, in addition to the duties imposed by law, shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise which shall be imported on vessels not of the United States; but this discriminating duty shall not apply to goods, wares, and merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States, entitled, by treaty or any act of Congress, to be entered in the ports of the United States on payment of the same duties as shall then be paid on goods, wares, and merchandise imported in vessels of the United States.

SEC. 2502. There shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported from foreign countries, and mentioned in the schedules herein contained, the rates of duty which are, by the schedules, respectively prescribed, namely:

SCHEDULE K.—WOOL AND WOOLENS.

All wools, hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the three following classes:

Class one, clothing wools.—That is to say, merino, mestiza, metz or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated in classes two and thr e.

Class two, combing wools.—That is to say, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used, and also all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals.

Class three, carpet wools and other similar wools.—Such as Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and including all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and elsewhere.

The duty on wools of the first class which shall be imported washed shall be twice the amount of the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed; and the duty on wools of all classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed. The duty upon wool of the sheep, or hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, which shall be imported in any other than ordinary condition, as now and heretofore practiced, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any other foreign substance, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject.

Wools of the first class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be thirty cents or less per pound, ten cents per pound; wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed thirty cents per pound, twelve cents per pound.

Wools of the second class, and all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, the value whereof, at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be thirty cents or less per pound, ten cents per pound; wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed thirty cents per pound, twelve cents per pound.

Wools of the third class, the value whereof, at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be twelve cents or less per pound, two and a half cents per pound; wools of the same class, the value whereof, at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed twelve cents per pound, five cents per pound.

SEC. 2504. Whenever any vessel laden with merchandise in whole or in part subject to duty has been sunk in any river, harbor, bay, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and within its limits, for the period of two years, and is abandoned by the owner thereof, any person who may raise such vessel shall be permitted to bring any merchandise recovered therefrom into the port nearest to the place where such vessel was so raised, free from the payment of any duty thereupon, and without being obliged to enter the same at the custom-house; but under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 2505. The produce of the forests of the State of Maine upon the Saint John River and its tributaries, owned by American citizens, and sawed or hewed in the province of New Brunswick by American citizens, the same being unmanufactured in whole or in part, which is now admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty, shall continue to be so admitted under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, prescribe.

SEC. 2506. The produce of the forests of the State of Maine upon the Saint Croix River and its tributaries, owned by American citizens, and sawed in the province of New Brunswick by American citizens, the same being unmanufactured in whole or in part, and having paid the same taxes as other American lumber on that river, shall be admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, prescribe.

SEC. 2507. Machinery for repair may be imported into the United States without payment of duty, under bond, to be given in double the appraised value thereof, to be withdrawn and exported after said machinery shall have been repaired; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to protect the revenue against fraud, and secure the identity and character of all such importations when again withdrawn and exported, restricting and limiting the export and withdrawal to the same port of entry where imported, and also limiting all bonds to a period of time of not more than six months from the date of the importation.

SEC. 2508. All paintings, statuary, and photographic pictures imported into the United States for exhibition by any association duly authorized under the laws of the United States, or of any State, for the promotion and encouragement of science, art, or industry, and not intended for sale, shall be admitted free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. But bonds shall be given for the payment to the United States of such duties as may be imposed by law upon any and all of such articles as shall not be re-exported within six months after such importation.

SEC. 2509. All works of art, collections in illustration of the progress of the arts, science, or manufactures, photographs, works in terra-cotta, Parian, pottery, or porcelain, and artistic copies of antiquities in metal or other material, hereafter imported in good faith for permanent exhibition at a fixed place by any society or institution established for the encouragement of the arts or science, and not intended for sale, nor for any other purpose than is hereinbefore expressed, and all such articles, imported as aforesaid, now in bond, and all like articles imported in good faith by any society or association for the purpose of erecting a public monument, and not for sale, shall be admitted free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the parties importing articles as aforesaid shall be required to give bonds, with sufficient sureties, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, for the payment of lawful duties which may accrue should any of the articles aforesaid be sold, transferred, or used contrary to the provisions and intent of this act.

SEC. 2510. All lumber, timber, hemp, manila, wire rope, and iron and steel rods, bars, spikes, nails, and bolts, and copper and composition metal which may be necessary for the construction and equipment of vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, after the passage of this act may be imported in bond, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purpose, no duties shall be paid thereon. But vessels receiving the benefit of this section shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States more than two months in any one year, except upon the payment to the United States of the duties on which a rebate is herein allowed: Provided, That vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership shall not be allowed to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States.

SEC. 2511. All articles of foreign production needed for the repair of American vessels engaged exclusively in foreign trade may be withdrawn from bonded warehouses free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 2512. That no duty shall be levied or collected on the importation of peltries brought into the Territories of the United States by Indians, nor on the proper goods and effects, of whatever nature, of Indians passing or repassing the boundary-line aforesaid, unless the same be goods in bales or other large packages unusual among Indians, which shall not be considered as goods belonging to Indians, nor be entitled to the exemption from duty aforesaid.

SEC. 2513. There shall be levied, collected, and paid on the importation of all raw or unmanufactured articles, not herein enumerated or provided for, a duty of ten per centum ad valorem; and all articles manufactured, in whole or in part, not herein enumerated or provided for, a duty of twenty per centum ad valorem.

SEC. 7. That sections twenty-nine hundred and seven and twenty-nine hundred and eight of the Revised Statutes of the United States and section fourteen of the act entitled "An act to amend the customs revenue laws, and to repeal moieties," approved June twenty-second, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and hereafter none of the charges imposed by said sections or any other provisions of existing law shall be estimated in ascertaining the value of goods to be imported, nor shall the value of the usual and necessary sacks, crates, boxes, or covering, of any kind be estimated as part of their value in determining the amount of duties for which they are liable: Provided, That if any packages, sacks, crates, boxes, or coverings of any kind shall be of any material or form designed to evade duties thereon, or designed for use otherwise than in the bona fide transportation of goods to the United States, the same shall be subject to a duty of one hundred per centum ad valorem upon the actual value of the same.

SEC. 8. That section twenty-eight hundred and forty-one of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended and shall on and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-three, be as follows:

SEC. 2841. Whenever merchandise imported into the United States is entered by invoice, one of the following oaths, according to the nature of the case, shall be administered by the collector of the port, at the time of entry, to the owner, importer, consignee, or agent: Provided, That if any of the invoices or bills of lading of any merchandise imported in said vessel, which should otherwise be embraced in said entry, have not been received at the date of the entry, the affidavit may state the fact, and thereupon such merchandise of which the invoices or bills of lading are not produced shall not be included in such entry, but may be entered subsequently.

OATH OF CONSIGNEE, IMPORTER, OR AGENT.

I, ——— ———, do solemnly and truly swear (or affirm) that the invoice and bill of lading now presented by me to the collector of ——— are the true and only invoice and bill of lading by me received, of goods, wares, and merchandise imported in the ———, whereof ——— ——— is master, from ———, for account of any person whomsoever for whom I am authorized to enter the same; that the said invoice and bill of lading are in the state in which they were actually received by me, and that I do not know nor believe in the existence of any other invoice or bill of lading of the said goods, wares, and merchandise; that the entry now delivered to the collector contains a just and true account of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, according to the said invoice and bill of lading; that nothing has been, on my part, nor to my knowledge, on the part of any other person, concealed or suppressed, whereby the United States may be defrauded of any part of the duty lawfully due on the said goods, wares, and merchandise; that the said invoice and the declaration therein are in all respects true, and were made by the person by whom the same purports to have been made, and that if, at any time hereafter, I discover any error in the said invoice, or in the account now rendered of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, or receive any other invoice of the same, I will immediately make the same known to the collector of this district. And I do further solemnly and truly swear (or affirm) that, to the best of my knowledge and belief (insert the name and residence of the owner or owners,) is (or are) the owner (or owners) of the goods, wares, and merchandise mentioned in the annexed entry; that the invoice now produced by me exhibits the actual cost (if purchased) or fair market value (if otherwise obtained) at the time or times and place or places when or where procured, (as the case may be,) of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, including all cost for finishing said goods, wares, and merchandise to their present condition, and no other or different discount, bounty, or drawback but such as has been actually allowed on the same.

OATH OF OWNER IN CASES WHERE MERCHANDISE HAS BEEN ACTUALLY PURCHASED.

I, ——— ———, do solemnly and truly swear (or affirm) that the entry now delivered by me to the collector of ——— contains a just and true account of the goods, wares, and merchandise imported by or consigned to me, in the ———, whereof ——— ——— is master, from ———; that the invoice which I now produce contains a just and faithful account of the actual cost of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, including all cost of finishing said goods, wares, and merchandise to their present condition, and no other discount, drawback, or bounty but such as has been actually allowed on the same; that I do not know or believe in the existence of any invoice or bill of lading other than those now produced by me, and that they are in the state in which I actually received them. And I further solemnly and truly swear (or affirm) that I have not in the said entry or invoice concealed or suppressed anything whereby the United States may be defrauded of any part of the duty lawfully due on the said goods, wares, and merchandise; that the said invoice and the declaration thereon are in all respects true, and were made by the person by whom the same purports to have been made, and that if at any time hereafter I discover any error in the said invoice or in the account now produced of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, or receive any other invoice of the same, I will immediately make the same known to the collector of this district.

OATH OF MANUFACTURER OR OWNER IN CASES WHERE MERCHANDISE HAS NOT BEEN ACTUALLY PURCHASED.

I, ——— ———, do solemnly and truly swear (or affirm) that the entry now delivered by me to the collector of ——— contains a just and true account of goods, wares, and merchandise imported by or consigned to me in the ———, whereof ——— ——— is master, from ———; that the said goods, wares, and merchandise were not actually bought by me, or by my agent, in the ordinary mode of bargain and sale, but that, nevertheless, the invoice which I now produce contains a just and faithful valuation of the same, at their fair market value, at the time or times and place or places when and where procured for my account (or for account of myself or partners); that the said invoice contains also a just and faithful account of all the cost for finishing said goods, wares, and merchandise to their present condition, and no other discount, drawback, or bounty but such as has been actually allowed on the said goods, wares, and merchandise; that the said invoice and the declaration thereon are in all respects true, and were made by the person by whom the same purports to have been made; that I do not know nor believe in the existence of any invoice or bill of lading other than those now produced by me, and that they are in the state in which I actually received them. And I do further solemnly and truly swear (or affirm) that I have not in the said entry or invoice concealed or suppressed anything whereby the United States may be defrauded of any part of the duty lawfully due on the said goods, wares, and merchandise, and that if at any time hereafter I discover any error in the said invoice, or in the account now produced of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, or receive any other invoice of the same, I will immediately make the same known to the collector of this district.

SEC. 9. If upon the appraisal of imported goods, wares, and merchandise, it shall appear that the true and actual market value and wholesale price thereof, as provided by law, cannot be ascertained to the satisfaction of the appraiser, whether because such goods, wares, and merchandise be consigned for sale by the manufacturer abroad to his agent in the United States, or for any other reason, it shall then be lawful to appraise the same by ascertaining the cost or value of the materials composing such merchandise, at the time and place of manufacture, together with the expense of manufacturing, preparing, and putting up such merchandise for shipment, and in no case shall the value of such goods, wares, and merchandise be appraised at less than the total cost or value thus ascertained.

SEC. [9] 10. That all imported goods, wares, and merchandise which may be in the public stores or bonded warehouses on the day and year when this act shall go into effect, except as otherwise provided in this act, shall be subjected to no other duty upon the entry thereof for consumption than if the same were imported respectively after that day; and all goods, wares, and merchandise remaining in bonded warehouses on the day and year this act shall take effect, and upon which the duties shall have been paid, shall be entitled to a refund of the difference between the amount of duties paid and the amount of duties said goods, wares, and merchandise would be subject to if the same were imported respectively after that date.

SEC. [10] 11. Nothing in this act shall in any way change or impair the force or effect of any treaty between the United States and any other government, or any laws passed in pursuance of or for the execution of any such treaty, so long as such treaty shall remain in force in respect of the subjects embraced in this act; but whenever any such treaty, so far as the same respects said subjects, shall expire or be otherwise terminated, the provisions of this act shall be in force in all respects in the same manner and to the same extent as if no such treaty had existed at the time of the passage hereof.

SEC. [11] 12. That in respect of all articles mentioned in Schedule E of section six of this act, this act shall take effect on and after the first day of June, anno Domini eighteen hundred and eighty-three.

SEC. [12] 13. That the repeal of existing laws, or modifications thereof embraced in this act shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil cause, before the said repeal or modifications; but all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made; nor shall said repeal or modifications in any manner affect the right to any office, or change the term or tenure thereof. Any offenses committed, and all penalties or forfeitures or liabilities incurred under any statute embraced in or changed, modified or repealed by this act may be prosecuted and punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed. All acts of limitation, whether applicable to civil causes and proceedings or to the prosecution of offenses, or for the recovery of penalties or forfeitures embraced in or modified, changed, or repealed by this act, shall not be affected thereby; and all suits, proceedings, or prosecutions, whether civil or criminal, for causes arising or acts done or committed prior to the passage of this act, may be commenced and prosecuted within the same time and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes."

D. C. HASKELL,
EMORY SPEER,
Managers on the part of the House.

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
N. W. ALDRICH,
JAMES W. McDILL,
WM. MAHONE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

[During the reading of the report the Clerk was relieved for a portion of the time by Mr. SPEER, Mr. MILLER, and Mr. ROBINSON of Massachusetts.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. ANDERSON said: I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD as if read

Mr. BERRY. I object.

The reading of the report as above printed was resumed and concluded.]

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers;

A bill (S. 729) for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins, of the United States Army; and

A bill (S. 964) for the relief of Joseph C. Irwin.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 331) for the printing of the Agricultural Report for the year 1883;

A bill (H. R. 3258) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hendrickson;

A bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands;

A bill (H. R. 5543) to confirm certain entries on the public lands; and

A bill (H. R. 5674) for the relief of Edward Bellows.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF.

Mr. KELLEY. In view of the lateness of the time in the session I should be disposed to move the previous question on concurrence in the report of the committee of conference. But if there are gentlemen who desire to propound any questions I have no objection to coming to an understanding as to how much time shall be given to discussion or question and fixing an hour at which the previous question shall be ordered.

Mr. CARLISLE. A sufficient number of gentlemen on this side of the House have notified me of their desire to speak to consume an hour and twenty minutes, without including any time which I might desire to occupy myself. If any debate be allowed I think I should be permitted to make some remarks in connection with this matter.

Mr. KELLEY. I have thought of naming two hours, one for each side of the House, so that the previous question might be ordered at 10 minutes past 4; the debate to be in five-minute speeches, except as in the case of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE], so that the previous question should be ordered at 10 minutes past 4.

Mr. ATHERTON. Make it short.

Mr. KELLEY. If less time would suit the other side I will suggest one hour and a half.

Mr. CARLISLE. There is a demand here for more time; at least an hour and a half on our side.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand the demand to be the other way—an hour and a half for the whole debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. An hour and a half on this side.

Mr. REED. That would carry it too late.

Mr. KELLEY. I think that an hour on each side would be enough.

Mr. CARLISLE. More is desired on this side.

Mr. KELLEY. Unfortunately I have gentlemen around me who engross my ear so that I can not understand what is said by gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. MILLS. I think that it would be better to accord an hour and a half on each side.

Mr. KELLEY. That would carry us to the time for a recess.

Mr. CARLISLE. Can we not agree that the vote shall be taken at 5 o'clock?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There would not be time to take the vote before the recess at half past 5.

Mr. CARLISLE. The vote can be taken in twenty minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. A vote by yeas and nays is seldom taken in twenty minutes' time in this House.

Mr. MILLS. Then let it be understood that the vote shall be taken the first thing this evening, and gentlemen can then be here ready to vote.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the order for a recess this evening.

Mr. KASSON. That ought to be done; this is the last day of the session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] asks unanimous consent that the order for a recess at five and a half o'clock be vacated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the order for the recess is vacated.

Mr. KELLEY. I am now ready to say that I will consent that the previous question be ordered at 5 o'clock, and the intermediate time be divided between the two sides.

Mr. KASSON. Not the previous question to be ordered at 5, but that the vote shall be taken at 5.

Mr. KELLEY. Let the previous question be now ordered, with the understanding that the vote on agreeing to the report shall be taken at 5 o'clock.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] asks unanimous consent that the previous question on the pending conference report be considered as ordered at 5 o'clock. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. KELLEY. Now we will be very happy to hear from gentlemen on that side.

Mr. CARLISLE. I supposed that the chairman of the committee who makes the report would at least favor the House with some statement as to its contents and the effect it will have on the proposition submitted by the Senate.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman please state that again?

Mr. CARLISLE. I say that I had supposed that the usual course would be followed in this case; that the gentleman who makes the report to the House would at least make a statement as to the effect this conference report will have upon the proposition sent to us by the Senate.

Mr. KELLEY. I had felt no disposition to consume any of the time of the House. All that I can say upon the subject is this: The first sections of the bill contained in the report are the provisions of the bill of the House which was passed during the last session of this Congress for the repealing of certain internal-revenue taxes, together with the amendments made thereto by the Senate touching the tax on tobacco, cigars, snuff, &c. The two together, the House bill and the Senate amendments, it is estimated will repeal from thirty-five to forty millions of dollars of internal taxes.

It is always difficult to estimate the effect of changes in impost duties upon the revenues of the Government. The present object, dear to the heart of the people, is to diminish an excessive revenue. The experience of our country has taught us that a large reduction of impost duties, sufficiently large to invite increased importations of commodities, has not the effect of an immediate diminution of the revenue, whatever effect it may ultimately have, and the reduction is to be measured by its effect upon the industries of the country.

A prosperous people not only satisfy their wants, but gratify their desires, and in doing so consume articles whether they are taxable and dutiable or not. I repeat, a prosperous people are liberal consumers, because they not only supply their wants, but being able to do so, they gratify their desires.

An impoverished people, say, for instance, a laboring people without employment and heads of industrial establishments, called by Carlyle long years ago, when discussing economic questions for the British people, "captains of industries," ruined by sudden changes in the import duties and a large increase of commodities competing at low prices with their own, are not only unable to gratify their desires, but the former class, the laborers, find themselves, as they always have done whenever there have been sudden and great reductions of our tariff duties, impoverished, idle, tending toward extreme poverty, and often falling by whole communities into pauperism or dependence upon public charity.

I have therefore been unable to make an estimate of what the immediate effect of the proposed changes in our tariff will be upon our revenue. The provisions of the proposed bill in many respects have my most cordial approval, while there are other provisions which I can not defend here or elsewhere.

The yielding by the two Houses and the conference committee to the clamor against the maintenance of the manufacture of quinine in this country is a provision I can not approve. The embodying into statute law of what I have always regarded as a mistaken determination of the Treasury Department on the subject of tin-plate is another. The rates of duty on nickel is another. But I need not enumerate all the objections I see.

Upon the whole, I find a bill which is, in my judgment, an improvement upon the present law, and a bill which I believe will by its effect upon import duties and its reduction of excise taxes diminish the revenue some $65,000,000 or $70,000,000 a year. I know in the country no man more capable of making an estimate on this point than the honorable chairman of the conferees on behalf of the Senate, Senator MORRILL, whose estimate is that the adoption of this proposed bill will relieve the people from about $70,000,000 of impositions.

Now, I believe that I can say nothing more specifically on this question than I have said. In a former discussion, when the tariff bill was in Committee of the Whole, I was laughed at for saying that an estimate based on the importation of a preceding year was nothing more than a formulated guess, because the question is, will the imports be greater or less under the altered rates? If we are to import precisely the same articles and to the same amount that we did in a preceding year, then you can make your estimate with accuracy; but if the importations are to change in character and amount, the estimate must be largely without foundation.

It has been suggested to me that in speaking a moment ago of $70,-

000,000 of impositions I used an expression that may mislead. Therefore I wish to say that of this amount from thirty-two millions to thirty-five millions—and I think a much larger amount, but those are the figures given me by those who have made the calculation—would be upon internal taxes, and the remainder, about the same sum, upon import duties.

Mr. FLOWER. How many office-holders do you dispense with?

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman's question is not relevant to the question put to me by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE], and what is more, the gentleman interposes a question touching a branch of revenue reform on which he knows there is no disagreement between him and myself. Therefore I shall not consume any part of the time allowed to this discussion by following the gentleman as he would have me do.

The calculation made in December, 1882, was that the bill then presented would effect a reduction of $47,391,000, including the tobacco taxation and the other taxes included in the House bill. So that with a reduction of $42,000,000 to $45,000,000 upon internal taxes I think the statement that the probable total reduction will be from $65,000,000 to $75,000,000 is entirely within the bounds of probability.

Now, if there are any direct questions to be put to me I shall be glad to answer them if I can.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman will allow me to ask him whether the committee considered the question of the amount of that rebate which the Government will be compelled to pay on the 1st of May on account of taxes already paid upon tobacco?

Mr. KELLEY. Having no possible data from which conclusions which might be trusted could be derived, the committee spent no time in considering that question, or, if the gentleman will pardon me, we wasted no time in its consideration.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman state what it is expected the reduction on sugar will amount to?

Mr. KELLEY. It is estimated at $11,000,000; it will probably be slightly in excess of that sum.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The gentleman will allow me to ask him whether the committee "wasted" any of its time in considering the instructions of the House that this bill was unconstitutional?

Mr. KELLEY. The committee did not disregard any instruction given it by the House.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Why did they not present a report on that subject?

Mr. KELLEY. Because they acted upon their own conclusions.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Does the gentleman mean to say they concluded their votes of the 27th of February last were wrong?

Mr. KELLEY. No, sir. The matter is not before the House, and it is not fair to consume the time allotted to this side in discussions which are not pertinent to matters now under consideration.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to a provision on page 12, lines 127 and 128. I would like to have an explanation of that. Is not that a new provision, so far as tariff legislation is concerned?

Mr. KELLEY. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Does the gentleman think it is covered by the provisions of the existing law?

Mr. KELLEY. I think it is.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The gentleman must be referring to the provision re-enacting the present statute, a provision preceding that to which I allude. There has been inserted a provision designed, I think, to overrule the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of, I believe, Vietor vs. The United States, reported in 104 United States Supreme Court Reports. By this provision you put it in the power of the customs officers to impose the highest rate of duty upon all articles on which two rates are imposed.

Mr. MCKINLEY. That is a new feature practically.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Not "practically;" it is a new feature.

Mr. MCKINLEY. It is a new feature.

Mr. HUTCHINS. What I would like would be to hear the explanation of the chairman of the committee why that change of the law is made.

Mr. KELLEY. I will give it with pleasure. It is a provision for the prevention of litigation and of demands on the Treasury for refunds of duty paid on subsequent charges of construction. Much of the litigation between importers and the Treasury Department results from the fact that the law gives the Treasury no fixed rule of action on such questions. Duties are sometimes imposed on one basis and sometimes on another, and it has frequently happened duties being based on a higher rate applicable to the case have been collected to large amounts, and when the reversal of the rule has been obtained enormous refunds have been demanded, as was the case in the ribbon matter and a number of others which might be referred to. This says to the Treasury Department, if two or more rates of duty should be applicable to any imported article it shall be classified for duty under the highest of such rates.

Another object of the provision is to prevent the evasion of our laws by changing the names of articles and seeking new construction of the Treasury or the courts on old matters under new names. It is to compel importers to invoice their goods by their true character. Is the statement satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. HUTCHINS. It is not satisfactory; and I should like to make this suggestion——

Mr. KELLEY. Please make it, then, in the time of your own side of the House, for the time I am speaking in is taken from some who are to succeed me.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I wish to understand the matter.

Mr. KELLEY. I have given you all the information I have on the subject.

Mr. HUTCHINS. It is not satisfactory.

Mr. KELLEY. I now yield the floor to the other side of the House. How much time have I disposed of our portion?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, at this late hour of the session I shall not attempt to make anything like an elaborate statement concerning this report and the effect its recommendations, if adopted, will have on the proposition sent to us by the Senate and on the existing law. Under other circumstances I should not consider it necessary or proper to say anything at all; but inasmuch as the distinguished chairman of the committee has not even attempted to give the House an explanation of the changes proposed, I think it is the duty of some one on this side to submit a brief statement.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the public sentiment and the public interest demand a very material reduction of taxation, and I regret exceedingly that the committee has not been able to bring before the House such a measure of relief as will command the general support of this side or be regarded as a satisfactory adjustment by the great body of producers and consumers in the country. I have announced here more than once during the progress of the debate on this subject that I stood ready to vote for an average reduction of even 20 per cent. justly and equitably distributed among all the articles subject to taxation under our customs laws. The same declaration has been made, substantially at least, by several other gentlemen on this side, but it has so far failed to receive a favorable response from those who control the legislation of the House. The proposition now submitted does not, in my judgment, make a reduction of much more than one-half of that amount. It may be true as stated by the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. KELLEY] that the total reduction proposed by the bill may possibly amount to sixty-five or seventy million dollars; upon that subject, however, I am not prepared to speak accurately, because the time which has elapsed since the report was agreed upon by the conference committee has not been sufficient to enable me to make the necessary investigations and calculations.

But, sir, even if that be true, it is conceded by the gentleman who has just addressed the House that from forty-two to forty-five million dollars of that reduction is taken off the internal-revenue taxes, leaving the remainder, not exceeding $24,000,000 or $25,000,000, to come from customs duties. At least twenty-two or twenty-three millions will be taken from tobacco, snuff, and cigars; about fourteen millions from the taxes on bank capital and deposits and checks; some three millions from matches; while out of the $24,000,000 or $25,000,000 proposed to be taken from the tariff duties nearly $11,000,000 will come from the single article of sugar.

Now, sir, this subject has been under consideration in this House and at the other end of the Capitol for more than a month, and upon certain questions involved in this report test votes have been taken in both legislative departments. When gentlemen come to examine the report made by the conference committee they will be, I think, surprised to find that in some very important instances the deliberate judgment both of the House and Senate has been disregarded, and duties have been placed at higher rates than either of those bodies had agreed to adopt. The first article of any consequence upon which a change of duty is recommended by the report is common earthen and stone ware, printed, painted, or gilded. The report proposes that this ordinary earthen and stone ware, which now pays a duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem, shall hereafter pay a duty of 60 per cent. ad valorem, an apparent increase of exactly 50 per cent. in the rates of duty on this article in common use among all—no, not among all classes, but among very large classes of the American people who are unable to buy or use the more expensive articles of China, porcelain, or bisque ware.

I have said that this is an apparent increase of exactly 50 per cent.; but it ought to be stated in this connection that the duties upon commissions, charges, and packages are proposed to be abolished by this bill, which upon these common articles of earthen-ware may amount to 15 or 17 per cent. upon the duty. Deducting 17 per cent., the highest rate that has yet been claimed by anybody upon this floor, from the 50 per cent. proposed increase, we find that this report proposes to make a clear net increase of 33 per cent. in the duty upon this article over the rates prescribed by the existing law. I regret that the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not see proper to give the House some reason why this enormous increase of duty should be made. It is not a matter of such little consequence as to pass unnoticed either here or in the country.

The next important change proposed by the report is upon the article of iron ore. This House, after a full debate and in an elaborate consideration of the question, voted in Committee of the Whole that the duty upon iron ore should be fixed at 50 cents per ton. The Senate in the proposition sent to the House as a substitute for the internal-revenue bill inserted the same rate of 50 cents per ton upon iron ore. The existing duty upon that article is 20 per cent. ad valorem, which is equivalent to an average rate upon all the kinds of ore, rich as well as poor in metal, of about 57 cents per ton. But on the poorer grades of ore, those which contain proportionately less metal, 20 per cent. ad valorem will amount to much less than 57 cents per ton, while on the better classes or grades it will amount to more. The rate of 50 cents per ton was recommended by the Tariff Commission and agreed to by both Houses of Congress, and consequently the committee of conference had simply to consider a proposition which had met the concurrence of both the bodies it represented, a proposition fixing a duty of 50 cents per ton upon iron ore, a raw material which lies at the very foundation of all of the iron and steel industries of the country. And permit me to say here again that if we are ever to make rational and permanent reductions in our customs-revenue system we must begin at the bottom; we must make the reductions first upon the raw material, and then those who are engaged in making the finished products from it can bear corresponding reductions upon their articles, and ultimately the consumer will be reached and benefited.

Sir, it has been well said that iron is the imperial metal. That nation which can make the cheapest iron will necessarily control the commerce of the world. It will control ship-building and the carrying trade; it will supply the material for the construction of railroads, and it will manufacture and sell to other parts of the world the machinery and agricultural implements required to develop the resources and trade of their people. The ability to produce cheap iron and steel has contributed as much as anything else to secure for England her present commercial supremacy throughout the globe, and she will doubtless continue to hold that supremacy until some other nation can successfully compete with her in the production of these indispensable articles. But according to this report we are not to have cheap iron or steel in this country. Disregarding the deliberate judgment of both Houses, the committee now proposes to increase the duty upon iron ore exactly 50 per cent. above the rate agreed to in the bill; that is to say, the duty is to be increased from 50 cents per ton to 75 cents per ton upon all ores, rich and poor alike. I have no time to comment on this proposition as it deserves, but merely state the fact and leave the House to form its own judgment as to the justice and propriety of the proposed increase.

When we came to the next classification in the same clause, relating to sulphuret of iron, or pyrites, which is brought into this country mainly for the purpose of extracting the sulphur in order that sulphuric acid may be produced for fertilizing purposes, the same rate of 75 cents per ton was put upon the article, and in addition thereto 2½ cents per pound upon all the copper contained therein if it was found to contain over 2½ per cent. of copper by any assay that might be applied to it. The bill as the Senate sent it to us exempted this pyrites from any additional duty over 50 cents per ton, provided it did not contain more than 3½ per cent. of copper by the dry assay. But your committee of conference proposes that an additional duty shall be imposed upon it if it contains over 2½ per cent. of copper by any assay or test that may be applied to it. It is well understood that the dry assay would not develop as large a percentage of copper as the wet assay. Hence the words "dry assay" were stricken out, so that still greater quantities of these pyrites might be brought under this additional duty.

I am not undertaking, sir, to make an argument; I simply want to state the facts in order that this House and the country may know exactly what it is that this committee recommends. The next thing engaging the attention of the conference committee was steel rails, another article upon which both the House and the Senate had expressed their judgment. By a vote in this House the rate upon steel rails had been put at $15 per ton. In the proposition sent to us by the Senate the rate was put at $15.68 per ton; and yet this committee, sent out to reconcile what were supposed to be differences of opinion between the two branches of the legislative department, again disregarded the deliberate judgment of both of them and put the duty at $17 per ton; that is to say, $2 over the rate agreed to by the House and nearly a dollar and a half per ton over the rate agreed to by the Senate, when the fact is that either of the rates proposed by the House or the Senate is practically prohibitory at the present prices.

Sir, if this House is willing to agree to these propositions which I have just mentioned in which its judgment was disregarded and the judgment of the Senate also set at defiance, other gentlemen must take the responsibility for it; I will not carry it on my shoulders.

Then we came to the article of bar-iron; and I am very much afraid I will not be able to go through the list without consuming too much of the time on this side. [Cries of "Go on!"] We found there three classifications—one with the rate of duty at $18 per ton, the next with $20 per ton, and the third with $22 per ton. The committee of conference recommends on the first classification that there shall be a reduction of 8 cents per ton; that is to say from $18 to $17.92. But to compensate for that it recommends that on the next classification there shall be an increase from $20 per ton to $22.40 per ton, which is $2.24 higher on all descriptions of iron embraced in that classification than this House voted in Committee of the Whole a week or ten days ago. The description of bar-iron which this report proposes to put at $22.40 per ton was put by the House at $20.16 per ton, and by the Senate at $20 per ton. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] shakes his head, but I repeat the statement, and here are the bills lying on my table which any gentleman can take and compare for himself. I have not time to read them now. The description is a little different verbally, because this report does not say anything about the width; neither does the other classification of the Senate say anything about the width, but it covers identically the same article.

Mr. HASKELL. The whole classification is changed.

Mr. CARLISLE. Three classifications are made. But the Senate has put in as its second classification a part of that which was our first classification. We put it at $20.16 in the House bill. It was $20 by the Senate bill, and it is proposed to be put at $22.40 per ton by this report.

Then on the first classification of sheet-iron this conference committee proposes to increase the duties over the Senate bill, not over the House bill but over the Senate bill, to the extent of $2.24 per ton.

It also proposes to insert the following proviso, which is entirely new in our tariff legislation and which will operate most injuriously upon a large and valuable industry, besides greatly increasing the cost of many useful articles of household ware. This is the proviso:

Provided, That plate or sheet or taggers iron, by whatever name designated, other than the polished, planished, or glanced herein provided for, which has been pickled or cleaned by acid, or by any other material or process, and which is cold-rolled, shall pay one-quarter cent per pound more duty than the corresponding gauges of common or black sheet or taggers iron.

The effect of this will be to impose an additional duty of $5.60 per ton on all plate or sheet iron when pickled or cleaned and cold-rolled, making on sheet-iron not thinner than No. 20 wire-gauge, $30.24 per ton; thinner than No. 20 and not thinner than No. 25, $32.48; thinner than No. 25 and not thinner than No. 29, $39.20 per ton. There are many millions of dollars invested and many thousands of hands employed in this country in the manufacture of enameled ware from sheet-iron that has been pickled or cleaned and cold-rolled, and this provision will be a heavy blow to that great industry as well as to the people at large who purchase and use their goods. I believe that most if not all the iron used in the manufacture of these articles, such as buckets, pitchers, &c., has to be imported, on account of the fact that our domestic iron has not sufficient ductility to bear the heavy, deep stamping to which the material is necessarily subjected. The duties are already very high, almost prohibitory in fact, and if this report shall be agreed to there is great danger that the production of these wares will cease in this country and many workmen be thrown out of employment, not for the want of what is called protection, but because, in order to protect somebody else, who does not need it, the duties are placed so high as to deprive them of the material to work upon.

When we come to steel, one of the most important items in the bill, an entire reclassification was made different in every respect except one, not only from what was done in the Senate but from what was done here in this House. The only respect in which this proposition as now submitted by the committee of conference corresponds with the action of this House is, that on steel worth less than 4 cents per pound it proposes to impose a duty of 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HASKELL. The next class is just like it.

Mr. CARLISLE. I beg pardon. It is true the next classification is like it as it stands now. The rate was reduced from 2½ cents to 2 cents. So that in those two respects instead of one, as just stated by me, there is a correspondence between what was done by the House and what is recommended by this committee. But in every respect it is different from the classification recommended by the Senate, and in most respects different in rates also.

And now, sir, let us look for a moment at this remarkable clause on steel. In the first place the Senate proposed that on all these kinds of steel valued at 5 cents or less per pound the duty should be 40 per cent. ad valorem. The committee of conference proposes to strike out 5 and draw the line at 4 cents per pound and raise the duty to 45 per cent. ad valorem, thus increasing both ways—first by lowering the value of the article to which this duty shall apply, and next by increasing the percentage of the duty itself.

Large quantities of steel are now admitted at 30 per cent. ad valorem, while some kinds pay 45 per cent. ad valorem, the question as to the rates depending on whether the steel is classed as steel simply or as manufactures of steel not otherwise provided for. Now it is proposed to put 45 per cent. on all of it, and I shall show to the House that this is a most unnecessary and unjust discrimination against the lower and cheaper grades of steel—the Bessemer, Thomas-Gilchrist, and other classes of steel of that character.

On the next grade or classification the committee of conference proposes that there shall be a duty of 2 cents per pound—that is, on all steel valued above 4 cents and not exceeding 7 cents per pound. Any gentleman can easily make the calculation for himself and ascertain what equivalent ad valorem that will be. If that steel is worth 6 cents per pound, 2 cents per pound is 33 per cent. ad valorem; if it is worth 7 cents per pound, 2 cents per pound is about 28½ per cent. ad valorem.

This is crucible cast-steel, and yet on the low grades of Bessemer steel, out of which rods are made to manufacture wire fencing, it is proposed to impose 45 per cent. ad valorem. When we come to the next classification between 7 cents and 10 cents we find a rate of 2¾ cents proposed, and on that a similar calculation shows that if the article be worth 9 cents per pound, the duty will be equivalent to 30 per cent. ad valorem; if it be worth 10 cents per pound, the duty will be 27½ per cent. ad valorem. If it should be worth 7½ cents per pound, which is about the lowest grade that could be admitted under this classification, the equivalent ad valorem would be less than 37 per cent. Then on all valued above 10 cents per pound the duty is 3½ cents per pound; if that steel is worth 11 cents per pound the ad valorem rate will be 29 per cent. If it is worth 12 cents, the ad valorem rate will be 27 per cent.

It will be seen, therefore, that as the value of the article increases the ad valorem decreases all the way through, so that we have here presented for our indorsement the extraordinary proposition that there shall be imposed upon these low and common grades of steel a much higher rate of duty than upon the very finest grades of crucible cast-steel. Why is this? I regret that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] did not consider it his duty to explain to the House and the country the reason for this discrimination against the steel which is now coming into general use throughout the country, and which by reason of improved processes and methods in its manufacture will soon be as cheap as iron itself. Why should it pay a higher rate of duty than the steel used in the manufacture of razors and the finest qualities of cutlery? Are the farmers of the country realizing such exorbitant profits from their industries that the Government is justifiable in taxing their fencing and their tools and implements higher than it taxes the material used by the manufacturers of fine cutlery? It is proposed not only to give these manufacturers the advantage in the rates of taxation imposed upon their material, but it is also proposed to protect them at the expense of the consumer by a duty of 50 per cent. upon the products of their industries. For them the rule is low rates upon their material and high rates upon their finished product, while for the farmer the rule is high rates upon the material and free competition with all the world in the sale of his products.

It seems to me that some explanation ought to be made to the representatives of the people before they are expected to vote for propositions so extraordinary as those appear to be.

In reference to steel wheels and steel-tired wheels for locomotive and railway purposes, the committee of conference adopted the House classification, but agreed to the Senate rate on the finished article; and I desire to call the attention of my friend from Illinois to the rate proposed on the material from which the wheels are made. It is proposed to put a duty of 2 cents per pound upon ingots and blooms and blanks, which the manufacturers of steel wheels and steel-tired wheels are now using in this country, and this rate is to be imposed, in the language of the bill, "without regard to the degree of manufacture."

All steel not otherwise provided for is admitted under the existing law at 30 per cent. ad valorem. The Senate had proposed 30 per cent. ad valorem in the bill sent to us, but a majority of the conferees on the part of the House asked, and the Senate conferees agreed to increase the duty exactly 50 per cent.; and it is so reported, that is to say, there is an increase from 30 per cent. ad valorem to 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Now, it seems to me, with all respect to gentlemen on the other side, that this proposed change in the law, which will ultimately embrace large classes of importations, ought to have been explained to the House by those who are responsible for the report and who must be responsible for such legislation as may result from it.

Then again, this report proposes to increase the duties upon large classes of cotton goods and upon a very large class of woolen goods. Raw cotton is free and there can be no argument made in favor of an increase of duties upon manufactured cotton goods on the ground that the raw material is subject to a duty as is sometimes urged in the case of woolen goods. With free or nearly free material and with the experience of many years in the manufacture of cotton goods, the time has come when the duties should be diminished instead of increased.

I see the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] smiling. It is true there is a little duty upon dye-stuffs, and also a duty upon the machinery used in the manufacture of cotton goods. But if I were to make an argument from my friend's standpoint, I would be compelled to contend that the effect of those duties is to give the manufacturers cheaper machinery and cheaper dye-stuffs than they would otherwise have.

I do not, however, agree with that argument, but believe, and gentlemen upon the other side believe, as is clearly manifested when they come to act practically upon these matters, that the imposition of a duty on the foreign article enhances the price of the domestic article. If this be not so, why do we hear day after day on this floor and elsewhere that we must impose high rates of duty on the finished products because we have imposed duties upon the material out of which they are made?

The practice of the gentlemen upon this subject has never conformed to their theory, for in every instance when they are called upon to vote here upon their responsibilities as legislators they indorse the doctrine which we on this side have maintained from the beginning, and insist that the imposition of a duty upon the raw material demands the imposition of a compensatory duty upon the finished product made from it.

The cotton goods to which I was about to refer are admitted under the present law at 35 per cent. ad valorem. This report proposes:

On stockings, hose, half-hose, shirts, and drawers, fashioned, narrowed, or shaped wholly or in part by knitting machines or frames, or knit by hand, and composed wholly of cotton, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

And again:

Cotton laces, embroideries, insertings, trimmings, lace window-curtains, cotton damask, hemmed handkerchiefs, and cotton velvet, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

The importations during the last fiscal year of the classes of goods which include these articles amounted in round numbers to $17,000,000. Not all of that $17,000,000, however, consisted of these particular articles; but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RUSSELL], who I regret to say has been called home, substantially admitted in his remarks here when the bill was under discussion in this House that two-thirds of these importations would be affected by this proposed increase of duty.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Permit me to interrupt the gentleman long enough to say that my colleague [Mr. RUSSELL] is unavoidably absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am aware of that fact and regret it very much.

The calculations submitted by the Committee on Ways and Means from the Bureau of Statistics were based upon the assumption that the proposed increase of duty on cotton goods would apply to only one-third of that importation. I have always contended, as gentlemen who heard my remarks at the beginning of the discussion will remember, that it would embrace about two-thirds of the importations; and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RUSSELL], I repeat, substantially admitted that fact in the debate.

Here, then, is a proposition to increase the duties on an importation of cotton goods amounting last year to $11,500,000, being two-thirds of $17,000,000. For what reason? No increase is proposed upon any material which enters into the manufacture of those goods. They are in large part necessary articles of clothing in common use among all classes of the American people, the laboring people, whose welfare gentlemen upon the other side are so anxious to promote, as well as those of larger means.

Why has not some reason been given by the gentlemen in charge of this report for this proposed increase? Does the gentleman think that the country will overlook this? Do gentlemen think the representatives of the people here on this floor will not be called on when they go home to tell their constituents why it is that they have imposed additional duties upon their clothing at a time when they had been promised relief from excessive taxation? Sir, that question and many others which gentlemen now appear to think very trivial will be pressed upon their attention when the people come to review this legislation.

Then, on a large class of woolen goods another very material increase of duty is proposed. This report proposes to reduce the duty upon wool, the material which enters into the manufacture of these articles, to the extent of about 18 per cent. if we leave out of account the reclassification, the precise effect of which can not now be ascertained. Yet it is proposed to increase the duties on all-wool dress goods, for women's and children's wear, from 6 cents per square yard and 35 per cent. ad valorem, or 8 cents per square yard and 40 per cent ad valorem—the rates under the present law being dependent upon the value of the goods—up to 9 cents per square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem. No matter what they may be worth, no matter how cheap the article itself may be, it must pay under this bill 9 cents per square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is an increase over the present law.

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes, sir; an increase over the present law touching, as I shall show presently, a very large importation of goods. These are the cheap, all-wool goods——

Mr. CHACE. Oh, no.

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes; these are the cheap, all-wool dress goods. I am not speaking now of those goods having a cotton or other vegetable warp, but simply of the all-wool goods.

Mr. CHACE. The gentleman is mistaken, as I will show hereafter.

Mr. CARLISLE. They are what is usually denominated the "Sunday wear" of the laboring people of the country. There are several samples of them in the committee-room, which gentlemen can examine if they choose. They are a smooth, attractive quality of all-wool goods purchased very generally by laboring men for the Sunday wear of their wives and children, and I have assurances from the largest importing house at Cincinnati that this increase will include about 95 per cent. of the importations now made under the classification to which they belong in the present law. From New York my information is that it will include from 75 to 80 per cent. of the importations. Importers of course differ in their estimates, as each one examines his own importations and forms his opinion accordingly. But assuming that it embraces only 75 per cent., let us see what the effect will be. Last year the entire importation under the classification to which these goods now belong was $15,241,149.77, upon which the Government collected a duty of $9,773,477.

These figures show very clearly that the gentlemen who prepared these schedules upon cotton and woolen goods knew what classes were being imported and just how these increases would operate upon the people who buy and use these articles. The gentlemen on the other side who advocate this report ought to give the House and the country some reason for this proposed increase.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman permit me a remark?

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman desires to ask a question I will yield.

Mr. HASKELL. It is not a question.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, I ought to say in this connection that only a small quantity of these all-wool dress goods are now imported at the rate of 6 cents per square yard and 35 per cent. ad valorem, because as a general thing they are worth over 20 cents per square yard. The present law is that if they are worth less than 20 cents per square yard the duty shall be 6 cents per square yard and 35 per cent. ad valorem; but if worth over 20 cents per square yard the duty is 8 cents per square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem. Now, the proposition is to make them all pay 9 cents per square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem, no matter whether they be worth more or less than 20 cents per square yard, at the same time reducing the duty on the wool, which is the only material from which these goods are manufactured, thus increasing the profit of the manufacturer and injuring other industries of the country just as much entitled to consideration at our hands as they are.

Sir, I entertain no feeling of hostility toward gentlemen engaged in the manufacturing industries of the country. They are honorable and useful callings, and I would encourage and promote them by every legitimate means in my power; but when we are asked to increase the taxes upon the people at large for the benefit of certain gentlemen who simply desire to make experiments in the manufacture of these goods, every consideration of right and justice demands that we should refuse to do so. These goods are not now made in this country to any considerable extent, and the sole purpose of this clause is to tax the whole people of the country, the laboring men and women in every State and county and neighborhood, in order that some manufacturer may try the experiment of making this particular class of goods. The establishments now turning out this class of goods in this country have grown up under the rates now prescribed by law; and if they have supported their business and made reasonable profits under these rates there would seem to be absolutely no reason why the people should be taxed more than they have been heretofore.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentleman one question—for information purely. In the judgment of the gentleman from Kentucky does this bill as now proposed by the conference committee increase or diminish the protection to the wool-growers of the United States?

Mr. CARLISLE. Why, there is no question that it diminishes it at least 18 per cent.——

Mr. PAGE. I ask the question because I have not been here during the gentleman's speech.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have made the statement, but will repeat for the benefit of the gentleman from California, that this bill proposes to make a reduction of about 18 per cent. upon the duties on wool if we leave out of account the reclassification, the precise effect of which can not be calculated. A word of explanation will enable the gentleman to understand my meaning. Under the present law if the wool is valued at 32 cents or less per pound it pays a certain rate, but if it is worth more than 32 cents it pays another and higher rate. I speak now of the first class of wool. This bill proposes that the line shall be drawn at 30 cents instead of 32 cents. It proposes a certain rate of duty upon all wool costing not more than 30 cents, and another rate upon all wool costing over 30 cents. This, as the gentleman will see, must have a tendency to diminish the apparent amount of the reduction of duties as it applies the higher rate to a lower class of wool than if the present classification had been retained. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RUSSELL] made a calculation which brought him to the conclusion that the actual reduction of the duties on wool by these rates and classifications is about 13 per cent.; that is a clear net reduction of the duty on wool to that extent.

Mr. ANDERSON. Before the gentleman from Kentucky concludes will he be kind enough to state what will be the effect of the conference report as compared with the Senate bill instead of the House bill?

Mr. CARLISLE. Does the gentleman mean on wool?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; on the whole thing. Before the gentleman gets through I would like that information.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am about through now, and would be very glad to yield the floor at once, but will give the gentleman such information as I can on the point indicated.

The report made by the conference committee, if adopted by the House, will make a very considerable increase over the rates proposed by the Senate, but it will be less than the bill which we had here in the House. As to the exact increase which this report makes over the Senate proposition as it stood originally, I am not prepared to be very accurate, because we have not had time to make the calculation, and I am not willing to hazard a guess at it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. You speak of it as a whole?

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes; I speak of it as a whole.

Another item to which I did not allude is green-glass bottles, and this is another instance in which the committee of conference has disregarded the previously expressed judgment of the Senate and the House. The House proposed, after a full discussion and on a full vote, to impose a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem on these bottles, while the Senate proposed to impose upon them a duty of only 30 per cent. ad valorem. Now, one would naturally suppose when the committee of conference went out to reconcile disagreements between the two Houses—if we can assume there was a substantial disagreement here—it would have agreed practically upon the rates recommended by the one or the other, or a mean somewhere between them. Instead of that, however, we find this report proposes to impose a duty of 1 cent per pound on all these bottles, which, according to statements made here on the floor during the discussion a week or two ago, would be about 66 per cent. ad valorem, I believe.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Beer-bottles?

Mr. CARLISLE. Beer-bottles and bottles of like character.

I will have to close my remarks, Mr. Speaker, in order that a little time may be left for other gentlemen on this side; but I desire to say again that I have been anxious to see this Congress pass some measure of actual relief to the people. I have been willing and am willing now to make what I consider large concessions in order to secure a just and equitable revision of the tariff. I can not expect to see incorporated in a single measure all that in my opinion ought ultimately to be done; and if the absolute power to dispose of this great question were in my own hands to-day I would not make radical changes at once, but would be disposed to proceed by cautious and conservative methods to relieve the people from taxation and to reduce the revenues of the Government without injuring or alarming the industrial interests of the country. We must all recognize the fact that large interests have grown up under the existing system; that they have been fostered and encouraged by it, and that they have so adjusted themselves to it as to become in a large measure dependent upon the assurance that it will not be suddenly swept away.

Under these circumstances, while I would strenuously insist upon actual and substantial reductions, I would be willing to accept very reasonable and moderate measures as satisfactory indications of a fixed purpose to relieve the people at large without embarrassing special interests. The business of the country will soon adjust itself to any reasonable change that may be made, but it must be more or less injured by the agitation which inevitably results from persistent refusals to settle our revenue system upon a just and permanent basis. The people demand justice and stability in tariff legislation, and when these essentials shall be secured the manufacturing industries of the country will no longer require the interposition of the Government to force prices up and give them the control of the home market, but will become self-reliant and self-sustaining. Then, sir, all our great industrial interests will grow and prosper together, and we will go on developing our wonderful resources and augmenting the wealth and power of the country through all time. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KELLEY. I now yield for ten minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL].

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it has become apparent to the House and to the country that the road to the conclusion we hope to reach this day on the tariff question has been one hedged about with difficulties and one that has been filled with all manner of obstacles to our progress. That the bill as reported from the committee of conference to this House for its action is in all respects such a one as I would make I can not assert. But it is a bill that is infinitely superior to the present law, and superior to the original Senate bill, both from the standpoint of the importer and merchant and from the standpoint of the manufacturer. It is a bill in which the rates are not in some instances high enough as I think to give adequate protection; yet the bill as a whole is fairly protective to the great interests of the nation, to all its leading industries. It is a bill, considered in all its features, based on the income to the Government the last year, that makes a reduction of from seventy to seventy-five millions of dollars of taxation.

Every member in this House, Mr. Speaker, is familiar with the work of a conference committee. Every member in this House will bear me witness, willing witness, those who have served on such committees, of the difficulty that stands in the way of an adjustment of differences of the many opinions that must be harmonized. Those difficulties were overcome and those opinions harmonized to the best possible effect. No special interest was allowed to stand in the way of the conference in the discharge of its duty to the whole country, that of putting a bill into the House and Senate for their action at the earliest possible moment.

My friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] criticises the bill, and, as I understand, declares his intention to vote against it. He makes an argument upon this floor on the provisions of the bill as if the committee of conference had reported a bill to this House totally different from the action either of the House or of the Senate.

I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that in all great lines of stipulation you will find that it is neither more nor less than the outlines of the House bill or the bill that was considered in the Committee of the Whole of this House. Changes have been made, to be sure, but they are changes that were needed to make the Senate bill as near the House provisions as possible.

This matter of ore my friend from Kentucky alluded to. Now, we increased the rate of duty 25 cents a ton, according to the specific rate. But there is a decrease upon the other hand which was made, and to which my friend from Kentucky did not see fit to allude. The House bill provided that this ore should pay a duty of 50 cents a ton, and upon every pound of copper that it contained it should pay a duty of 2½ cents a pound upon the amount of pure copper secured. Many of the ores that are imported in this country are copper ores from Spain. Now, what did we do in the conference committee? We placed the duty at 75 cents a ton instead of 50, and allowed any ore containing less than 2 per cent. of copper to come in at the same rate; or, which is the same thing, to let ores that contain small percentage of copper come in free, so far as the copper duty is concerned. And this is in larger part a compensation for the increase on the ore. The House bill taxed all the ores that had the least trace of copper in them.

Mr. CARLISLE. Not on the iron ore.

Mr. HASKELL. Ah, but the copper ore here is the iron ore; and that is the ore that is touched by this specific provision of the bill in very large part.

Mr. HUBBELL. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas what was the inducement held out to the conference committee to allow copper ore to come in free practically, while they raised the duty on iron ore?

Mr. HASKELL. We did not provide that all copper ore should come in free as a matter of fact. We exclude all copper ore except such as has less than 2 per cent. of copper in the ore, and the conference committee thought that it would not be wise or just to undertake to impose a duty upon ore containing a less per cent. of copper than that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in reference to crockery-ware. The provisions of this bill are the same as the House bill. You all heard the argument and a majority of the House voted for it. The pig-iron provision of the bill is the House bill. You all heard the argument and a majority voted for it. The duty on railroad bars is increased over either the provision of the House or the Senate bill; but how much? Two dollars over the House bill, and one dollar and some cents a ton simply over the provisions of the Senate bill; and the present law is $28 per ton. Eleven dollars a ton, therefore, has been taken off railroad iron, even by the conference report; and yet the gentleman from Kentucky contemplates voting against the bill because he can not get a dollar or two more off of it. Galvanized plate is reduced in the conference report from the rate of the House a quarter of a cent a pound. Steel ingots and the whole Bessemer and crucible steel provision, with a single exception, is the same as was voted by this House; and that one single point of difference is simply a difference of classification. We make a dividing line at 10 instead of 11 cents per pound, as the House fixed it at 11. Aside from that there is no change from the House rates; and the whole provision of crucible and Bessemer steel business, including blooms, cogged ingots, blanks, and shapes of steel, the entire category of steel, the whole vast interest of steel and iron of the country, is as you fixed it, and within 5 per cent. of what the Senate fixed it, and less than what the Tariff Commission fixed it as to its crude forms. Steel not otherwise provided for is the same as that at which the House fixed it.

The gentleman from Kentucky complains because we raised it above the Senate provision. We did. Why? Because we had made enumerated forms of steel in the House here 45 per cent., and the unenumerated the same; they made it 40; then they made their unenumerated forms 30 per cent. What was that? It was an inducement of 10 per cent. given to every foreign manufacturer of steel to change his forms and names in order to get 10 per cent. less of a duty rate. There is not a custom-house in the United States in which importations of steel are made that would not have been thrown into hopeless confusion by this provision of the Senate bill, and it would have ended in endless litigation and lawsuits if the conference committee had not changed the Senate rate and made enumerated forms of steel and unenumerated forms of steel precisely the same rate ad valorem. Then the Senate, when it had got through with the entire metal schedule, after putting 40 per cent. upon blooms, left only 35 per cent. upon the finished manufactures of iron and steel. The conference committee simply put the same rate upon blooms and upon enumerated and unenumerated forms and upon the Bessemer steel, and then fixed the finished goods and manufactures also at the same rate through and through, so that the whole great mass of the iron and steel manufactures of the country should have the same rate ad valorem, the one with the other, and that is all. So that in substance, as far as the House has considered the bill, the report of the conference committee, in general terms, has the commendatory vote of this House, and the schedules presented by the conference that were not considered by the House are in nearly every feature the same as were reported to the House by the Ways and Means Committee.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CARLISLE. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this conference report for the reason that I consider that the interest I represent has been wrongfully treated. I have in my district 641,000 sheep. I have had some experience as a wool-grower. I know that wool-growing to-day in Ohio and in the old States is barely profitable.

I know to-day that the farmers of Ohio have continued in this business under the assurance and under the expectation that the same protection that has been extended to them since 1867 would be continued.

When I have gone to gentlemen on this floor and have appealed to them in the interest of the wool-growers of Ohio and in the interest of 600,000 wool-growers in the United States I have been met with the statement that the National Wool-Growers' Association have consented to this reduction on wool. But let me ask who compose this National Wool Growers' Association. I know the term "national" gives it a high-sounding title. But I want to say to the gentlemen on this floor I am informed that but four men were present at that conference, but four men there to represent the great wool-growing interest of this country. Two of them were selected, one of them to be president, the other secretary of that association. They come down here and in connection with the National Woolen Manufacturers' Association of the United States they agree to this schedule. They have not consulted a single wool-grower in the United States; not a single representative from a wool-growing district in the United States. Not one single representative in Congress has been consulted as to this schedule. Those parties have gone before the Committee on Ways and Means and before the Tariff Commission, and have represented that this schedule that has been agreed upon was perfectly satisfactory to the wool-growers of the United States.

That, Mr. Speaker, is not true. Not a single, solitary wool-grower of the United States was before the commission that consented to this reduction. They were opposed to it. Take, for instance, Ohio. Let me read you the following from the National Wool Growers' Association and the Ohio association:

Prior to March 2, 1867, wool had no substantial protection.

At that date the present law prescribing duties on imported wools was passed, with the joint and unanimous recommendation of producers and manufacturers. Look at its results. At the date of its passage there were only 22,000,000 sheep in the United States, the annual product of wool was only 60,000,000 pounds; while to-day, sixteen years after the passage, there are 50,000,000 of sheep and an annual product of wool amounting to 300,000,000 pounds, besides an annual supply of 12,000,000 carcasses of mutton. The annual value of this product is more than $85,000,000; the annual value of the mutton product is $40,000,000; the amount of capital invested in sheep alone is more than $300,000,000, while the capital invested in the land necessary for their sustenance is estimated at not less than $1,000,000,000. This industry is divided among flock-masters numbering not less than 800,000, and gives employment to more than a million of persons.

The act of 1867, while stimulating the production of domestic wool as above stated, and thus demonstrating the capacity of our country and people to fully supply the domestic demand, has steadily, year by year, reduced the price of wool to the consumers from 51 cents per pound in 1867 to from 40 to 43 cents per pound at the present time, showing a steady decline (with slight variations occasioned by abnormal conditions) of 8 cents per pound, resulting directly from the competition in domestic production created by the tariff act of 1867. If this industry is permitted to continue without adverse legislation the country will enjoy in the future, as it has done in the past, its benefits and advantages.

The Tariff Commission recommends a reduction in the duties on wool that is equal to about 3 cents per pound.

This change, if it becomes part of a new law, will paralyze, if it does not destroy, our wool-growing industry—will flood our markets with foreign wools, notably those of Australia, where 4,000,000 of people have now 80,000,000 of sheep, and where climate and pasturage combine to facilitate and cheapen the production of wool in such manner as to prevent our successful competition.

The wool tariff of 1867 is the only law worthy of consideration that gives protection to any agricultural interest; repeal it, and the interests of wool-growers will be seriously imperiled; its pursuits will be gradually discontinued; foreign wools will be substituted for domestic wools, and our producers compelled to resort to other agricultural pursuits.

To the Senators and members of Congress, therefore, who represent agricultural districts where more or less wool is produced, and who think agricultural interests entitled to legislative consideration, we earnestly appeal.

We beg your careful attention to this subject. We pray you to restore the tariff duties on wools as created by the act of 1867; we entreat you to take the text of that law as a basis, so as to retain the important provisions eliminated by the commission and to avoid the addition made by the commission, admitting wool on the skin duty free, except as to duty on the "skin alone."

It seems to us that there is absolute injustice to the interest of agriculture in the effort now being made to reduce the duty on wool. We believe that this sentiment is more general among the agricultural population than it is by many presumed to be, and we hope that it will not be disappointed by adverse legislation.

THE NATIONAL WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
W. G. MARKHAM, Secretary.
THE OHIO WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
A. E. SPRAGUE, Secretary.

And the following from the Vermont Merino Sheep Breeders' Association:

Whereas the present tariff on wool has developed that industry in the United States to the extent of producing about 250,000,000 pounds yearly, instead of about 60,000,000 pounds annually produced before the present tariff was applied to wool; and

Whereas there are 1,000,000 or more persons employed in the production, with at least $250,000,000 capital invested in that industry, and believing that if either of the bills now before Congress becomes a law with the provisions for abolishing the ad valorem duty on wool, admitting wool on the skins free, and omitting other safeguards in the present tariff to prevent the fraudulent entry and importation of wool, will prove not only detrimental to the wool-growers but destructive of that industry in the United States and a deliberate sacrifice of the interests of the large numbers employed and capital invested in it to further those of a much smaller number of manufacturers and the wool-growers of other countries, where wool can be raised so cheaply as to make it impossible for those of this country to compete with:

We, therefore, not only in behalf of the wool-growers of Vermont, but in the name of more than 1,000 members of the Vermont Merino Sheep Breeders' Association, scattered through half of the States, and in the interests of the wool-growers in every State of the Union, do petition Congress not to revise the present tariff on wool, as is contemplated in the present bills before that honorable body, to ruin our interests and sacrifice our property. And we earnestly request our Senators and Representatives from Vermont to stand by us in our peril and take such action as will tend to insure us against that destruction and sacrifice, believing the prosperity of much the larger part of the other industries of the whole country will not be benefited by the destruction of ours.

M. B. WILLIAMSON, President.
ALBERT CHAPMAN, Secretary.

Since arriving in Washington I find the numbers given above are too small for the correct numbers, values, &c. I would refer to the pamphlet signed by Messrs. Markham and Sprague.

ALBERT CHAPMAN.

These petitions voice the sentiment of the wool-growers' associations of the country.

I know if we could have a separate vote on this proposition every Republican on this side of the House would vote to retain the tariff on wool at the present rates. Why, the Ways and Means Committee of this House, after learning that the rates fixed by the commission did not meet the approval of the wool-growers of the country and had not been accepted by them, voted to restore the rates under existing law, and had we ever been permitted to vote upon the amendment in this House it would have passed by a large majority. We have seven months of pasture and five months of feed. Now, if you take the average cost of pasture for our sheep, it is 10 cents per head per month. Our farmers feed their sheep about three bushels of corn per annum during the five months of feed. In addition to this, there is the hay, and you can make your own estimate as to the pasturage, the corn, the feed, the hay, the expense of washing and shearing; and you will readily see there is very little left to the wool-grower of Ohio.

Now, I am a protective-tariff man. I have voted with the protectionists of Pennsylvania and with the protectionists of New England with the assurance—the most positive assurance—that this great interest which I represent should be taken care of. What has been the result? You have in this conference committee increased the tariff on woolen goods. But when we came to you and asked you to increase the tariff on this single item, about the only item the farmers are protected in, you have stricken us down; you have disregarded our appeals, the appeals of 600,000 wool-growers of the United States.

I am gratified to state that the two conferees on the committee from Ohio, Senator SHERMAN and Representative MCKINLEY, made a most gallant fight to keep the old rates, so satisfactory to the wool-growers, in force, but were overridden by numbers, and could only emphasize their protest against this wrong by refusing to concur in the conference report.

When the tariff of 1867 was enacted wool was worth 51 cents per pound. It is by its increased production through the encouragement you have extended to the American farmer that the present price of wool is fixed.

Now I want to call your attention to the fact that wool to-day in the Liverpool market or the London market which comes into competition with wool that is raised by farmers of the United States is worth 23 cents in those markets. Add to that the present tariff on that wool, about 13½ cents, and you have 36½ cents. Add your commissions and insurance and freights, and you have the price of the wool produced in my district in the Boston or New York market to-day.

You take from the farmers of Ohio $1,000,000 per annum upon their wool crop by the enactment of this legislation. I say to you it is the only interest that the farmers of this country are protected in. And you will stand up here and refuse them this just demand. I appeal to you, I appeal to the protective Republicans from Pennsylvania, I appeal to the protective Republicans from the New England States, and ask if you will permit the adoption of this rate and thus injure, as I believe, this most worthy industry?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CARLISLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUBBELL].

Mr. HUBBELL. I am at a loss, Mr. Speaker, to understand exactly on what process of reasoning or of concession your conference committee report this measure to the House in its present shape. It seems to one unacquainted with it that one might well draw the inference that the labors of the committee were so protracted and so intense upon the question of iron in its various forms that other interests were given the go-by or were struck a deadly blow.

If this House, after a full discussion, after long debate in the Committee of the Whole, decided anything, they decided that copper ore should not be on the free-list. But here in this conference report we find this conference committee giving away—what? Do they allow any low grade of iron ore to come in free? Not a bit of it. But when they come to copper, after listening to a debate which disclosed the peril this great industry was subject to, when they came to that item, what did they do. They allowed pyrites ores containing not more than 2 per cent. of copper to come in free. In other words, they put in a measure of favoritism which allows Spanish ores to be imported and will absolutely close up the smelting establishments which were in operation under the present tariff law, and were importing their ores from Canada.

Now, that is the proposition submitted here. The only thing needed in this bill for the copper interest was to protect it against the cheap ores. They could have yielded 2 cents a pound on pig, they could have yielded 2 cents a pound on other forms of copper; but they did not yield that. They put 2½ cents a pound on copper ore until you get down to ore containing 2 per cent. of copper, and then they propose to let that ore come in free.

There is only one class of ores that under this bill can come into this country free, and they are Spanish ores. They exist in mountains so large that millions and millions of tons of those ores can be imported into this country.

In the Lake Superior region we are mining at a profit ores that yield only seven-tenths of 1 per cent. of copper. Yet it is proposed to allow these 2 per cent. ores to come in free, which contain iron and sulphur sufficient to pay expenses and leave the copper a clear profit, against the labor and the capital of the country.

This is a greater interest than people seem to understand. Nearly $100,000,000 have been invested in the enterprise of copper mining. Results have not always been good; men who invest have to take risks. And yet by this conference report the copper interest of this country is thrown open to competition with the cheap ores of Spain and with no other ores in the world—the cheap ores of Spain that can be brought here as ballast.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER].

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, I believe that if gentlemen will look at the general condition of the country and consider the demands of business they will take a patriotic view of this question. The wool man will look over and above his wool interest, and the copper man will omit to remember his interest long enough to enable him to forget that there has been a slight reduction of the duty on copper. They will look at the immense work that this Congress has done in the direction of tariff revision, and will not strike down almost at the closing hour of the session the power of the Representatives to reduce taxes and give the people the relief which they demand.

Sir, this Congress has acted with all of that conservatism and good judgment with regard to this great economic question which distinguishes our English-speaking race. We first discussed the entire question anterior to the Tariff Commission. Then we provided for a tariff commission, and that commission put in its work. Then the committees of the Senate and of the House took the matter in charge. From that day down to this moment Congress has been engaged, through its proper authorities, in accomplishing what the people demand, tariff revision and relief to the business interests of this country.

And now, when the work is done, when the conference committee has agreed, when the Senate has adopted the report of that committee, we are called upon to defeat this action and to deny the proposed relief to the people, because this man here does not get all he wanted and that man there does not get all he wanted. That is not right, not just to the people of this great country.

You can not in legislation do any more than you can do in any other business. No man can get everything he wants. In any practical business if you can not get the thing you ask, you ought to take the next best thing to it. The people of this country do not want to go over this question again; they do not want to have another trial of this question.

They are like an old darkey down in my country who used to be called Fiddler Billy. He was not only a good fiddler but he was a good fighter; and one day he got into a fight and was brought before the court and tried and sentenced to receive thirty-nine lashes on his bare back. His lawyer, a slow, methodical old gentleman, sat down to prepare a motion for a new trial. While he was doing so the sheriff took old Fiddler Billy out into the back yard and inflicted the thirty-nine lashes on his back. A moment afterward Billy came in and his lawyer said to him: "Never mind, Billy, you shall have a new trial directly." "No massa," said Billy, "for God's sake don't; I don't want no more new trial." [Laughter.]

And so with the people of this country; they do not want any new trial on this question. They have been lashed by the tongues of orators. Their business has been injuriously affected by the conflict and struggle in the House of Representatives. And now, after all of this agitation and suspense, now as we are approaching the fruition of our labors, the people do not want to see the work continued and to have a new trial of this important question.

A word to Southern men: What does this bill give to you? It protects those vast deposits—iron ores—in which your country is so rich. It protects your forests of lumber which tower in almost untouched extent over the Southern States of this Union. It protects the rice which grows in the Carolinas and in Georgia, and in Louisiana it protects sugar. And it leaves cotton-ties at the rate of duty which they now bear. This House has received petitions from hundreds and thousands of people all over the South, asking that no increase of duty be imposed on cotton-ties. Their petition has been granted. The conferees reserved this to the South. The planting interests of the South have been respected. The agricultural interests of the West are respected in wire rods for fencing. In this way substantial relief has been given to the agricultural interests of both sections.

Mr. BERRY. How about wool?

Mr. SPEER. To-day, sir, America is the greatest wool-producing country in the world. It successfully competes with all nations, and the protection which you ask for your wool and your sheep ought not to defeat this tariff legislation for the whole country. It takes off twenty-two or twenty-three million dollars from the tobacco interests of the South. It authorizes the poor farmers of the South and the West and everywhere to do that which we have been pleading for every year since I have been on this floor—to sell leaf-tobacco of their own production to the amount of $100. This one provision will give to the people of my district enough money to buy their sugar and their coffee. I could not go back to the mountains of Georgia and tell those sturdy people I had voted against a measure that gave them this relief.

Gentlemen say this measure increases the duty on crockery. What is the present cost of this crockery of which gentlemen speak? You can buy one hundred and twenty-five pieces for $10; and a crate of crockery now is 65 per cent. cheaper than it was in 1856 or 1857.

Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps the last speech that I shall make in this Congress. I came here four years ago to learn; and I have learned. Sir, I have learned that it is right to protect the industries of our country; and I am going home to maintain, so far as I can in my humble way, the principles which I now here enunciate. [Applause.] I have lived, though a young man, in a country without manufactures. I have seen the Southern States of this Union surrounded by a cordon of steel when the people could scarcely get the mere necessaries of life. I have seen the railroads going to pieces; I have seen the locomotives wheezing and straining to draw the trains. I have seen elegant and cultured womanhood clad in the coarsest fabrics; I have seen the people dig down into the dirt of their smoke-houses where the meat had been hung before the war, and boil the dirt so as to get a little salt to put in their victuals when they cooked them. National independence is impossible in the absence of State manufactures. I tell you what we need now in that section of the country is encouragement to our interests, development to our natural resources; and all that we need for this is that capital seeking investment everywhere in this country should have that encouragement which this bill gives it. Then, sir, with home production we can supply the home demand. The money of the South will stay in the South. From one of the poorest we will become, with genial climate, fertile soil, inexhaustible mineral and forest wealth, the richest section of the Union.

I am honest and sincere in my convictions. I do not criticise the candor of those who differ with me. Able men differ with me; and, sir, they have had the amplest opportunity to maintain the correctness of their principles in the committees of the House and Senate and on this floor. What is the result? The finest ability of the anti-protection party has been brought to the resistance of these measures. The opponents of protection have had a full hearing in this forum of the American people. The majority, I think, in this House differs with them.

The work is completed; the issue is made up. Let it be decided by the verdict of this jury of the American people, and let justice, relief, reduction of taxation, and the removal of the burdens of the American people be no longer delayed by the American Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish in a few words to explain the vote I shall give upon the pending proposition. I am in favor of adopting the report of the conference committee on the tariff bill. The country, Mr. Speaker, has been more clamorous upon the question of tariff than any other one question which has agitated the country since I have had the honor to be a member of this House. Values have been unsettled, large interests have gone up and gone down, and doubt and uncertainty have seized the public mind. To-day the paralysis in many of the manufacturing interests of the country has prompted the people to raise their voices for the adjustment of the tariff question. The time has now come at the end of my eight years' service in Congress when we are about to vote upon the first tariff bill that has been brought before Congress for its final action.

This measure proposes to reduce taxation, we are told, $67,000,000 annually, and to that extent to give relief to the people. I am for it. It proposes to settle many of the vexed questions which have agitated Congress and the country for many years. I am in favor of this settlement. The bill does not give all the relief which I desire to see given; but it does take a long stride in the right direction. The article of wool, to which my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] has referred, does not receive the protection which it should have. But there must be a beginning in this reform some time; and I know no better time for that beginning than now. There are errors in this bill, I am sure. Errors will creep into all great bills which relate to so many subjects. But it will be far more practicable to correct these errors hereafter than for Congress to undertake to go over the whole ground again. No tariff can be passed except by compromise. If injustice be done now to any interest a future Congress can correct the error, and the country can at last settle down on a tariff bill which will be just to the people of all sections of the country and just to the various enterprises.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I yield now for three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I have never had occasion before to speak on this tariff question, representing as I do a people who are perfectly satisfied with whatever we may do here, with one exception, and that is they do want a bill passed and they want it passed now.

The various interests that are complaining always will complain; and, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment there is no man living to-day who can draw a bill which will suit all the interests in the country.

I am a business man myself, as you are all aware, and I only look at this question in a business light and not in a political one; for it makes no difference to me who governs so long as we are governed well. If this question is to determine who is to be the next Speaker of the House, I do not care whether it be one or the other, but I do believe we should vote for a bill to satisfy all the business interests which demand it.

Now, we are collecting, as we all know, $150,000,000 more a year than is required to carry on this Government. That must be stopped; the people demand it; and the only way you can stop it is by doing one of two things: either you must pay your debt and wipe out your national bonds or you must reduce the income of the Government. Now, our national banking system is based largely upon our national bonds, or entirely so. Now, the people of this country are satisfied with that institution as it now exists. They do not want that wiped out, for one thing. Therefore there is but one thing to do. The people whom I have the honor to represent here do not ask me what I shall reduce. A great many may be willing to reduce the tax on tobacco and others on whisky, some on one thing and some on others; but I do not care what we reduce so long as the revenue of the Government is diminished and the money now in the Treasury is circulated once more among the people.

I have not found it necessary to go before the Committee on Ways and Means to help any interest or any one measure or others. I simply wish now to say this: that I am sure no man can afford to go home to the people, having had the opportunity which I hope we shall have in a short time to vote for or against the bill—I say no man can go home to his people having had such an opportunity after voting against it. I shall vote for the bill if I get a chance to do so.

Mr. TUCKER. I will now take the floor, Mr. Speaker, and will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE].

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire only to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER]. He has commented on the conservatism of gentlemen who have had this bill in charge and the conservatism of the measure itself. The first fact which challenges our attention on this point is that the rule requiring a vote of two-thirds to bring forward a measure for final vote without consideration in the Committee of the Whole has been in this case suspended, so that a majority can consider and pass this bill. That rule has always been observed in this and in every other legislative body of America. The rule serves as a guard and protection against unwise, hasty, and inconsiderate legislation. This bill embraces over 4,000 items, is brought in here as an amendment to a bill and rejected without being read, and sent to a committee of conference. It comes back to us now from the conference committee and for the first time has been read within twenty-four hours of the time when this body will cease to exist. It is a bill which embraces every material interest of this country. It enters into the economy of the American people. It changes the relation of money and of property and of labor in all parts of the Union, and yet it is read for the first time now within twenty-four hours of the time when this body is to be dissolved; and that you call conservatism and commend it. You urge that the people want a vote on it of some sort or other, when neither you nor they can judge its effect upon the prosperity of the country.

It is a leap in the dark, Mr. Speaker; it is unwise legislation; it is imprudent legislation. No man on this floor can say or pretend to name the effect of this law on any half dozen of the 4,000 items embraced in this bill. The American people have lived under the present tariff for nearly twenty years, and they can live another year under it, and so give us time to think over and deliberate upon and discuss every one of the items which shall enter into a revenue bill.

This is most unwise legislation, it seems to me, both from a party and political standpoint. Why, look at the bill itself. I do not wonder the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] commends it; there is not a single industry in New England, from a wooden spoon to a steamship, but is protected amply, while the great industries of the West, embracing the great Ohio interest, are sacrificed simply by haste.

I am sure this House would not agree to this bill as far as the wool interest is concerned unless some great pressure was brought to bear upon it. I remind you, gentlemen, that you are sacrificing one of the great industrial interests in my State. Its importance consists not only in the profits accruing to the flockmaster by the growth of wool and the production of mutton. By it we restore at the same time the fertility of our land, wasted and impoverished in the production of grain, and keep it at a high standard of excellence and value. In ten years, I venture to predict that grain-growing Illinois will wish she had united sheep culture with grain culture. But you strike the blow here at our farmers, and compel them to abandon this industry, and return to the exhausting process of grain-growing. This is mainly the work of New England manufacturers. Let me remind them that we will begin agitating this question the hour that you pass this bill, and keep that agitation up until we shall have obtained that relief which our industries demand.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TUCKER. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, this House on last Tuesday took the internal-revenue and tariff bill from the Speaker's table in pursuance of the rule, the adoption of which was accomplished by methods heretofore unknown in the parliamentary history of this country. The Senate amendments were non-concurred in and the bill sent to a committee of conference. The next morning one of the House conferees declined, and on Thursday two of the Senate conferees reported to that body that they could not under the instructions they had received from the Senate serve upon the committee.

On Thursday the conference committee was completed with a complement of five Representatives and five Senators. On Friday, the next day after the conference committee was appointed they had brought into the Senate of the United States a complete revision of the whole tariff schedules, and all of the statutes of the United States relating to the collection of customs and internal revenue. That bill, sir, was reported to the representatives of the people this morning at 1 o'clock, and to-day at 5 o'clock we shall take a vote upon it to determine whether it is to be the law of the land. Four hours only of consideration will be allowed from the time the reading of the bill began until we must vote upon its passage. This bill is no small or inconsiderable measure. It is a bill affecting all of the industries of 52,000,000 people.

It is a bill that exacts and will exact by the iron hand of taxation $220,000,000 annually from the American people which the Government gets, besides at least $500,000,000 which will be exacted from them indirectly through the operations of the protective system. A measure imposing upon the country a burden of six or eight hundred millions of dollars annually has only been before the House of Representatives four hours for discussion. We are required to vote upon it without proper consideration or opportunity of amendment.

How many "little steals," if I may be pardoned for using that expression, may be found hereafter lurking in the new classifications no one can now predict. But if some of these provisions do not "return to plague the inventors," I shall be surprised.

INTERNAL REVENUE REPEALED.

That part of the bill relating to internal revenue secures a reduction of about $41,000,000 of taxes. But no offices are abolished, and the expense of collection, amounting to $5,000,000 a year, is not diminished a particle. The army of spies and informers is retained, and the whole machinery of internal taxation remains in full force and effect.

The reduction secured is upon articles affording little relief to the people. The reduction on tobacco is more than half of the total reduction of internal taxes, and the banks get half of the remaining reduction, while the druggists and the people divide the remaining fourth.

The surplus revenue of the Government now amounts to about $150,000,000 a year. There should have been a substantial reduction of at least $100,000,000 of Government receipts per annum, and this reduction should have been upon such articles as would have afforded relief to the people.

THE CUSTOMS REVENUE.

I do not believe that any real reduction of customs revenue will result from the passage of this bill. It is claimed that there will be a reduction of twenty-five millions of such revenue. I do not believe it. There will be a reduction on sugar of about $11,000,000. This is nearly half of all reductions claimed. If rates have been reduced on any other articles so as to affect the revenue, it is impossible to tell whether the net revenue will be increased or diminished. On some things there will be an increase; on others a decrease. I think the result is in such doubt that all estimates thereon are merely guesses.

All that part of the bill relating to customs duties originated in the Senate and is here in violation both of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, which provides that the bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. The wisdom of that provision in the Constitution has been more than vindicated by the condition in which we are now placed. The representatives of the people are required to pass upon a bill covering all the schedules of customs duties and the general laws relating thereto which has never until this morning been read even in the House. The reading by the Clerk was unintelligible and shed no light upon its provisions, but the time consumed therein enabled members to examine some of the leading provisions of the measure.

It is true that the House has been considering another bill upon the same subject for several weeks past, and in Committee of the Whole House we had proceeded with the various schedules from Schedule A on chemicals to Schedule E on sugar, embracing all that part of this bill relating to chemical products, earthen-ware, and glass-ware, metals, wood and wooden-ware, and a partial consideration but not determination upon the subject of the sugar schedule. The other features of this bill which have not been even discussed in the House are those relating to impost duties upon tobacco, provisions, liquors, cotton and cotton goods, hemp, jute, and flax goods, wool and woolen goods, silk and silk goods, books, papers, and sundries, and the free-list. That on metals, by far the most important subject covered by this bill, has not been considered by the House.

Just what the effect of the pending measure will be upon the revenue of the country, or upon the industries which its provisions affect, it is impossible to tell. But from the brief time allowed me I am assured of one fact, namely, that the pending bill is in no sense a revision of the tariff. While all of the schedules and the general provisions of law are re-enacted in the pending bill, yet in a large majority of the items there is no change whatever from the provisions of existing law. The principal changes are in the schedules concerning metals, earthen-ware and glass-ware, sugar, cotton, and woolen goods.

CHEMICALS.

The schedule on chemicals is but little changed from existing law. There should have been, in order to afford relief to the people, large reductions in the chemical schedule. There has been great demand from the manufacturers of the country to have all dye-stuffs and chemicals entering into manufactures placed upon the free-list. There has been no attention paid to this demand. The chemical schedule produced but $6,700,000 in revenue during the last fiscal year, and the decrease recommended by this bill is so trifling as to have no perceptible effect either upon the revenues or upon the importation of the products or the lessening of their price to the consumers. The whole schedule should have been abolished by a gradual reduction not to exceed five years in extent, excepting a very few articles.

GLASS AND POTTERY.

The schedule in reference to earthen-ware and glass-ware has been revised upward instead of downward, and there is admitted increase in the average rates of from 48 per cent. to 56 per cent. The whole amount of revenues received from articles coming under this schedule during the last fiscal year was $6,600,000. If the importations should be the same for the next fiscal year after the tariff takes effect the revenue would be increased to the extent of $1,200,000. But there will be no increase of revenue, although an increase of tax burdens by the increased cost of the domestic products. Hence by the operation of this bill the items under this schedule will yield less revenue than heretofore, how much it is impossible to tell. The people will be subjected to increased taxation. A reduction of revenue will be secured only by prohibiting importations and fostering a monopoly of manufacturers at an increased expense to all the people of the country.

IRON AND STEEL.

The metal schedule is an enigma. New classifications have been introduced which will produce endless litigation, more Treasury decisions, surprises to merchants, embarrassment to business, if not financial ruin to many interests involved. What is to be the effect upon the revenue by this schedule no one pretends to know. Enough has been discovered, however, to demonstrate that the reductions have not been so severe, except in very few cases, as to take the articles out of the prohibitory rates which they now bear. The strange spectacle, however, is presented of a conference committee reporting larger rates than was agreed upon by either House. These have already been pointed out to some extent by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky.

The metal schedule seems to have been devised by a ring of interested parties who secured their own favored industries at the hazard of slaughtering others. What particular industries will come out unhurt and what will have been benefited or injured time alone will demonstrate. That the whole schedule is crude, ill-digested, inconsistent, and contradictory there can be no doubt. The interests involved were too important to be thus trifled with, and no bill upon this subject should have been passed in the hasty and inconsiderate manner in which this is being rushed through. When it is too late and this Congress shall have adjourned the full effect of our action will have been discovered.

LUMBER.

The schedule on wood and wooden-ware is changed but little, if any, from the existing rate. There is no revision whatever or reduction of burdens on account of the articles in this schedule. The great central States of the Northwest were deeply interested in the removal of duties on lumber; free lumber was demanded by every consideration of fairness, public policy, if not of public health. A ring of lumber men who have already plundered the country to the extent of untold millions and who are fast destroying the great forests of many of our States have been licensed by this bill to pursue their plundering traffic.

SUGAR.

The next schedule in the bill is that of sugar. In this there is a substantial reduction of duties and of revenue to the amount as estimated of $11,000,000. This is about the only reduction of tax burden contained in the tariff part of this bill; but whether the people, the Louisiana sugar-growers, or the New York refiners will get the benefit of the change remains to be seen. The reduction on sugar is about 20 per cent., and if other articles in the bill had been reduced to a similar extent I should have cheerfully supported it.

TOBACCO.

The schedule on imported tobaccos has been but slightly and immaterially changed.

The average ad valorem rate is about 72 per cent. as against 73 per cent. in the present law. In view of the fact that the tax on domestic cigars and tobacco is reduced on the former from $6 a thousand to $3 a thousand, and on domestic tobacco from 15 cents to 8 cents a pound in the internal-revenue part of the bill, it seems to me that there should have been a corresponding reduction of the rates on imported tobacco. The pending bill imposes an internal-revenue tax of only 8 cents a pound on domestic tobacco, snuff, &c., and on imported tobacco of 40 cents a pound and on snuff of 50 cents a pound, and other provisions in like ratio.

The effect of this change it seems to me will be to exclude importations of many articles. We received last year $6,000,000 in duties on imported tobacco. The internal taxes having been reduced one-half with no corresponding reduction of duties on imported articles, there will undoubtedly be a large falling off of the revenue by the practical exclusion of imports and leaving to the domestic manufacturer the monopoly of the home market.

It is estimated that the reduction of internal revenue on tobacco on account of the provisions of this pending bill will amount to $22,000,000. Whether the people are to get the benefit of this reduction of the Government's income is not so certain. I think it will be found that the greater portion of the benefit will go to the tobacco monopolists, and that the consumers of tobacco and the tobacco producers will receive little or no benefit from the change.

PROVISIONS.

The next schedule is that on provisions. Twelve million dollars of revenue were derived from this schedule during the last fiscal year, and the whole schedule, or nearly all of it, should have been wiped out by an intelligent and effective revision of the tariff. The people must have cheaper food, and to the extent in which we cheapen meats and breadstuffs will the purchasing power of the wages of the laborer be increased. Many of the articles in the provisions schedule have no perceptible effect upon the articles themselves and should be abolished as surplusage in the bill.

Some of the items are intended for the use of demagogues who in the rural districts and sometimes even in this Hall endeavor to make it appear that farmers receive protection upon their products. Such, for instance, as beef and pork, hams and bacon, lard, wheat, corn, oats, wheat flour, potatoes, and other like products of the farm. All of these items are retained in this bill in the face of the fact that they produce no revenue or none worth collecting, and are kept in to deceive and humbug the people. There is scarcely an item in the schedule that ought not to be put upon the free-list at once.

LIQUORS.

Schedule H on liquors has not been changed, or at any rate I see no difference upon the casual examination which I have been able to make.

COTTON GOODS.

The schedule on cotton goods has undergone a material change, but here again the revision has gone upward instead of downward in the interest of cheap clothing. The total amount of cotton goods imported into this country during the last fiscal year was valued at $34,000,000, and the duties, averaging 38 per cent. ad valorem, amounted to over $13,000,000. The duties on an average are increased from 38 to 40 per cent. The revenues will of course be lessened by this increase of duties, although there is an estimated increase of revenues upon the same importations of nearly half a million dollars.

The manufactures of cotton goods in this country from the census of 1880 amounted in value to $210,000,000. The average number of hands employed in these establishments, including men, women, and boys under sixteen and girls under fifteen, which are counted as half a hand, amounted to 170,363, and the amount of wages paid for the same time amounted to $45,000,000. If the cotton goods manufactured in this country and imported should all be consumed the annual consumption of such goods would amount to nearly $250,000,000. Just how much the cost of these articles was enhanced by reason of the tariff it is impossible to state.

If enhanced to the extent of the tariff the increased cost to consumers of such goods by reason of the tariff would amount to $100,000,000 annually. Here was a schedule which should have received substantial reductions in order that the price of clothing should have been reduced and the purchasing power of wages increased accordingly. But it seems that the monopolists were more powerful than the representatives of the people, and instead of reduction we have an increase of tax burdens and a decrease in effect of revenue to the Government.

HEMP, JUTE, AND FLAX.

There has been some change in the schedule in regard to hemp, jute, and flax goods, a change in the interest of neither the manufacturers nor the people; an increase of the rates upon raw material, and, in some instances, a decrease of the rate upon the finished product. I am informed by a gentleman of the highest intelligence and thorough knowledge of this business that many establishments engaged in the manufacture of this quality of goods will be closed up on account of the inconsiderate manner in which this schedule has been prepared. The revision is actually a farce and the changes are merely tariff tinkerings.

WOOL AND WOOLEN GOODS.

The next schedule is that of wool and woolen goods, one of the most important schedules in the bill. There is a reduction, it is claimed, on raw wool amounting to 18 per cent. below existing rates, but I do not see a corresponding reduction upon the finished products, and I assume that whatever reduction there may be in the rates on the raw material will inure to the benefit of the manufacturers and not to the consumers. I do not complain of the reduction of the tariff on wool. In fact I am in favor of a rapid reduction of the rates of the tariff on wool and the placing of the product on the free-list within a very few years.

There is no change in the tariff that will produce greater benefits to the people than the placing of wool and raw materials entering into manufacture of woolen goods upon the free-list. No industry would be injured, but all would be promoted and encouraged. Labor would receive some substantial reward and manufacturing receive an encouragement that would produce better times than we have had in this country for many years. The average duties upon the woolen schedule under the present law amount to 61 per cent. ad valorem. The importations for the last fiscal year on wool and woolen goods amounted in value to $47,000,000, and the duties received to $29,000,000. The manufactures of woolen goods for the census year of 1880 amounted to about $200,000,000.

The increased cost to consumers of woolen goods by reason of the tariff is very great, just how much it is impossible to tell. While the raw material is taxed from 25 per cent. ad valorem to 65 per cent. and manufactures of woolen goods including woolen cloths, flannels, blankets, hats of wool, knit goods, and women's and children's dress goods, &c., pay a duty under the present law of from 30 per cent. ad valorem to 130 per cent., an average of perhaps 90 per cent., the average tariff upon the raw material is perhaps 60 per cent., leaving a margin of 30 per cent. for the manufacturers.

The annual consumption of woolen goods in this country amounts to about $250,000,000 in value. It will thus be seen that the tax upon the people as consumers of woolen goods under the present law is most onerous and oppressive. A revision in the interest of consumers was absolutely demanded by the best interests of the country, but instead of such a revision we have a little legislative jugglery which reduces at one end and increases at the other and affords no substantial relief to the people.

SILK GOODS.

There has been but slight change in the schedule on silk and silk goods. There is an estimated reduction of $3,000,000 of revenue, and of rates from 58 per cent. to 50 per cent. ad valorem. If it should appear that there has been a reduction of rates upon the articles that are imported such reduction of rates will increase importations and thus increase the revenue. The revenues derived from this schedule during the last fiscal year amounted to $22,000,000. I think it will appear at the close of the first year after this act takes effect that the revenues from this schedule will amount to $25,000,000, an increase of $3,000,000 instead of a decrease, as is estimated.

BOOKS AND PAPER.

There is little change in the schedule in regard to books, papers, &c. There was room here for a large increase of the free-list, but the revisers of the tariff have neglected to avail themselves of the opportunity.

SUNDRIES.

The next schedule is that of sundries, under which during the last fiscal year there were imported articles valued at $62,000,000 and which paid a revenue of $17,000,000. The average rate of duty under this schedule is 27 per cent. ad valorem, and no practical decrease is recommended or provided in the pending bill. This schedule offered an excellent opportunity for revision by the placing of many articles now heavily taxed upon the free-list.

This whole schedule and those on chemicals, lumber, provisions, and books should have been placed where Mr. Lincoln desired to place slavery, namely, "where the public mind would rest in the belief that it was in the course of ultimate extinction." Most of the articles are those of little importance and come under the denomination of raw material or of articles having little labor bestowed upon them. This schedule and the schedules on chemicals, lumber, provisions, books, papers, &c., contain a large majority of the articles in number which constitute our tariff legislation. They produce in the aggregate less than $40,000,000 of revenue.

If our tariff revisers had "moved upon" these schedules and largely reduced the rates or placed the articles upon the free-list they would have done something to encourage home manufactures and bring genuine relief to a tax-ridden people. In these schedules are embraced many articles the internal taxes upon which are abolished by the pending bill. On page 3 of the pending bill, beginning at line 10, it will be seen that the tax on matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations, and other articles, imposed by Schedule A, following section 3437 of the Revised Statues, is repealed. Schedule A of internal taxes contains a list of the articles upon which the stamp taxes are abolished.

The schedule embraces medicinal preparations, such as pills, powders, tinctures, troches, sirups, cordials, anodynes, tonics, liniments, ointments, essences, and all other medicinal preparations or compositions whatever; and also perfumery and cosmetics, such as toilet-water, hair-oil, hair restorative, hair-dye, tooth-wash, and all similar articles which may be applied to the hair, mouth, or skin; also, friction matches, cigar-lights, and playing-cards. All these are made free by the pending bill so far as internal taxes are concerned. But the duties on imports of like articles remain, duties which average about 30 per cent. ad valorem, and on important articles the duties on such imports, such as medicinal preparations, amount to 40 per cent. ad valorem. There should have been some reduction of customs duties upon these articles, at least to the amount of the reduction of the internal taxes. As it is, however, whatever reduction of revenue is made will inure to the benefit of the manufacturers and not to the consumers.

THE FREE-LIST.

This brings us to the consideration of the free-list. One of the members of the Ways and Means Committee boasted with some degree of exultation that the bill reported from the House Committee on Ways and Means placed over thirty articles now dutiable upon the free-list, and claimed this as a relief of taxation. Of the thirty articles which the House bill put upon the free-list not one of them affords any relief to the people worth mentioning. For instance, the articles placed upon the free-list by the House bill, thirty in number, are as follows:

Antimony, crude, and regulus; asafœtida; cassia, cassia buds, cassia vera, unground; cinnamon, and chips of, unground; mace; nutmegs; ottar of roses; pepper, unground, black and white; oils of lemon, limes, orange flower, and oranges; pimento (allspice); fuming sulphuric acid; feldspar; magnesia; paraffine; arrowroot, farina, sago, tapioca, cassava or cassada, when specially prepared and fit for food only; bed feathers, downs, and feather beds; crude petroleum oil or rock oil; emery ore; natural flowers not otherwise provided for; fruits, green, ripe and dried, not specially enumerated; glass plates or disks intended for use in manufacturing optical instruments; hop-poles; posts for fences and railroad ties of wood; and last, and perhaps least, braids composed of Lombardy poplar, chip, straw, and grass, and used exclusively for the manufacture of hoods, hats, and bonnets. Such is the list of articles placed upon the free-list by the House bill, and which are intended to bring relief thereby to a tax-ridden people.

But the pending bill does not even go as far as the House bill proposed. I fail to find in the free-list of the pending bill antimony, crude petroleum, or rock oil, natural flowers, posts for fences, and braids composed of Lombardy poplar chips, straw, grass, &c. I also find that jute butts have been taken from the free-list and taxed $5 per ton. There were several other articles taken from the free-list and placed in the schedules to be taxed.

REDUCTIONS THAT MAY NOT REDUCE.

I have already stated that the sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the collection of customs have been revised and re-enacted by the pending bill. It is impossible to understand the significance of all the changes made. But the following new provision in section 2499 of the Revised Statutes is very important, namely:

If two or more rates of duty should be applicable to any imported article, it shall be classified for duty under the highest of such rates.

This furnished a new rule for construing statutes. It is to control the courts and Treasury officials in construing the law. The common-law rules of statutory construction are to be disregarded. The language is peculiar:

If two or more rates of duty should be applicable to any imported article, &c.

It would be strange if such a thing did not happen often. But how many clauses in the various schedules may have been prepared for the purpose of making them applicable to different articles remains to be seen. The metal schedule offers a fruitful field for Treasury decisions and surprises to importers. Take for example the following clauses:

On page 36 of the printed bill, line 734, will be found the following:

Iron or steel rivet, screw, nail, and fence-wire rods, round, in coils and loops, not lighter than No. 5 wire gauge, valued at 3½ cents or less per pound, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

On page 37, line 740, is the following:

Iron or steel wire, smaller than No. 5 and not smaller than No. 10 wire gauge, 1½ cents per pound, &c.

Several other sizes are provided for at increased rates.

The rate is nearly three times greater on one classification of wire than on the other. May there not be many articles imported upon which either rate of duty may be applicable? If so, the highest rate must always be assessed. I am not an expert in such matters, but it seems to me that great uncertainty is introduced in the law by the provision to which I have called attention, and it may be that the reductions which are claimed in the metal schedule will be rendered nugatory by this provision, and that there will be an increase in rates instead of a decrease. In other words, the reductions may not reduce.

NOT A FINAL SETTLEMENT.

Such is the bill which the conference committee after twenty-four hours of labor has evolved and submitted to this House. It can not be regarded as a revision of the tariff in any sense of the term.

The most odious and oppressive features of the present system are preserved and especially the rates upon a vast number of articles of universal consumption which are imposed now for protection with incidental revenue. This bill continues that system of protection which imposes immense burdens upon the people while, at the same time, it brings little or no revenue to the Government. The friends of revenue reform will not accept it as a settlement of the tariff question. As a measure of relief it is a failure; as a revision of the tariff it is a sham. We must look to the next Congress for a revision in the interest of the people. In previous discussions in the Committee of the Whole House upon the schedules which were considered in the committee, I pointed out some of these odious and oppressive features and need not recapitulate them here.

PROTECTION DOGMAS.

I have been somewhat amused at times at the arguments used by gentlemen on the other side, the advocates of the protective system, in order to sustain their theories. From these arguments I have heard enunciated as among the great principles of protection the following propositions:

First. That it is the duty of the Government to protect American laborers from competition with the "pauper labor" of Europe by the imposition of duties on articles manufactured abroad which will compensate for the difference in the price of labor in this country and Europe. This is called "filling the gap" between the wages of home and foreign labor.

Second. That the amount of duty required in order "to fill the gap" must be such as will cause the price of articles manufactured at home to be increased to the amount of the duty on the imported article of like character.

Third. That the imposition of impost duties does not increase the cost of imported articles; that the foreign manufacturer pays the duty for the privilege of selling his goods in this country.

Fourth. That the imposition of duties on imported articles will have the effect to reduce the cost of like articles manufactured in this country.

All the advocates of the protective system in this House have either asserted this doctrine or have acquiesced in the assertion of it by others. It is claimed that protection has cheapened prices of iron and steel and articles made from them; that it has cheapened the price of wool and the manufactures of wool and cotton and of all of the protected articles.

From these fundamental "principles" the following deductions may be drawn:

First. Protection increases prices of articles manufactured in this country.

Second. Protection decreases the prices of articles manufactured in this country.

Third. Protection is absolutely necessary in order "to fill the gap" between the wages of home and foreign labor.

Fourth. Protection reduces the prices of home productions, and thus widens "the gap" which it was intended to close.

Fifth. Protection both closes and widens "the gap."

Sixth. Protection protects our home labor against the pauper labor of Europe.

Seventh. Protection reduces the prices of home labor below the prices paid for "pauper labor" of Europe.

Mr. Speaker, these "great principles of protection" and the logical deductions therefrom prove the fallacy of the protective system and confound and overwhelm its advocates. No arguments that the advocates of revenue reform can produce so completely answer protection fallacies as do protection arguments themselves. Place their arguments in juxtaposition and their fallacies at once appear. I leave the protective system where its advocates have placed it. Its fundamental "principles" are like certain chemicals; kept separate they are harmless, mixed together they explode.

DOES PROTECTION PROTECT?

The advocates of protection insist that they have reduced rates by the pending bill, and that such reduction is in the interest of the people; at the same time they tell us that protection alone can benefit the people. If protection for the sake of protection be beneficial to the people, then the more we have of it the better it will be, and the higher the rates the more will be the protection to home industry and the greater will be the prosperity of our people, even to the exclusion of the foreign article. Then why should they not advocate an increase of rates along the whole line for the sake of bringing relief to the people?

Again, we are told frequently that foreign products must be excluded or the country will be flooded with low-priced goods, our manufacturing establishments closed, and laborers deprived of employment. If this is the danger threatening our laborers and manufacturers why not exclude the foreign products entirely and not pretend to relieve existing burdens by reducing existing rates and allowing articles to come in which are now excluded.

A HOME MARKET.

We sometimes hear gentlemen talk about a home market and the necessity of having a home market for our surplus products, and that such home market can only be created by a protective system. Eighty per cent. of our exports are farm products, and these exports exceed in value $600,000,000 a year.

Can our people consume any more meat and bread and provisions than they now consume? Our population has been increasing with remarkable rapidity, and immigration amounts to 600,000 or 700,000 a year, and still we have a surplus of farm products of every kind. Can you create a home market for this surplus? It is impossible. There is but one country in the world that has practiced to its fullest extent the theory of exclusion and seclusion. That government is China. China furnished a home market for all her products; she prevented all importations and exportations, and thus enjoyed the operation of the protective system for thousands of years. When the guns of Great Britain battered down her walls of exclusion and opened her ports to the commerce of the world she found and revealed to the rest of the world a system of labor the most degrading and least remunerative to the laborer and the most impoverishing to the government. In that country protection had had full sway, had done its perfect work, and the result was the degradation of labor and the reduction of wages to starvation prices; absence of education and universal poverty and distress.

WHAT REVENUE REFORM WILL ACCOMPLISH.

The advocates of revenue reform have been accused of a deliberate purpose to reduce wages and embarrass the manufacturing interests of the country. Nothing could be further from the truth. We desire no sudden changes. We propose to begin a genuine reform of the revenue by placing all articles known as raw materials upon the free-list, and thus giving encouragement to manufacturers and employment and better wages to the laborer. The leading industries of the country at this time have a plant capable of production largely in excess of the home demand. We can not export our products because the finished article is loaded down with internal taxes. Such articles can not be exported and sold in foreign markets by the side of manufactures not thus burdened.

We must have a larger market for our manufactured products. This must be brought about by the reduction of the cost of production. Such reduction must come about in one of two ways, either by reduction of wages or of the price of the raw materials. I prefer to let wages stand, or rather increase them if possible, and reduce the tax upon raw materials and the price of raw materials, so that we may manufacture all articles in competition with the rest of the world. When we do this and open to our manufacturers the high seas and the markets of the world such an impetus to business, to manufacturing especially, will be given as has been unknown heretofore in the history of this country. It will be the beginning of a new era in American enterprise and industry. It will cause our manufacturing, agricultural, and mining industries to flourish. It will increase the transportation of articles on our railways and steamboats. It will cause our ships to reappear upon the high seas and send the products of our industry to every clime and to every people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield ten minutes to my colleague on the committee from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL].

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, if I have labored for anything through the Forty-seventh Congress, in word and vote, it has been to secure a reduction of the tariff and of taxation. I felt it my duty to take a position in the last session of Congress in which I was followed but by a few on the Republican side of the House. I thought I then discovered a purpose to resist to the end any revision of the tariff. It seemed to me that the appointment of a commission was for the purposes of delay. It did not then appear to me possible that out of a revision made by a tariff commission we could secure, as we have not at last indeed, a proper revision of the tariff. I now find myself, Mr. Speaker, in a strait betwixt two. I am compelled to vote for this bill, but yield to it with the utmost reluctance. It is no such bill as the people had a right to expect and their interests clearly demanded.

It would be easy to follow along in the line indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROBINSON] in pointing out the inconsistencies that exist in the bill. We are, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has just intimated, taking a leap in the dark. We are voting for a bill which has not yet been considered at length in Committee of the Whole. We were compelled, as an outcome and an outgrowth of the Tariff Commission, to adopt a new rule, revolutionary in its character, hostile to all conservative just legislation, by which we have got at last a bill for which, without amendment, we must vote yes or no. The bill does not meet my approbation; and yet, because of some of its provisions, I shall vote for it, though under a most solemn protest. Let me allude to some items. We are asked to make a reduction of $23,000,000 upon tobacco. That we are compelled to vote for this large reduction is because of a policy, that was foreshadowed and attempted in this House, to make only reductions in the internal-revenue system and not in the tariff.

Two weeks ago to-day, perhaps not intentionally at the time, I precipitated in the House an action which had not been anticipated by those who had then been going on from day to day hopelessly reviewing the report of the commission here in Committee of the Whole. As a result of my declaration that I considered that action as delusive and deceptive, as misleading the people and in no way honoring the House, an attempt was made the very next Monday to pass through the House an internal-revenue bill. I was one of the eighteen who on this side of the House by our votes prevented the passage of the bill. But for the defeat of that bill we should not now have even this poor result of all these labors for which we are called upon to vote.

We are making a reduction of $23,000,000 on tobacco and but $11,000,000 on sugar. We are taking off this large amount from what is properly denominated a luxury and refusing to take it off from sugar, the grand necessity of the people. I have said and say now to this side of the House that if we had had the courage and the pluck to have taken off $25,000,000 from sugar at the last session of Congress and reduced the duty on steel rails from twenty-eight to fifteen dollars a ton, with other needed and just reductions, we would not now be forced to witness the incoming of a Democratic administration in this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I insist most respectfully that this is not a proper way to legislate upon so great a subject as the revision of the tariff laws of the country. Yet because it does reduce rates on iron, because steel rails are reduced from $28 to $17.80——

Mr. KELLEY. Seventeen dollars.

Mr. DUNNELL. I accept the correction. Because they are reduced to $17, though this House decided on $15, and the Senate upon a lower figure; because there is a reduction upon iron; because we do get some reduction on sugar and some other articles, I must swallow the bill and vote for it, protesting that it is not what the people ought to have had and what this Congress ought to have given to them.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman to correct his statement that the Senate rate was lower. It was higher than the House rate.

Mr. DUNNELL. Higher than the House rate, but lower than the rate as fixed by this report.

I will here read what I said in the House on the 17th of last month, when in Committee of the Whole the House had under consideration the bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, but which dropped out of sight from that very day. I said:

I have been surprised that the House in Committee of the Whole has so well kept up its interest to this hour in the pending bill, with the overshadowing fact upon it that the bill has no earthly chance of a passage. We have been debating the provisions of the bill and at the same time substantially admitting that it would not have a passage.

We have now reached a provision in the bill which to me has been of very great interest, because I have believed that in this clause we were to find some relief to the people. This paragraph of the bill does provide a reduction of about $11,000,000. The very men, however, who advocate the passage of the bill and urge that it ought to pass, because it secures that much of reduction of taxes on the people of the country, are themselves admitting, in committee and out of committee, here and elsewhere, that the bill is not to be passed at this session of Congress.

* * * * * * *

The next few days will verify the truthfulness of my statement.

In the last session of Congress it was admitted by everybody on either side of the House that the present tariff, now nearly twenty years old, ought to undergo a radical revision. Gentlemen on this side of the House who urged the appointment of a tariff commission announced that the tariff needed a revision. I saw then clearly, as I thought, that the appointment of a tariff commission meant what is to be a fact in the history of the Forty-seventh Congress.

Now, what we ought to have done in the first session of this Congress was not done, but was turned over to the Tariff Commission. We are now within a few days of a final adjournment of this Congress; one-third of this large and voluminous bill has been passed over. Everybody is pressed with the conviction that this bill can never pass. The country demands its passage, and yet we are standing here to-day debating this clause and that clause, while at the same time we are bound to admit that the present tariff will get no revision.

We have here in this bill pointed out to us the ways and means by which the people are to be relieved from burdens: $11,000,000 from sugar, with a reduction upon steel and iron. Poor as this bill is, unsatisfactory as it is, it would if passed relieve the people of $20,000,000 of burden.

Yet this bill can not pass; it is utterly beyond the expectation of its most sanguine friends that it will pass. We have been deluding ourselves, we have been deluding the country, we have been unsettling the great business interests of the country, while the fiat has gone forth that this bill shall not pass this Congress. Already the steps have been taken to pass through this House next Monday an internal-revenue bill taking from capital the burden which by a proper revision of the tariff should be taken from labor.

Therefore we are here debating the bill, dishonoring ourselves as a dominant party on this side of the House, and dishonoring Congress in its treatment of the people.

My prediction was verified, for on the next Monday the internal-revenue bill was presented, as I have already said, and fortunately defeated. In the debate on that occasion I had three minutes allowed me, and said:

Mr. Speaker, when this Congress came together there was an expectation everywhere throughout the country that there would be a substantial reduction in the revenues of the country. The President has asked it; the Secretary of the Treasury has asked it, and everywhere throughout the length and breadth of the country there had been an expectation that the war tariff, the tariff that was made when large sums of money were needed, when we had an empty Treasury and a rapidly increasing debt, should undergo revision. The country expected on the $50,000,000 raised on the one article of sugar there would at least be a reduction of $20,000,000. The great commercial interests of the country expected that there would be a reduction in the present duty on iron and steel. Here in this House we have already voted to reduce the duty on steel rails from $28 to $15, and when that vote was passed in the House, in the Committee of the Whole, we could have anticipated the declaration that the pending bill must not go through. We are now face to face with the policy declared in New York in October prior to the organization of this House in December a year ago, that the reductions must come from the internal-revenue taxes and from them alone.

And we have been going on writing history for this Congress that all of the reductions it makes shall come from the internal revenue.

Mr. Speaker, I am about to close a service of twelve years in this House. It would give me the most profound satisfaction if on this day I could vote for a revenue bill which would give to the people all the relief which they have a right to demand. My constituents expected larger reductions, and for them I have not failed to raise my voice. I have often cited sugar; for it has appeared to me to be little less than a crime to raise $50,000,000 annually upon this article of prime necessity. The advocates of this bill only claim a reduction under it of $11,000,000. I fear it will prove to be far less. The reductions upon iron and steel are in too many instances much below the demand While some reduction might have been made in the duty upon tobacco, it is far from the proper thing to reduce $23,000,000 upon this article and but $11,000,000 upon sugar. Larger reductions could have been made upon articles for clothing and food. The luxuries should have been placed at higher rates and the necessities at lower rates. Lumber should have been placed upon the free-list or undergone a large reduction in the duty. The great agricultural interests of the country have not been carefully considered or justly preserved. Nails and spikes, glass, crockery, and, indeed, all the articles which the farmers of the land daily use should bear the least possible rate of duty.

No time is allowed me to say more. We are now to vote upon a bill not open to amendment. We must take it or nothing. I have voted against every bill to reduce internal taxation, but have on more than one occasion signified my willingness to vote for some such reduction if at the same time the tariff duties could be reduced. Both classes of reduction are in the bill before us, though not in proper proportions. I am forced to the conclusion that it is my duty to vote for the bill, though not without protesting against its character and the manner of its construction.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I can say I have not occupied five minutes of the time of the Forty-seventh Congress. I shall occupy but three minutes now.

I do not profess to be able to understand the intricacies of this great tariff question, though in my boyhood I sat at the feet of the grandest son of Kentucky, Henry Clay, who taught protective tariff. I received my impressions there. But as I have listened to the debates on both sides of this House, and have seen the divisions and subdivisions on both sides of the House, I have been inclined to think that that great general who was so recently the accredited leader of the great Democratic party, their candidate for President, said more wisdom than I thought at the time when he said that the tariff was a local issue. I think the language on both sides of this Chamber has confirmed largely the declaration of General Hancock.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this issue is before us and we must meet it. I know that the eyes of this nation are upon this Chamber now. I know that the great interests of this nation are trembling in the scale, and while this bill does not satisfy my desire, while it does not meet my estimate of the true need of the people, removing only a burden of $70,000,000 from the people, when I would prefer that $140,000,000 were taken off the people—as I can not get a whole loaf I shall go for half a loaf, and I shall rejoice in the passage of this bill.

I have nothing more to say.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield two and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MURCH].

Mr. MURCH. In the two and one-half minutes allowed to me so kindly by the gentleman from Virginia I can not hope to give the numerous reasons which compel me to vote against this conference report. I will, however, state very briefly two or three of the most important of them.

The first is that we have a bill brought in here, entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation," and under this title the entire tariff schedule is entered upon; so that the title of the bill is entirely belied. A second reason is, that an already favored class, a money-making class, is, under this bill, relieved of $14,000,000 of taxation. The bankers and banks, the depositors, and the check-holders are the favored beneficiaries under this bill; while the great laboring mass of people whom the gentlemen on this floor have so eloquently described this bill as protecting are not protected in the least particular.

The great iron industry, which is protected so largely here and which employs so many thousand men, was last year, under the benefits given to the iron manufacturers, operating to reduce the wages of the workmen engaged in the iron manufactures to almost starvation point. We witnessed the spectacle of 100,000 iron-workers in this country on strike against starvation wages.

Another thing I wish to notice, Mr. Speaker, is that the glass industry is protected from 125 to 150 per cent. We are told that this bill protects the American mechanic and the American laborer, while I find by the evidence of a translated copy of a contract entered into in Belgium, between glass manufacturers in Philadelphia, in Baltimore, and in the State of New Jersey, that these manufacturers contracted with the foreign cheap labor to come here and underbid the American labor market in an industry protected 150 per cent.

I ask permission to print in the RECORD the paper to which I have referred.

There was no objection. The paper is as follows:

[Translation.]

PHILADELPHIA, August 27, 1881.

It is agreed by the undersigned, representatives of the Window-Glass Makers' Association of the East and the Workingmen's Association of Window-Glass Makers that the following shall be the price of wages paid in the districts of New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, and Maryland for the ensuing year. All wages and the percentage will be based on the list below.

The blowers will be paid at the net rate for plain work, or 1⅛ for double.

The gatherers will be paid at the rate of 65 per cent. for plain, and 55 per cent. for double, the net wages of the blowers.

The drawers will be paid 25 per cent. of the net rate of the blowers.

The cutters will be paid 23 cents per 100 feet of plain, and 35 cents for double.

The cutters will be paid for lamp-glasses or sizes below 6 by 8, or for fractions of an inch below 13 by 13, one-half more than the price mentioned.

The polishers will be paid in the proportion given in the last article.

Glass plates not cut to order will be paid for at ordinary rates. When they shall be recut payment will be arranged with the manufacturer.

BASIS OF CALCULATIONS.

The wages-list is based on the price of the Eastern Association, terms being placed opposite the kind of work, as follows:

On sales, with discount on price-current, 70 per cent. the net price as mentioned.

On sales, with discount on price-current, 70 per cent. + 5 per cent.; deduction, 10 per cent.

On sales, with discount on price-current, 75 per cent.; deduction, 10 per cent. + 10 per cent.

On sales, with discount on price-current, 60 and 10 per cent.; addition, 10 per cent.

On sales, with discount on price-current, 55 per cent.; addition, 10 per cent. and 10 per cent.

On sales, with discount on price-current, 50 + 5 per cent.; addition, 10 per cent., 10 per cent., and 10 per cent.

Mr. TUCKER. I now yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the first part of this bill under consideration meets with my entire concurrence. That portion of it which reduces internal taxes I think should be adopted by the House. The repeal of the taxes on deposits in banks, of the stamp tax on checks and on matches, the reduction of the tax on tobacco, and the other internal taxes which are reduced by this bill are proper and right, and in my judgment should meet the approval of every member of Congress.

That portion of the bill, however, relating to the tariff, in my opinion, contains some very grave defects. In my opinion the present law is better than the one here proposed. Under the present law the importations are vast and extensive; but under the proposed law the importations will be far greater.

Therefore, instead of accomplishing the end proposed by this legislation—the reduction of revenue—it will simply increase the revenue which will be paid into the Treasury. The consequence of increasing that revenue will be twofold: one to deplete the country of the precious metals, the other to reduce the wages which are now paid to your laboring classes because the manufacturers of this country will be largely crippled in their operations.

Although to the banks themselves it is an advantage to have the tax taken off deposits and capital and checks, yet what will the banks do if the great manufacturing industries of this country shall become so crippled that the banks will not be able to loan money to them, and if that very substratum of the banking business, the $780,000,000 of gold and silver in this country, shall be drained into the foreign markets for the purchase of their products, while your own mills and your own factories shall be idle?

I say that the Congress that shall reduce the tariff duties of this country as now proposed will make a grievous mistake. I am willing to predict here and now that the visitation that will come upon this country for this grievous mistake will be seen and manifested within the next two years. We will be called upon to account for the fact that our mills will be idle, and that the gold and the silver which now stimulate the industries of this country are drained into foreign markets.

In the metal schedule, with which I am more familiar than any of the others, there are several flagrant incongruities. On pages 29 and 30 of the conference report you will find different kinds of ordinary iron at higher rates of duty than charcoal-iron. On pages 30 and 31 you will find common sheet-iron having a specific duty and tagger-iron at what will certainly prove a less ad valorem rate. This has been demonstrated by actual experience under the present law, whose discriminations respecting these classes of iron are preserved and perpetuated by the bill. In this same paragraph the rate on galvanized sheet iron or steel is only allowed three-fourths of a cent a pound additional, which is not adequate for the protection of the additional labor. Then follows planished or glanced sheet-iron, which is reduced to 2½ cents per pound, a half cent below the present rate of duty. That reduction should not have been made. Then comes sheet-iron which has been pickled and cold-rolled, and only a quarter of a cent additional is allowed, which is wholly inadequate.

Then follows the gross and destructive rate of duty on tin-plate of 1 cent per pound, which I took occasion to characterize in the debate on the House bill. Cotton-ties are fixed at 35 per cent. ad valorem, the same as the present law, and this provision absolutely precludes our own people from manufacturing them. This is an unpardonable blunder.

The carefully prepared provisions relating to steel in its various forms have been simply shorn of their best and most vital features. The distinction between ingots and blooms of five hundred pounds and upward and those below that weight was intended to protect both the manufacturer and the Government from imposition, and it would, in connection with ratings of steel proposed by the Tariff Commission, have resulted in an easy and safe administration of the law; yet this vital principle is eviscerated from the conference bill, and all the evils of the present unsatisfactory system are kept.

There are several more defects which I will not now undertake to point out. The hope that a consistent and harmonious tariff law would be enacted is by this bill disappointed. It will occasion much litigation and it invites by its incongruities evasions and undervaluations.

We imported last year about seventy million dollars' worth of metals. We bought abroad large quantities of iron and steel, nearly all being the products of the heavy industries. This was wholly unnecessary. Now we propose to import more. We substantially say by this conference bill that we desire to increase our importations. Is that wise policy? Is it wise to reduce duties on the ebbing tide of prosperity?

I think we have made a serious mistake, and I, for one, whatever clamor may be raised, will adhere with undeviating fidelity to the policy of protection, believing as I do that the prosperity and happiness of the people of the United States will be better promoted by that policy than by any other one cause over which we have control as legislators.

Mr. KELLEY. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PEELLE].

Mr. PEELLE. I desire to state a few of the reasons which will control me in supporting the report of the committee of conference. There are many items in this bill which, if standing alone, I could not support.

But the people of my district and the people of this country demand a reduction of internal-revenue taxes and a revision of the tariff. I for one am willing that the will of the people should be crystallized into law.

This bill will reduce our revenue nearly seventy millions of dollars; and, if I am not mistaken in the calculations which I have hurriedly made, $20,000,000 of that amount will inure directly to the benefit of the toiling masses of this country.

This is the best bill that we are likely to formulate and pass at this session of Congress. If we could secure a better bill I would be willing to stand here and labor in this Congress to secure it according to the judgment of the various members of Congress, if that could possibly be done. We promised the people in the campaigns of 1880 and 1882 to reduce taxation and revise the tariff, and in furtherance of the promise made in 1880 we provided in the last Congress for the Tariff Commission. That commission furnished us with abundant information at the beginning of this session. We have no excuse for further delay, and we ought now to make good our promise to the people.

I quite agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROBINSON] that the duty which it is proposed to place upon the raw material, wool, is not what it should be. That duty is too low on the raw material when we consider the duty proposed to be placed on the manufactured article. I quite agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUBBELL] that the copper interest may be somewhat injured because of the rate of duty imposed by this bill.

But, sir, as a representative of 150,000 people I can not stand up here and defeat a bill which affects every industry in this country simply because it can not be made to suit all our various ideas. This is the best bill that we can pass this Congress; it is an infinitely better bill than is the present law. We must take the bad things in it in order to get the good, and this is tolerable since the defects in the bill are far less than in the present law.

Therefore I believe, at least I conceive it to be my duty to vote for this report and to sustain this bill, believing that if we pass it we will have earned the lasting gratitude of the people of the United States.

And we should remember that this is not the only Congress that we are going to have in this country. If there are defects in this bill, subsequent Congresses can correct those defects in accordance with the circumstances of each particular case.

I have said that there were items in this bill which if standing alone I would not support. I would not support standing alone the duty which is imposed by this bill upon sugar; indeed, I should be glad if we could put sugar on the free-list; but when I find that the bill will in that respect reduce the burdens upon the people of this country some $10,000,000 I am willing to support it. If standing alone I would not support the duties which are proposed to be imposed upon steel and iron, but when taken together I can give the report and bill my support.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I now desire to yield two minutes, or so long as may be required, to enable the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] to read some telegrams he has received.

Mr. MORSE. As these telegrams have come to me from my constituents, I am bound to give the information to the House, and then gentlemen can vote on the bill before us as they please. First I read a telegram from the chairman of the Democratic State central committee of Massachusetts:

BOSTON, MASS., March 3, 1883.

Hon. LEOPOLD MORSE,
Washington, District of Columbia:

The business interest of Boston demand the passage of some tariff legislation this session. Our political friends can not afford to defeat it.

JONAS H. FRENCH.

Here is a dispatch from a gentleman who was chairman of the Democratic committee in my district, which we carried by 4,000 majority against 2,500 majority in the last election the other way:

BOSTON, MASS., March 3, 1883.

Hon. LEOPOLD MORSE:

Your constituents implore you to use your influence to pass the tariff bill.

CHAS. E. RAYMOND.

Here is another telegram:

BOSTON, MASS., March 3, 1883.

Hon. LEOPOLD MORSE,
Washington, District of Columbia:

The business people of Massachusetts urgently ask you to pass the tariff bill! There is hardly an exception in this community. I have not heard but one opinion—all favor it.

THOMAS DORR.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Do they know what this bill is?

Mr. MORSE. They want a reduction of taxes, and this is the only bill we can vote for which will give it to them. My people are intelligent enough to understand that. They know as much about this bill as the gentleman does. I do not think he knows any more about it than they do.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I do not think I do.

Mr. MORSE. I am willing to vote blindly for this bill, so far as details are concerned, when I know that it will result in a reduction of the burdens upon the people. Here are other telegrams I have received.

BOSTON, MASS., March 3, 1883.

Hon. LEOPOLD MORSE,
Washington, District Columbia:

Please use all your efforts to secure the passage of the tariff bill; business interests of the country require it.

GEORGE RIPLY.

BOSTON, MASS., March 3, 1883.

Hon. LEOPOLD MORSE,
Washington, District Columbia:

Do everything in your power to serve the business interests of the country by securing the passage of the tariff bill.

WM. A. TOWER.

BOSTON, MASS., March 3, 1883.

Hon. LEOPOLD MORSE,
Washington, District Columbia:

Please exert all your influence to secure the passage of the tariff bill; the business interests of the country demand it.

JACOB EDWARDS.

BOSTON, MASS., March 3, 1883.

Hon. LEOPOLD MORSE,
Washington, District Columbia:

Use all your influence to secure passage tariff bill; the business interest of the country requires and demands it.

Mr. COBB. Who says that?

Mr. MORSE. Asa P. Potter, of Boston.

Mr. COBB. What does he know about it?

Mr. MORSE. I simply read what he says. The gentleman from Indiana is welcome to his own judgment:

BOSTON, MASS., March 3, 1883.

Hon. LEOPOLD MORSE,
Washington, District of Columbia:

Use every effort to secure the passage of the tariff bill. The country depends upon this Congress to give it relief in this way.

EUSTIS C. FITZ.

No one of these men is engaged in manufacturing.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill will not give them any relief.
Mr. MORSE. If they are satisfied, I am.
[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 604) for the relief of William W. Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 4962) to amend section 5463 of the Revised Statutes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 303) respecting the administration of justice in Tunis.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2911) for the relief of the German National Bank of Louisville, Kentucky;

A bill (H. R. 2638) for the relief of J. J. Coffey and Rebecca S. Lewis, mother of Burge Rawle Lewis; and

A bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Clinton D. Smith.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home, located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

TARIFF AND INTERNAL REVENUE.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the tariff and internal-tax bill.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. FISHER].

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, there is but little in this conference report which commends it to my favorable consideration. One of the great industries of my district is threatened. Probably $5,000,000 of the $10,000,000 paid for the labor of the charcoal-furnaces of this country will be lost under this measure; $17,000,000 of capital is threatened. Over 20,000 of the 40,000 men engaged in that industry will be driven from employment.

In this report, at line 553, we have a paragraph which imposes a duty of $24.76 a ton upon all iron less than one inch in width or round iron three-fourths of an inch in diameter; while in the same paragraph there is imposed upon charcoal-iron of all shapes, forms, and sizes a specific duty of but $22 per ton. Under the present tariff the duty is $33.60. This iron must suffer a reduction of 50 per cent. If pig-iron could not stand a reduction of 50 cents per ton, or about 7 per cent., how can the manufacturers of charcoal-iron submit to a reduction of 50 per cent.?

But, sir, we have this astonishing fact: While you lay a duty of $24.76 upon common iron, charcoal-iron, of more value, comes in at $2.76 a ton less. The same thing occurs on round iron, in the paragraph under which iron seven-sixteenths of an inch in diameter comes in at the rate of $26.88 a ton, $4.88 more duty per ton than that imposed upon charcoal-iron of similar form and of much more value.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is so.

Mr. FISHER. But while I point out these discrepancies which no member of the conference committee can justify——

Mr. SPRINGER. Or explain.

Mr. FISHER. I desire to say that on the one hand, if this conference report be defeated, we are threatened with a Senate bill immeasurably worse. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] On the other hand, we see an incoming Congress largely composed of men who are free-traders and tariff-for-revenue men, who may give us a much worse bill. So I stand between the devil and the deep sea. All that I can do is to swallow this nasty dose as philosophically as I can, and I shall therefore vote for the report.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, if I can be permitted to say one or two things in regard to this bill, I believe I will vote for it [laughter] for reasons precisely opposite to several of those which have been stated by some gentlemen on this floor. I regard the idea of taking $22,000,000 off tobacco, and thirteen, fourteen, or fifteen million dollars off another luxury, that is money—at least I consider it a luxury when I have any—and taking only eleven or twelve millions off sugar as simply infamous and outrageous.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Yet you are going to vote for it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, for we are virtually in this position: Within a few hours this Congress will close. If this bill will reduce taxation $75,000,000 I am willing to vote for it, with the distinct understanding that in the next Congress I shall endeavor to bring down your pig-iron, lumber, woolen and other things—to knock the jobbery that I believe to be in some items of the tariff bill out of it. I only take this measure because I believe the present law is worse. I want to see the people who buy and use these things protected as well as the men who make them; but I suppose I shall have to take what I can get now, awaiting another opportunity to make greater reductions, and swallow this infamous and nauseous dose. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I trust the gentleman from Virginia will now exhaust his time.

Mr. TUCKER. I will take the floor and yield for four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, There are two kinds of sins: sins of commission and sins of omission. I do not know, sir, that you are guilty of either, but this Congress at the beginning of this session was guilty of the sin of commission, for it spent money with a wild and excessive prodigality. It undertakes to make up or to pay into the Treasury large sums of money by imports under this conference bill which even the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] confesses to be an infamous juggle. And he votes for the juggle. [Laughter.]

There never was since I have been here, speaking for the people for over twenty years, such a conspicuous failure as this Congress. You failed last session, you fail now; you fail on appropriations, and you fail on the tariff; and you will be known hereafter as the great American Congressional failure. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

You undertake to-day to make a tariff bill; you can not get everything, of course, but your bill is bad for multifariousness among other things. [Laughter.]

Ohio can not vote for it. Why? I like Ohio. I was born there. Job, it is said in the old Scripture, was a perfect and upright man, feared God and eschewed evil and had 7,000 sheep. [Laughter.] I know what is in this bill. It is your lamb—"little Mary" left out. [Laughter.] There is no innocency in it.

This bill is intended to help iron and not to help the people. We can not vote for it. Our State does not vote for it. I am sorry to see that the best man on the other side of the House, I think his name is ANDERSON [laughter], has given away all the magnificent eloquence which he made here for six days on this subject. No matter, there will be another Congress.

Now, I have had some telegrams sent to me here. They are crowding in—you never saw the like before—from farmers of South Carolina to this side of the House. Here is one of them:

S. S. COX:

Public disgusted. Stand by the farmers. Do not vote for the protection bill that taxes the interests of the people and relieves the banks and monopolies.

MANY FARMERS.

[Laughter and applause].

They have no tariff that does relieve the tax on steel, iron, lumber, and the necessaries of life. Here are some from farmers of Mississippi. [Laughter on Republican side.] I have twenty other telegrams here on this subject. [Laughter.] We can not be fooled, we farmer people. You take them from your manufactures. We know your little jobs. Your telegrams are flying all around this House. Now, pass this bill if you can, and go to your people.

Mr. MORSE. We are going to.

Mr. COX, of New York. When did you turn Republican and protectionist? [Laughter.] We are fighting in the interest of the people.

Mr. MORSE. So am I.

Mr. COX, of New York. We are fighting for their rights.

Mr. MORSE. More than you are.

Mr. COX, of New York. Your relieving monopolies and banks does not show it. I can not in four minutes tell all there is obnoxious in a bill of this character, but the people will know it, and your gavel, Mr. Speaker, will recognize it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. TUCKER. I now yield three minutes and a half to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I have only two or three minutes left, and I want to say one single word. I believe for the first time in the history of this country a tariff bill, which proposed to levy on the people two hundred millions of money, is to be passed without any consideration by the representatives of the people except during the last two or three hours as to a great part of the bill. It went to a Tariff Commission; it came to the Committee on Ways and Means; it went to the Senate. We raised the constitutional question, gentlemen did, on the other side the other day to interpose against the power of the Senate to tax the people of the country; and they swap—I mean no disrespect to gentlemen—but they swap the Constitution for a high tariff. [Applause.] Because, as I understand, they said, We will not raise the constitutional question until we settle the fact as to whether we can get a tariff; let us manipulate the tariff first and see if we can get it. And if we can get what will suit us we will swap the Constitution for that. If we can not, we will throw aside the shield of the Constitution to protect the people from having a reduction of taxation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want a reduction of the tariff just as much as other people do, but on a different line. They want a tariff; that is, a high tariff. I want one that is low tariff. That is just the difference between us. You are not anxious to pass a low-tariff bill and we are not anxious to pass a high-tariff bill. The question is, What kind of a tariff are you going to pass? I have resisted to the utmost the passage of this high-tariff bill, and now we have come to the last hours of the session for a vote upon this, and I do advise gentlemen who want in good faith only hereafter to see the tariff reduced and made equitable to the interests of the country to vote against this bill, and not fasten it upon the people of the country in order to have it revoked next winter.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. 5200) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2638) for the relief of J. J. Coffey and Rebecca S. Lewis, mother of Burge Rawle Lewis.

A bill (H. R. 2911) for the relief of the German National Bank of Louisville, Kentucky.

A bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Clinton D. Smith.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield three minutes to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MUTCHLER].

Mr. MUTCHLER. Mr. Speaker, if it were necessary to relieve the tax-ridden people from that burden which rests upon them by reason of this internal-revenue law, extracting as it does from their current income $100,000,000 a year, to swap the Constitution as we have just now heard it construed in order to relieve them, then I am willing to swap it. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] Yes, sir; I say that this tax of $100,000,000 a year is a burden on our people, and we are justified in doing anything reasonable that will relieve them from it, because we do not need the money.

I have the honor to represent in part on the floor of this House a State which has for many years borne the taunts of the anti-protectionists, because her people are engaged in industries which needed and received the helping hand of the Government. In the formation of this tariff bill those industries suffer more than the industries of any other State. Yet I believe that they will adjust themselves to the bill as it is formed, and that the industries not only of Pennsylvania but of every other State will be benefited by it. We had better settle the question now than leave it open for another whole year. The point to be gained is in relieving a tax-burdened people of $70,000,000, when we do not need one single dollar of that revenue for the purposes of the Government; and we can not justify it.

I say to my Democratic friends on this side of the House if you expect to maintain, to deserve, and to receive the confidence which the people seem to have intrusted us with at the last election, do not insist upon keeping this burden upon them; because in that case they will not trust you. What they want is to be relieved from the taxation that is imposed upon them. You now have the opportunity to do it to the extent at least of $70,000,000 a year; and if we do not do it they will hold us responsible.

In a speech which I had the honor to make on the floor of this House last May I predicted that the party which insisted on extracting this enormous sum of money from the current income of the people every year could not be intrusted with the people's power; and I am gratified to say that the recent elections have proved my predictions to be true.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON].

Mr. KASSON. I hope that before this debate closes there may be a moment's consideration given to the main question, instead of picking flaws in a vast and voluminous bill. I could enter into that work, sir, myself if I believed that was the main question before the House of Representatives. I could make protests against here a clause and there a clause, and I can make it against any bill that you can frame by a constant devotion of two years' time to produce a satisfactory result.

What is the object of this bill on the part of the majority of this House? It is to reduce internal revenue and to revise the tariff in the combined sense of inflicting no serious injury on the industries of the country and of lightening taxation admitted to be too severe on the American people. Those two objects are required by this side of the House; only one of them is required by the other side.

Have we then destroyed any recognized national interest? We have the remarkable spectacle here of men who denounce the bill because it protects at all, coming over to shake hands on this side of the House with gentlemen who say it does not protect enough. When the Greeks come to Troy with their Trojan horses it is time for the Trojans to open their eyes. Where, upon the principles maintained by our friends on the other side, will be the wool interest and the woolen interest one year from this time?

Sir, it is a misrepresentation to say that the reduction on woolens is not as great as that on wool. We have as the present rates on wools under 32 cents in value 10 cents per pound; over 32 cents, 12 cents per pound; both specific, and in one case 10 per cent. ad valorem added, and in the other case 12 per cent. ad valorem added. The ad valorem, 10 per cent. and 11 per cent., is taken off and the specific rates remain as under the present law. And more, this report reduces the ad valorem division line from 32 cents to 30 cents, which is in favor of the wool-grower; as it brings a larger amount of wool under the higher rate of duty. And that is all that is done to wool in this schedule.

On woolens, on the contrary, you have reduced the rate, where it was 50 cents per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem, to 30 cents per pound and 35 cents per pound and the ad valorem. In one case 20 cents of specific duty are taken off and in the other 15 cents. In the other case where the present duty is 20 cents per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem, it is 10 cents per pound and 12 cents a pound with the 35 per cent. ad valorem. And so on going through the bill. On blankets, flannels, and that class of goods, the reduction is immense, amounting to about 50 per cent. of the present duty. And shall we, who are bound to legislate for all the American people, ignore the interests of all the American people who consume woolens? Or shall we recognize both the wool-grower and the woolen consumer?

Sir, we have been denounced from California to Maine for our high duties on our woolen goods. The reason for the specific duty on woolens is compensation for the duty on wool. Shall we merely protect one interest and ignore the other? The manufacturers have their own protection of 35 per cent. ad valorem, and when the gentlemen who have denounced for years the high duties on woolens come over and tell our wool-growers "Dear friends, you are not enough protected; you ought not to vote for the bill"——

Mr. MORRISON. Who told them that?

Mr. KASSON. Gentlemen said that on the floor here repeatedly to wool-growing representatives, and it was said also by individuals off the floor. That is all I need to say about that.

In regard to the effect of the duty on wool, permit me to say that under our protective system wool-raising in this country has been largely developed, and by increasing competition has reduced largely the price of wool, and we are no longer dependent upon the foreign production alone.

Now, sir, upon one or two other points a word or two and I will complete all which time permits me to say. The time has passed in which to denounce the method by which we have reached this bill. We have reached it, and have reached it, I suppose, legally. The question is now whether, because to this little thing or to that individual thing of greater importance, is assigned a rate of duty which we think a little too high or too low, shall we refuse to lighten taxation at all? For myself I had rather explain why I voted for this bill by the simple declaration that the people are now overtaxed and my vote was to lift $70,000,000 off their shoulders, than to answer the question, Why did not you vote for the bill? by going into little details about an offensive rule adopted by the House, and about the bill not going far enough on some article or too far on another, and the thousand petty excuses with which you are amusing yourselves on this floor.

There are articles from which I wanted to take more duty and additional articles which I desired on the free-list, which I thought could be done without detriment to any of our national industries. But I will take this bill, and take it gladly. Four hundred thousand men, chiefly Germans, are interested in one class of individual taxes largely reduced by this bill, which they can not charge over to the consumer—a tax that is known as the special or license tax.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COBB. The hour has arrived at which it was determined a vote should be taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was indulging the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] for a few moments because of time which had been occupied by the Chair in presenting reports to the House.

Mr. COBB. I insist upon the regular order.

Mr. KELLEY. I now call for a vote on agreeing to the report.

Mr. CARLISLE. I understand that the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. CARLISLE. I consumed much more of the time allotted to this side of the House than I had intended, and in doing so prevented several gentlemen on this side of the House from participating in this discussion. I now ask general consent that members have leave to print in the RECORD remarks upon the pending measure.

Mr. CURTIN. I could not get time, though I desired to make a few remarks on this subject. I ask leave to print in the RECORD such remarks as I would have otherwise submitted.

Mr. CARLISLE. I ask that general consent be given to print remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] asks that general leave be given members of the House to print in the RECORD remarks on the pending measure.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MILLS. I ask leave, not to submit any remarks, but to print certain statistics and documents which I have here in the RECORD, and also that they be printed as a document of the House.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.
The documents are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge, from the Secretary of the Senate, the receipt of a copy of a resolution adopted by the Senate on the 17th of April, requesting me to furnish all the information in the possession of this Department as to the total consumption within the United States of all the manufactured articles to which tariff duties apply, including those imported as well as those produced in this country, with the proportion of each, and, in response thereto, to transmit herewith a statement, prepared by the Bureau of Statistics, which furnishes the information requested, so far as data have been obtained for instituting the desired comparison.

As the Department possesses no full information in regard to the value of articles manufactured in the United States since that obtained in 1870, the year of the last decennial census, it became necessary to confine to that year the comparison of the consumption in this country of articles of domestic and foreign production.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN B. HAWLEY,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. W. A. WHEELER,
President of the Senate.

Statement showing the amount of the principal manufactured articles subject to customs duties produced in the United States during the year ended June 30, 1870, the amount thereof exported and remaining for consumption, the amount imported for consumption, and the total consumption within the country, with the percentage of the amount imported.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move to suspend the rules, so as to take from the Speaker's table and pass Senate bill No. 1492.

Mr. REED. I ask that the tariff bill which has just been passed be printed. I think there will be no objection to this request. If this be not done the bill will not be before the public for some time, perhaps.

The SPEAKER. Printed in what form?

Mr. REED. The type is all standing, as I am informed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the bill just passed by the adoption of the conference report be printed in the form of a bill with the present type. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. I desire to have it printed in pamphlet form—not in this voluminous shape. We ought to have 50,000 extra copies.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] moves to suspend the rules so as to take from the Speaker's table and pass a bill the title of which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1492) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry—whether or not the "Pound rule" is operating?

The SPEAKER. The "Pound rule" is operating when it is called up. This motion is pending now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the right to demand a division on this motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have the right.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order. I submit we must now proceed for one hour to consider bills from committees under the Pound rule.

The SPEAKER. The Pound rule is in operation, of course.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I make that point of order.

Mr. VALENTINE. My motion is to suspend that and all other rules for the purpose of passing this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor to make that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN. Is it in order to move a recess?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can recognize no gentleman. The Chair is waiting for members to take their seats and preserve order in the Hall. The gentleman from Nebraska was recognized to move to suspend the rules and pass a bill the title of which has been stated.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. And upon that I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that the first business in order is the call of committees under the Pound rule. The Chair sustains the point of order and will call the committees.

The Committee on Public Expenditures was called.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to set aside the Pound rule.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to make a privileged motion. When the committees were called on yesterday I stated that the gentleman from South Carolina, from the Committee on Territories, had been authorized to submit a motion, but was temporarily absent when that committee was reached. I then made a request, which I understand was acceded to, that the call should rest with that committee when this hour next begun.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Territories was called and passed over because the gentleman from South Carolina was not in his seat. The Chair will again make the request for unanimous consent that he be allowed to return to that committee and call it now. Is there objection?

Mr. SPARKS I move to take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is that the House be in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina will be recognized without objection.

The Committee on the Territories was called.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have been seeking, sir, to answer the inquiry of the Chair as to whether or not there was objection to this proceeding. When the same inquiry was made on a former occasion I endeavored then also to obtain the floor to object. I stated then as I state now that I shall object unless the bill is named.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. HOLMAN. Until the bill is named I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana states that he objected in time to the call of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I have stated, unless the name of the bill is given.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must make an unqualified objection or none.

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the Chair is unable to entertain the request.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Before submitting the motion that the House take a recess, the Chair desires to lay before the House certain executive communications and requests of members.

CRUISE OF REVENUE-CUTTER CORWIN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a House resolution, the observations and notes on glaciation, birds, natural history, &c., made upon the cruise of the revenue-cutter Corwin in 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to print remarks in the RECORD, as follows:

To Mr. CHAPMAN on the tariff bill, and to Mr. PARKER upon pending bills relating to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. [See Appendix.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. HOLMAN to withdraw the papers accompanying House bill 5969, to provide for the payment of female nurses who served during the late war; upon which bill no report has been made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

ALLEGED CORRUPTION IN INVESTIGATING CERTAIN CLAIMS.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, submitted the report of that committee relative to the investigation made by them under the resolution of the House of April 7, 1882; which was ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. VAN HORN. I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881 there be printed 4,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to amend that. I desire to increase the number of copies for the use of the House and Senate and decrease the number to the Department.

The SPEAKER. In what respect?

Mr. RANDALL. I would say 12,000 for the use of the House, 6,000 for the Senate, and the remainder, completing the aggregate, for the Department.

Mr. VAN HORN. I accept the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope no amendment will be made to that resolution, as it will imperil its passage.

Mr. VAN HORN. I think not.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; and the bill (H. R. 6405) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh, executrices of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased, by the regrading of the streets around square No. 736 in the city of Washington; in which amendments concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 110) to refund to the State of Georgia certain money expended by said State for the common defense in 1777; and

A bill (H. R. 684) to offer assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution, 139, authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; in which concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask that I may have the attention of the House for one moment. I desire to state that the wives of a number of members of Congress are desirous of witnessing the closing scenes of this House. They can not secure seats in the galleries. I therefore ask unanimous consent that they be permitted to occupy seats on the floor of the House.

Several members objected.

Mr. BELFORD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire whether they are not permitted to be on the floor under the rule?

The SPEAKER. They are not.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the bill H. R. 7637, the general deficiency appropriation bill, be taken from the Speaker's table, that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments thereto, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. CANNON. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

The question being taken on suspending the rules, there were—ayes 102, noes 8.

So (further count not being called for) the rules were suspended, more than two-thirds voting in favor thereof, and the House non-concurred in the Senate amendments to the bill and agreed to ask for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. HISCOCK of New York, Mr. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. COX of New York.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report submitted from the Committee on Printing by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN].

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer an amendment so that there shall be 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House, and 5,000 for the Department. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will admit that amendment.

Mr. VAN HORN. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN HORN. I desire to present another report.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the House be in order.

The SPEAKER. Members will please take their seats.

Mr. BROWNE. I desire to inquire if it would not be quite as well for gentlemen who have bills and reports to present to do so from their seats.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. BROWNE. I think that would be better instead of their coming forward and filling the aisles.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. VAN HORN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the Senate concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 10,000 additional copies of the proceedings of the Yorktown centennial celebration be printed, of which 6,000 shall be for the use of the House and 4,000 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to offer an amendment to that resolution.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Insert at the end of the resolution: "and that there be printed 8,000 copies of volume 3 of the report on forestry, by Dr. Hough, 6,000 for the use of the House and 2,000 for the use of the Senate."

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope there will be no objection to the printing of that report; it is a very valuable document.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. We can not reach that now.

Mr. DUNNELL. The report was made to the House more than a year ago. It is a very valuable public document. Very many calls are made for it, and I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that the amendment is not germane to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It does not seem to be germane to the resolution. The point of order is sustained.

The resolution reported by the Committee on Printing was adopted.

REPORT ON SORGHUM SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Mr. VAN HORN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the Senate concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the National Academy of Sciences on the sorghum sugar industry be printed with such portions of the appendix and the accompanying exhibits as may be selected by the Joint Committee on Printing. That there be printed 6,500 additional copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House, 1,000 for the use of the Department of Agriculture, and 500 copies for the use of said National Academy of Sciences.

Mr. DUNNELL. Would not the amendment I offered to the other resolution be germane to this? I think there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. VAN HORN. I have none.

Mr. SPRINGER. I made the point of order.

The SPEAKER. But it is offered as an amendment to another resolution.

Mr. TALBOTT. The point of order, I understand, is made on the amendment, not on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is made on the amendment. The Chair thinks the amendment is not germane to the resolution.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to make a single remark and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the resolution the following:
"That there be printed 8,000 copies of volume 3 of the report on forestry by Dr. Hough, 6,000 for the use of the House and 2,000 for the use of the Senate."

Mr. SPRINGER. I prefer that proposition should stand on its own merits.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope, then, the resolution will be voted down. Let us have a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 9.

Mr. SKINNER. No quorum.

Mr. TALBOTT. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw that point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Gentlemen need not think they can force this matter in this way. I am utterly indifferent myself whether this be printed. But I wish the proposition to print the forestry report should come before the House as a distinct proposition and stand upon its own merits. I do not think it is worth printing; and I am willing it should come before the House and stand upon its merits.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair understands that the point of order is withdrawn against the amendment, and it will be again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that there is an independent resolution pending before the House now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to withdraw his point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; I said I was willing that it should come up on its own merits.

The SPEAKER. Then, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] makes the point of order that no quorum has voted, tellers will be ordered.

Mr. TALBOTT. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that point of order.

Mr. SKINNER. I will withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being withdraw the concurrent resolution is adopted.

MAPS, ETC., FOR THE CENSUS REPORT.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the Committee on Printing, also reported back with a favorable recommendation Senate joint resolution No. 143, authorizing the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer relative to the maps, &c., for the census report.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Committee on Printing be, and they are hereby, authorized to instruct the Public Printer to accept private proposals for printing the required number of copies of maps and other illustrations for the census reports from plates or stones which were engraved under special appropriations for printing and engraving for the Tenth Census prior to the act of August 7, 1882, whenever it shall clearly appear that expense can be saved thereby.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REVISED STATUTES AND LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation Senate bill 2433 to amend sections 6 and 7 of the act providing for the publication of the Revised Statutes and the laws of the United States, approved June 20, 1876.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That an act approved June 20, 1876, be so amended as to increase the number of the pamphlet and bound copies of the laws of the United States to be supplied to the Treasury Department, as provided in sections 6 and 7, from 200 copies to 300 copies; and that the number of pamphlets and bound copies of the laws of the United States printed for distribution by the Secretary of State, as provided in section 5 of the said act, be increased from 2,000 copies to 2,100 copies.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REVISED STATUTES FOR INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation Senate joint resolution 95, providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the Secretary of the Interior, for the use of the Department of the Interior and its subordinate bureaus and officers, one hundred copies of the second edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY AND CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation Senate joint resolution 64, authorizing the sale of the Congressional Directory and the current numbers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That it shall be lawful for the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives on Printing, to print for sale, at a price sufficient to reimburse the expenses of such printing, the current Congressional Directory and the current numbers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The money derived from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury monthly to the credit of the appropriation for public printing, and no sales shall be made on credit.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the various votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is impossible from the confusion in the Hall to tell what is transpiring at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, and it is not the fault of the Chair that the House is not in order.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. At the time the recess was taken this afternoon the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDSON] had the floor under the Pound rule, and his proposition was not disposed of.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged matter.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Can the gentleman be taken from the floor by a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged matter.

REPORT OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation a concurrent resolution of the Senate in regard to the printing of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1882.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring), That 10,000 additional copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1882 be printed; of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House, 1,500 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 copies for sale by the Public Printer at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereto added.

The concurrent resolution was adopted.

REPORT OF HEALTH OFFICER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SPRINGER also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the Senate joint resolution No. 139 authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; 100 for the use of the Senate, 300 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,100 for the use of the said health officer of the District of Columbia.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to a third reading.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 37, noes 21.

So (no further count being called for) the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BULLETINS OF BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. SPRINGER also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 3,000 copies each of the bulletins of the Bureau of Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution, numbers 1 to 12, inclusive, with the necessary illustrations, for the use of the Bureau of Ethnology.

The concurrent resolution was adopted.

REPORT ON SUEZ CANAL.

Mr. SPRINGER also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution:

Resolved, That of the report of Professor Nourse on the Suez Canal there be printed 5,000 copies, of which 1,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House, and 500 for the Navy Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a report which was called for by the Senate and obtained through the Navy Department as to the condition and workings of the Suez Canal. The fact that the Government is now using this canal for its vessels has induced the Navy Department to ask that this report be printed. I have a special letter from the Secretary of the Navy making the request. The cost will be but small, about $3,000. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The question being taken, the resolution was not agreed to, there being—ayes 26, noes 61.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the various votes by which the resolutions reported from the Committee on Printing were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOUTH CAROLINA ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a question of the highest privilege. In discharge of the duty imposed upon me by the Committee on Elections, I now call up for final disposition the contested-election case of Lee vs. Richardson from the first Congressional district of South Carolina.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. How much time will this case occupy?

Mr. CALKINS. One hour.

Mr. TALBOTT. What is the report of the committee?

Mr. CALKINS. The majority report is in favor of the sitting member.

Mr. TALBOTT. Then what is the need of bringing it up?

Mr. MORSE. I raise the question of consideration upon this report.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House proceed to consider this contested-election case?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 60, noes 65.

Mr. CALKINS. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted the Chair will appoint tellers. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] will act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 89.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being ayes 23—less than one-fifth of the last vote.

The SPEAKER. The House decides to proceed with the consideration of the contested-election case.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] whether he will not call the previous question now?

Mr. WHEELER. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The demand comes too late.

Mr. WHEELER. I made the demand immediately after the announcement of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late.

Mr. WHEELER. My call for tellers was not heard by the Chair; but I made the demand as soon as the Chair announced the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I simply wanted to state to the Speaker that there was so much noise he did not hear me the first time I made the demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not rise in his place and make the request until the result was announced. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CALKINS. I give notice that in one hour from this time I will call the previous question on the adoption of the resolution reported by the majority of the Committee on Elections. It is nothing more than fair that I should state, before yielding the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE], that there is in this case a minority as well as a majority report.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to move to limit debate on this question to one-half hour?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. CALKINS. The majority report is in favor of the sitting member, and the minority report is in favor of the contestant. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, who has charge of the minority report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the reading of the resolution reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Samuel Lee have leave to withdraw his papers, and this case is dismissed without prejudice.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Speaker, in the few moments allotted to me on this case, if the House will lend me its ear, I will present the case of the contestant. The testimony is most voluminous. Over 1,000 pages of printed testimony is on our desks. The first Congressional district of South Carolina is composed of the counties of Georgetown, Sumter, Williamsburgh, Horry, Darlington, Marlborough, and Marion. The returns of the State board of canvassers give to the sitting member a majority of over 8,000 votes. If this be an honest majority, if there was an honest election, if the sitting member has been truly declared elected by over 8,000 votes, then it is monstrous that we should unseat him.

But, Mr. Speaker, if that majority was the result of ballot-box stuffing or fraud, which vitiates all things, then it is not right the sitting member should hold his seat for an hour.

Take the case of Georgetown County, embracing nine precincts, eight of which were thrown out and not counted at all. The vote in 1880 was only 919 votes, while the sitting member admits that four years before the vote was 3,836; more than four times as many as voted in 1880. What was the result? Eight of the precincts in Georgetown County were thrown out, as I have said, and were not counted at all. On what pretense were they not counted? They were thrown out, not upon any ground that the vote was not honest; not because any charge of fraud was made; but because the box was sent up by a person who had not a written authority to do it when the law did not demand anything of the kind. Yet, on that pretext, eight precincts in Georgetown County were thrown out, and the entire vote of that county was cut down four votes out of every five. In this way 1,995 votes were taken away in one county from Mr. Lee, when they were cast for him honestly and should have been honestly counted and honestly returned for him.

That was the county of Georgetown. Take now the case of the frauds which were perpetrated in Concord precinct. At this precinct it is claimed by Mr. Richardson and conceded by Mr. Lee that every honest vote cast for Mr. Richardson was 152, because the Republicans refused to vote, as they believed the ballot-box had already been stuffed before the polls opened. Therefore, all who voted were Democrats. That was undeniable. But strange to say when the box was opened a fraudulent excess of forty-one votes was found there. They were all Democratic votes, every one of them. No Republican voted, and not a single Republican ballot was found in the box. It is manifest this fraud was a Democratic fraud. The excess was properly rejected. The managers were Democrats, every one of them. One of the managers swears they found forty-one votes over and above the names on the poll-lists. The only explanation which can be given is that there was a design—a purpose to perpetrate fraud. There was a conspiracy to cheat Mr. Lee out of the vote, not only of that precinct but of all the precincts in that whole district. You can not account for it in any other way.

I have gone over the report which I had the honor to draw, county after county, precinct after precinct. How were these frauds perpetrated? I hold in my hands some tissue ballots. They are as fine as gossamer, twenty or thirty of them, or even forty, were frequently wrapped together and put into the box inside an honest ballot. When they came to count, these were counted as well as others. They were counted in this way: The excess had to be taken out of the box. The managers were Democrats, nine cases out of ten, and they would reach into the box and they could instantly tell the difference between the Democratic and Republican ballots, so that the Republican ballots were taken out and these dishonest ballots were left in the box.

Mr. ATHERTON. In order that we may know what you are claiming in this matter, I wish to ask what county you now refer to?

Mr. PETTIBONE. I refer especially to Georgetown County; but this occurred in all of the counties.

Mr. ATHERTON. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what others besides Georgetown?

Mr. PETTIBONE. The gentleman knows the facts in evidence; he can examine the matter for himself.

Mr. ATHERTON. No; I do not know that fact. I claim that there is no such evidence anywhere except with reference to Georgetown County. I supposed, as the gentleman made the statement that there were other counties, that he would willingly specify to answer that question.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the result of this? I know in the closing hours of this Congress it is too late to do justice to this question. But it is never too late in this business to try to do justice; and the report of this committee shows that there is no question of doubt except in the single district or precinct of Darlington. Now, as to Darlington—as to that precinct—what are the facts? Why, it had always given, down to this election, about 800 Republican majority. It voted about 1,400 votes—from 1,000 to 1,100 Republicans, the balance Democrats. In 1880 it apparently voted the same number, but 800 Republicans were not permitted to go to the polls. Eight hundred went away believing that there was to be another Hamburgh massacre there if they voted.

Now, my friends, how can you account for this? The same number of voters appeared to have voted. If you put in these tissue ballots, if you falsely counted the vote there, you could make up the 800. There ought to have been a falling off; but there was none.

The law of South Carolina at that time demanded that a report should be made to the secretary of state of the number of voters at each poll. No such report was made from Darlington at all. Why was it not made? The secretary of state certifies that no report was made to him. He certifies that he does not know what the true vote was. Well, it turns out that the clerk of the county court was supposed to have made a certificate showing what the vote was. Yet that clerk when put upon the stand swears, "I never made the report; I know nothing about it; it is not true; I never signed it."

Mr. Speaker, the rule of law is that when no one knows or can know how the vote stood the vote must be cast out. It can not be counted. No one knows, and therefore we have taken the ground that Darlington should not be counted, and the majority of the committee agree that if Darlington is not counted Lee should be seated instead of Richardson.

I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBS].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; agreed to the committee of conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5653) for the relief of Kirk W. Noyes;

A bill (H. R. 5661) to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7226) to punish larceny from the person in the District of Columbia.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say about two things, and I want the men who are to vote upon this question to hear what I have to say. I want to say just this: That in the committee it was conceded that this election and its results turned upon the result of the vote in the Darlington district in South Carolina, where Mr. Richardson got a majority of 1,154 votes counted for him.

Now, I put my vote and my decision in this case upon the ground that Mr. Lee lost about 1,000 votes in that district, which determined the result against him, by intimidation. Why, they say, there was no reason for these black men in that election and in that district to be scared. Two wagon-loads of guns were brought in there in the night without the blowing of a whistle or the ringing of a bell and distributed in the buildings around these polls, and their lively imagination and cowardly fears were worked upon all night; and the story spread throughout the country among the voters who were assembled in the morning; and when the thousand black men arrived they saw the same red-shirted vagabonds and cut-throats there on the steps and around the polling-place, and they were thrust back, struck with knives, threatened with pistols, and forced away from the polls. And yet some men in the committee-room said and would have us to believe that these people had no reason to be scared.

Mr. Speaker, I ask any Northern man here who occupies a seat upon this floor if he has the honor of representing a constituency who under such circumstances would dare to go to the polls and vote at what they believed was the peril of their lives? It is a cowardly thing of this House to expect black men down there to have stronger nerves and braver hearts than any of our constituencies at home.

Now, they say in response to that that these men were not deterred from voting; that they might have gone to some other poll; that they were free to go to two or three other polls in the same district. There was another polling-place within five miles, and five hundred men who attended that poll went home without voting. Now, my Democratic friends, we give you free elections in Iowa to-day, and we ask it everywhere all over this country.

Now I say, Mr. Speaker, that the loss of 1,000 votes in this county by intimidation defeated Lee and gave the seat to his opponent.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let me ask you a question.

Mr. JACOBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATHERTON. At what poll do you claim that five hundred men went away?

Mr. JACOBS. It was at a poll about six miles off. If I had the time I would look it up for you.

Mr. ATHERTON. Which one?

Mr. JACOBS. You know which one it was.

Mr. ATHERTON. Well, you say there was one; I want to hear you say which one it was.

Mr. JACOBS. The evidence shows which it was; and, as I have said, there were two polling-places some sixteen miles further off in the same district.

Mr. ATHERTON. I mean the poll at which five hundred men were deterred through intimidation.

Mr. JACOBS. Not deterred; but they did not vote on account of the crowd. Do not misunderstand me.

Now, I say this is the pivotal question to be determined by this Congress, and by you Democrats if you intend to be fair. Let us have done with this brutality and intimidation at elections North and South. We have scared the dog away up to the Canada line for you. Now we ask you to do justice to this black man who has received a majority of the votes.

Mr. FLOWER. Are you talking for a majority of the committee?

Mr. JACOBS. I believe so.

Mr. ATHERTON. No, sir.

Mr. JACOBS. I do not care whether I am or not; I am right. And that is all there is of it. And you gentlemen can not deny it that the whole question turns upon that. But I ask you, as fair men, Democrats and Republicans, whether there is not enough intimidation there to scare the gizzards right out of the Northern voters, out of the Scotch voters of my own county? Not one of you under such circumstances would advise your constituents to go to the polls and attempt to vote by force. And I say it is cowardly in the American Congress to require from these timid wards of the nation more than they do of intelligent freemen who were born free.

Mr. CALKINS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER]. [After a pause.] As the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not seem to be present I yield ten minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 110) to refund to the State of Georgia certain money expended by said State for the common defense in 1777.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. I shall occupy the attention of the House for but a very few moments. I understand too well its temper and impatience at this time to attempt to do otherwise.

I want to call the attention of the House to the turning-point in this case. In some cases there are two or three decisive points. Sometimes there is but one point decisive of the case. In this case the whole issue is controlled by the election at Darlington precinct in Darlington County.

I wish to premise by observing that no case considered by the Committee on Elections received a more thorough and patient investigation than this. Before the adjournment of Congress at its last session the committee had considered the case, two members being in favor of and two against the contestant. The chairman of the sub-committee, who is also the chairman of the Committee on Elections, having doubts, desired the postponement of the case so that he could give it a thorough investigation and decide upon a thorough analysis of all the facts in the case as to the real merits in it. As the result of the investigation here is the report of the chairman, Mr. CALKINS, stating in substance what I have just said to the House, that the whole case rests upon and is determined by the Darlington precinct.

I wish to call your attention to that precinct for a moment. The contestee, Mr. Richardson, received there a majority of some 1,200 or 1,500 votes. The vote of that precinct was attacked upon the ground that the election was not fair; that the wards of the nation as stated by my friend from New York [Mr. JACOBS] were intimidated and did not vote.

I want to call your attention to the real facts in the case. What were they? These wards of the nation, as the gentleman terms them, before day, on the day of the election, assembled at the market-house, where the election was usually held, and possessed themselves of the expected polling-place. But when day came and the officers appeared, they opened the election in the court-house. About 8 or 9 o'clock the organized wards of the nation as they are termed by the gentleman from New York, seeing that the election was being conducted in the court-house and that the Democrats were voting and had the start, came out, stood around awhile, and their captain or general, their commander-in-chief, one Mr. Smith, a colored man, gave the order, "Go home; you can not vote here to-day;" and they did not try to vote.

They were entitled to vote; no question about that. Necessarily, as a logical sequence of the late war, they were armed with the right to vote, because no man can be a free man who can not exercise the right of suffrage. It is an incident to their freedom. They had the right to vote, and the Government was bound in good faith to the colored people of the South to guarantee them in the exercise of that right.

But it never did undertake, it can not in accordance with the principle and genius of our institutions undertake, to give special consideration to the colored people over the white, to give them precedence in all such cases, to require a man because he happens to be a white man to stand back and wait until the colored man votes, or because the voter happens to be a colored man to require all the white men in that particular district to go on their knees to him and beg him to stay for God's sake and vote, so that there may be no pretense of charging bulldozing, illegality, and violence, and thus deprive the whites of the results of the election.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Is this statement in Mr. CALKINS's report correct?

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Yes, it is correct.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I mean this: "Attempts were made by the colored voters early in that day to force their way to the box to vote"——

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Oh, yes; Mr. CALKINS states that.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Wait a moment. "Which seems to have been prevented by the white voters crowding the stairs leading to the box."

Mr. JONES, of Texas. If the gentleman wants to take the floor away from me——

Many MEMBERS. Order! Order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will not be interrupted.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Resuming, I say that the colored people did not on that occasion try in good faith to vote; but the evidence demonstrates beyond a reasonable doubt that this was seized upon as a pretense to lay the foundation for a contest. That is all there is in the entire case.

Mr. CALKINS. What about the guns?

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Yes, now about the guns. It was said that on that occasion guns were brought in the night and concealed, put in wagons and boxed up. And yet some of the witnesses undertake to swear that they were guns. Now, if they were boxed up and concealed, how could they tell what they were?

Mr. MACKEY. Not boxed up; rolled up in blankets.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. A doctor who visited the House that night or the next day testified that he was there and saw no guns in the house. And nobody pretends that a single gun was exhibited on that occasion.

There was no display of force, but about half after 9 or 10 o'clock Jack Smith, commanding the organized Republican vote on that occasion, in a loud voice proclaimed, "Go home; you can't vote here."

I can not recite all the evidence; I can not do this case half justice. But the evidence shows that the colored voters were assured if they would remain and vote they should have a fair chance, and the testimony also shows that about one hundred Republicans did vote on that occasion.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. One hundred and odd voted.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Yes; one hundred and eighteen voted.

Mr. CALKINS. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON].

Mr. SMALLS. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee of Elections, and to ask the House, if they will not allow Mr. Lee, the contestant, a half an hour to be heard in this case. The House granted last evening a half an hour to Mr. Frost.

Mr. CALKINS. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SMALLS] that at the close of the thirty minutes it would be a proper time to ask that unanimous consent. For my part I have no objection to it.

Mr. SMALLS. I would like to get that consent now, so that we may know just where we are.

ADMISSION TO THE GALLERIES.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I ask unanimous consent that the reporters' gallery may be thrown open to the occupation of the wives and friends of Congressmen, who are now unable to obtain seats in the other galleries.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCKENZIE] asks consent that the rules be so suspended as to permit the reporter's gallery to be occupied by the wives and friends of members of Congress.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ATHERTON. I can not, Mr. Speaker, in the brief time which I have accorded to me for this argument, do more than make a short statement to attempt to meet whatever has been produced by way of argument on the other side as fully as I may.

In this case, as has been stated, this Congressional district consists of eight counties. There were one hundred and one election districts in those eight counties.

The contestee in this case asked the sub-committee, and also asked the Committee on Elections, and as I understand it he now asks the House, not to take advantage of such technical objection as may exist in respect to any of these voting precincts, but to count all votes honestly cast. And by his concession, out of one hundred and one voting precincts there are only thirty-one in respect to which there is now any question between the contestant and contestee.

As to these thirty-one precincts, objection is made that fraud was committed in some of them, and that there was intimidation in others. As it has been said that in the opinion of gentlemen who have investigated this question the election turns upon the result in Darlington precinct, it is well enough perhaps to look into that and see how the matter stands. The condition of things in that precinct has been substantially stated by the learned gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. At that precinct an organized effort had been made by the colored voters to get possession of the polls. They met the night before the election and a plan of operations was unfolded to them by their leader They were to meet at sunrise, or, as is stated in the testimony, at the "crack of day," and armed with clubs they proposed to take possession of the polls where they expected the election to be held. They did come together and surrounded the polls. They were armed with clubs. They proposed to take possession and carry things in their own way. For that reason or some other the election was directed to be held at the court-house. After the negroes had assembled about the ordinary voting-place, the market-house, it was discovered that the election was being held at the court-house.

Now the question is, was there any intimidation there which prevented the colored men from voting? There is an attempt made on the part of a witness, who sadly needs corroboration, to indicate that the night before the election two wagons filled with arms were brought near the court-house, and arms concealed were taken into a store, and a portion of them, as one witness says, taken into the court-house.

Now, the answer to that, and perhaps the only answer that is required, is that it is totally disproved by the testimony adduced in this case. In reply to the meager testimony as to arms being brought there we have the testimony of several persons who had the best means of information. We have the testimony of a physician who early in the morning was called to the very store in which it is said these arms were stored. He had the best opportunity for knowing, being in all the rooms of the store on that morning, whether any such arms were stored there. He says there were none within his knowledge, and he had full knowledge upon the subject. A manager of the election was called and stated that no such arms to his knowledge were about the court-house or about the polls. The sheriff of the county was called as a witness, and stated that hearing some rumor that arms were carried about there he had the most diligent investigation made, and he declares that no arms were stored about the court-house; that this story about the storage of arms was a mere fabrication. So with a large number of witnesses who gave their testimony in the case.

All the colored people who testify to this matter testify in a peculiar way. For instance, they say that two wagons came there the night before the election; that the arms were all wrapped up, and they did not pretend that they saw them. At one time they say there were two men with each wagon, making four altogether; at another time they say there were eighteen or twenty men—colored Democrats, who were characterized in a peculiar way as though it were a crime for a colored man to be a Democrat in that part of the country. But I say the testimony is given in such a way as not to carry with it any weight, and it is contradicted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CALKINS. I yield to the gentleman five minutes longer.

Mr. ATHERTON. Now, upon the question of intimidation, even if there were arms there, unless somebody saw them, unless somebody was intimidated by their presence, it would have no effect upon the election. The only witness who says he saw any arms there at all says he saw them through a window in a store. There was no pretense that they were ever unwrapped; there was no pretense that the large number of colored men who came there ever saw them at all. The election was quietly conducted, with the exception of a little fracas between a white man and a colored man, which was quelled almost in an instant. The colored voters came there and attempted to take possession of the polls; they did not succeed. They found the election was being held elsewhere. At the beginning of the election so many white men crowded around the polls that the colored men had not instantly the opportunity to vote. They were commanded by the chairman of the county committee early in the day that under these circumstances they were to leave and not vote at all. They left by reason of his command, not by reason of any intimidation.

Mr. MOULTON. Is it not true that they were invited to vote by the white people?

Mr. ATHERTON. Yes, sir; the white men invited and urged them to vote, but they refused, simply because they could not have complete possession of the polls to carry the election as they chose.

Now, the rule upon this subject is well understood. In order to make intimidation a matter interfering with the integrity of the vote, it must be such as would induce a person of ordinary courage to forego the right of voting rather than incur the danger.

I say on a full investigation in this case there is not a single word of testimony from any witness entitled to any credence at all that he was prevented from voting. An attempt by one or two witnesses was made to show something of that kind, but the whole tenor of the testimony of witnesses who could not be questioned was that that was a peaceable election; that they came there in the manner I have indicated; that they went away, not by any intimidation, but at the command of their leader, who did not choose to have them vote if they could not take possession of the poll and hold it with their clubs.

We have given this case a most thorough and most careful investigation, which has induced not simply the members of the Democratic persuasion to agree to a majority report, but which has induced the most careful members of the committee against their prejudices, if they have any, to unite with us in saying the sitting member is entitled to his seat and that Mr. Lee is not.

Mr. CALKINS. I believe I have seven minutes of my time remaining, and I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado and reserve two minutes to myself.

Mr. SMALLS. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Elections whether the half hour asked for Mr. Lee has been conceded to him?

Mr. CALKINS. We can arrange that in a few moments.

Mr. SMALLS. Let us arrange it now.

Mr. ATHERTON. Perhaps the contestee will want some time, too.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, on one occasion I was the victim of the political injustice of this House in an election case. I had carried my State by 1,700 majority, and the Democratic party, having a majority in this House, wantonly and shamefully turned me out of my seat. That I assert to be an historical fact. [Laughter and applause.] And therefore when I approach any contested-election case I desire above all things to approach it and consider it as an honest man.

The difficulty with our politics to-day, Mr. Speaker, is that it is rotten from top to bottom [laughter and applause], rotten in the primaries, rotten in the county conventions, rotten in the State conventions, and I do not say it in any offensive sense, but I say it is rotten in the method by which we decide these election cases.

What I arose for, Mr. Speaker, was to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that whether a man is elected or not, and his seat is contested, two sessions of Congress go by before that question is submitted to the adjudication of this tribunal. We live in a country operated by the suffrage and dominated by the majority of the people. We form constituent elements of a House with political majorities which decide political questions without regard to personal rights whatever. And you all know it. What is this case? Here is a case where it is alleged that violence, intimidation, and fraud have been practiced at an election. The evidence to my judgment is conclusive. What I insist on is—and I call upon Democrats and Republicans—and I will vote with you Democrats next session of Congress to unseat any Republican who has been elected by fraudulent means, because I believe the supreme hour has come when you, Democrats, and we, Republicans, must rally to the support and perpetuity of the principles upon which this Republic rests and depends. [Laughter and applause.] Oh, gentlemen, you may laugh, but I tell you, as God reigns, unless the good men of both parties unite their shields, unless the good men of both parties in this House and out of it stand up for honest government, our Republic will not outlive the lifetime of our children.

I am speaking from the deep convictions of my soul on this question, and I am speaking because in my judgment it is a disgrace to this Congress that these election cases are postponed until the last hour of the session; that men who are entitled to a seat on this floor have no hearing until the last hour of the last day of the session; that men who are legitimately entitled to a seat have their honor discredited in the last hour of the last day of the session of Congress. In the name of God, if we can do it, to-night let us avow that in future we will try to act honestly and justly in matters that affect the great and vital and permanent interests of this Republic, of which we are all citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, this is the twenty-second election case which has been brought into the House for its decision by the Committee on Elections of this Congress, and in a few moments that committee will have completed all of the labors imposed upon it, and reported upon all of the cases that were committed to its charge.

I have neither the time nor the disposition to discuss the case before the House. It is known to all of its members that after a careful consideration of the case I came to the conclusion that the sitting member ought to retain his seat. I believe so now; and unless the House wants to grant further time to the contestant and the contestee to argue the case, I shall call the previous question.

Mr. SMALLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr Lee, the contestant in this case, be heard. I listened to a noble statement uttered last evening by the gentleman from Texas; and, sir, in the language of that gentleman, I ask now, as a matter of right and justice, that Mr. Lee, the contestant in this case, may be heard in his own behalf.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, how much time?

Mr. SMALLS. He wants thirty minutes, the same time that was granted by the House to the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Frost, last evening.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That was a case where the gentleman to whom you refer was a sitting member. I am willing to agree that fifteen minutes' time may be allowed, but I shall object to any more.

Mr. MOULTON. I think he ought to have the time.

Mr. CALKINS. If I can have the attention of the House, I think this matter can be arranged in a few moments. Let me ask if fifteen minutes for Mr. Lee and fifteen minutes for Mr. Richardson, the contestee, will be sufficient? If so, I believe the House will agree to it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Richardson ought certainly to have an oportunity of being heard in his own case.

Mr. WHITE. He should have the time; but the contestant should be heard, I claim.

Mr. SMALLS. I would have been satisfied in this case if the House, instead of allowing a general discussion, as has been allowed, had granted the entire time to Mr. Richardson and to Mr. Lee. But I do not think that it would be right or just now to deprive Mr. Lee of the opportunity of being heard in his own behalf.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope there will be no objection to allowing fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. SMALLS. I ask thirty minutes for Mr. Lee.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope fifteen minutes will be granted to each.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that fifteen minutes be allowed to the contestant and fifteen to the contestee. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE. I object unless the contestant is allowed half an hour at least. He ought to have it.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. I withdraw the objection.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 82.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. SMALLS. I demand the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.

Mr. PETTIBONE and Mr. WHITE. Let us have tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question——

Mr. CALKINS. May I have the attention of the Chair and of the gentleman from South Carolina for a moment? The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] made objection evidently under a mistake, and withdrew it while the Chair was putting the question to the House on ordering the previous question. I again ask, therefore, unanimous consent that fifteen minutes be allowed on each side; that is, to the contestant and the contestee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOULTON. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered, and the gentlemen are allowed fifteen minutes on each side. The contestant, Mr. Lee, is recognized.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, it was not my purpose to ask this House to allow me to say a single word during the discussion of this case. I had hoped that the House would find it convenient to give sufficient time for the gentlemen who desired to present my case, and who had agreed to present it, to have been heard instead of myself, and if the House will allow me now I would like to be permitted to yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RANNEY.]

Mr. MOULTON. I object.

Mr. LEE. Then I ask if I would be permitted, before I close my own argument, in my fifteen minutes, to yield at least five minutes of my time to my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. MACKEY], who is desirous of speaking upon this question, and who has prepared himself for it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit that question after the gentleman has occupied such part of the time as he desires.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker, from the report made by the chairman of the Committee on Elections I see that Darlington precinct, in the county of Darlington, is the principal precinct upon which a majority of one of the Committee on Elections reported in favor of allowing me the privilege of withdrawing my papers without prejudice. I find in the minority report, signed by seven gentlemen, namely, Mr. PETTIBONE, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. THOMPSON of Iowa, Mr. RITCHIE, Mr. WAIT, Mr. HAZELTON, and Mr. RANNEY, resolutions declaring that the sitting member is not entitled to his seat, and that the contestant was honestly and fairly elected; and in that report, differing as it does from the one sheet which comes from the committee representing the majority of the eight members, I find the testimony presented to the House which I am sure has not been examined into by the members of this House. If this report should be read we would find a complete answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON], who signed the majority report, when he says there is no evidence that guns were stored in the court-house and in the buildings surrounding the court-house, where the polls were held at that precinct. I find in the testimony presented by the committee the very names of the parties who actually unloaded those two wagons which were loaded with Winchester rifles, those rifles that are familiar to the Republicans of South Carolina, for they have met them at midnight as well as at noonday. They have met them in the roads; they have had to face them in their cabins when the honest voters were quietly reposing in their beds. Here are the names of the parties who actually unloaded the wagons. And we proved by witnesses that these men are living men in the town of Darlington. Did the contestee call these men to deny the fact that these men had unloaded these guns? Not a single witness, not a single man was called to deny the statement that they unloaded these wagons. Witnesses were produced by the contestee, but they said they did not see any guns. They did not deny that these men unloaded these wagons, but they gave merely negative testimony that they did not see it. I grant that that might be so.

Here are the names: Moses Bishop, Sam Hindes, Rosser Hart, Charles Bishop, &c., all living in the county and town of Darlington. The gentleman in whose store some of these guns were stored lived in the county, and while the testimony was being taken I was present and saw that gentleman in the town day after day; but that gentleman was not put upon the stand to deny that guns were stored in his store. A doctor who happened to have gone into that building that day swore that he did not see any guns, but at the same time he admitted that they may have been there. We prove that the store at that Darlington poll was stored with guns and that men were in there with guns, and that on the occasion when this little fracas which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] spoke of occurred between a colored man and a white man these men were seen, that they came to the lights and showed themselves with their guns in their hands, ready—to do what? Ready to shoot down the colored men at that poll as they have shot them down on other occasions.

What, Mr. Speaker, is the character of this Darlington poll? Is it a Democratic poll or a Republican poll? The testimony shows that Darlington County has always been carried by the Republican party by seven or eight hundred majority; and in this election it is carried by the Democrats, giving to the contestee eleven hundred and odd majority; and when we go to investigate the means by which this result is brought about, what do we meet? We meet this: Every single election officer denies that he knows anything about the result at that poll. The clerk says he does not remember what the vote was. Every manager that was put upon the stand by the contestee swears that he does not remember what the result was. When we summon the clerk of the court to appear before the notary public taking the testimony and produce the records that were in his possession, he denies that the records were in his office. When he is asked whether he had not made a certificate to the fact as to the result of that election, he denies that he made any such certificate. He knows nothing about what the result at that poll was; and that is all the evidence that there is in this volume of over eight hundred pages to show what the result at Darlington poll was. But we proved that before every election previous to 1878 the Republicans always carried the Darlington polls by about seven hundred majority.

I understand the chairman of the Committee on Elections to say that he agrees with the minority report signed by these gentlemen except in this one particular—Darlington poll. And he says that the evidence is not sufficient to show that there was sufficient violence at that poll to prevent the colored men from voting. I would like my friend from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, to make a visit down to the Southern States at some of our elections and attempt in the guise of a colored man to go to one of these polls; he will find out whether the violence is sufficient or not to keep colored men away from the polls. Where was the ballot-box? The ballot-box was moved from this market-house where the colored men were charged with going in force to take possession of it. Why, gentlemen, it was the custom there, as the evidence shows, that the colored men and the white men would go to the polls to try who would get there first to vote—that was during the Republican times—and whoever would get to the polls first quietly voted and left and the others then went and voted. But since the Democrats have been in power they put in every single officer at these polls from their own party; and then the white men changed the polls upon the colored men, and when the colored men are expecting the polls to be held at one place they find out at 6 o'clock—the news will come that they are being held at another place; and the white men will be inside in force, and will then burst out and take possession of the polls.

What did they do at Darlington? They crowded the steps—there were two steps going up to this poll—they crowded the steps from bottom to top, as this testimony will show. They were dressed in red shirts, armed with pistols, armed with knives, armed with guns, to prevent these colored men from going up the steps to vote. There is testimony here showing that some of the colored men pressed half way up the steps and were hurled down and dragged down; others attempted to crawl up on the outside of the steps and their holds were broken loose and they fell to the ground.

There was a riot below the steps, to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] alludes as "a little fracas," in which pistols were drawn upon the colored men. Those who were charged with being the instigators of that riot, the colored men, not the white men, were carried to the guard-house and there imprisoned. Other colored men standing by, seeing the stores closed and guns in them, were told by their leader, Jack Smith, after having tried several times to get up to the polls and vote, to go home in order to save bloodshed.

The chairman of the Committee on Elections says that the colored men could have gone to another poll near by. Where is that "other poll near by?" The nearest poll to Darlington is Florence.

Mr. RANNEY. How far away?

Mr. LEE. It was ten miles away. There came on the stand over two hundred witnesses who swore that two hundred colored men stood at the polls at Florence from 6 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock at night, and were forcibly and violently kept away from the polls. The United States supervisor testified that it was impossible for these men to vote at that poll.

We took the testimony of two hundred and forty witnesses at the Darlington poll, who testified that it was impossible for the colored men to get up those steps and vote without being killed themselves or killing those who were upon the steps. And who were on the steps? They were white Democrats dressed in red shirts, the meaning of which we in the South know very well. That uniform means in the South violence; it means to the colored men "stand back." Let me read the testimony of only one man.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Tell what it is; do not read it.

Mr. LEE. On page 312 of this record will be found the testimony of Mr. Horace Leonard, who said that he got half way up the steps and was dragged down to the bottom of the steps, and fearing that he would be killed he went home and remained there. Over eight hundred men, as was proven by testimony not only of the men themselves, but by the testimony of a physician living there, a Northern gentleman, who is practicing now in that town, who is the physician of a large number of Democratic families in that town—he testified that there were from 800 to 1,000 men who left that poll that day without voting, and that in his judgment they could not vote without having violence committed upon them.

If that poll is counted, then Mr. Richardson, the contestee, is elected. If that poll is rejected, as the minority of the Committee on Elections report it should be, that elects me. [Applause on the Republican side.] I say that the meaning of the vote here to-night will be known to us in the South; and if you put your approval upon such acts as I have described as taking place in Darlington County, do not be surprised when you hear the returns come up to the North stating that the Democrats have carried the elections in the South. I have told you what the colored men have to go through, not only at one poll, but throughout the entire South, and especially in this district which I have the honor to represent here. [Great laughter.]

At this poll the Democrats never have cast over 300 votes in a fair election; never have cast over 300 votes for Mr. Richardson or for any other candidate, while, as the record will show, the Republicans usually cast from 1,300 to 1,400 votes. What is the situation of that district as regards voters? We have in the sixth district of South Carolina, the first district that was represented on this floor by Hon. Joseph H. Rainey, 6,000 Republican majority. That majority has been overcome by tissue ballots, such as I have here.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAZELTON. I ask that the gentleman have ten minutes longer.

Mr. RANNEY. I ask that he have five minutes longer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to extending the time for five minutes?

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. MILLER. I hope there will be order so that we can hear the other side of this case. This side of the House ought to listen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the resolution of the Senate for printing the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. GORMAN, and Mr. BLAIR.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the sundry civil appropriation bill, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK.

ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Elections.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the time for which I was elected to this Congress is about expiring. It is true it would matter but little to me personally whether I continue to hold this seat for a few hours longer or whether you take it from me. It is true it would matter but little to the constituency I represent if you deprive them of their Representative upon this floor for the few remaining hours of this Congress.

Perhaps it might be thought that I could well afford to remain quiet and let this case be decided as you may see proper to decide it. But behind all these considerations there is this question: Is it right to do so? And then there is another question: Is it right to take from this Government $10,000 or $12,000 and pay it to one who is not at all entitled to it?

I therefore come before you almost an utterly impartial advocate in this case. I have no interest except to see that the right is done and that my constituency are not placed in any false light.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this election was had; the election officers ascertained who was elected, and they gave to the contestee the certificate. The contestant filed his complaint, claiming that a number of things had been done which ought not to have been done, by which he had been deprived of a number of votes. What did the contestee do? When the contestant claimed that certain votes and polls which had not been counted should be counted, the contestee's answer was "Count the whole poll in the district; count the last voter who voted, and let the result decide this election." Then the contestant comes up and presents his case. He goes through every box after every poll in the Congressional district had been restored to the count, restored by the consent of the contestee. He goes into the count, and says "These boxes have not been purged as they ought to be," though they were purged according to the law of South Carolina. In purging them, when the contestant comes to add up the result, lo and behold! by his own purging, by his own count, the contestee still has a majority. He who in the outset came to the Elections Committee and said, "Oh, it is wrong to throw out the vote of any freeman, or to throw out any poll," turns from his position and claims that now in order to give him the seat you must throw out the vote of Darlington precinct; you must not count it.

I will stop but a moment to call the attention of the House to the methods resorted to by the contestant and by the honorable gentleman who presented the report in his behalf to reach the result that they did. Take, for example, the poll at Timmonsville; and this is but one of many. There the vote was some 800 or 900. The election officers in returning the vote returned that there was in that box an excess of only 11 votes. Both the United States supervisors of election signed a report saying that there only 11 votes in excess in all that box. When that box was purged under the law of South Carolina, which requires that some one blindfolded shall draw from the box the number of votes in excess, only 4 Republican votes were drawn and 7 Democratic votes. The Republican and Democratic United States supervisors certified to this. But there was standing by that box a friend of the contestant, a bystander, who swore on his examination that he was certain there went into that box for the contestant 199 votes, when the count gave him only 75 votes.

I only bring up that case for the purpose of showing that from the count of that box the contestant and the honorable gentleman who makes the minority report deduct 124 votes of the contestee and give that number to the contestant, making a difference of 248 votes. That is the way the result is reached in this case—reducing the vote of the contestee enough to give the seat to the contestant if you throw out the vote of Darlington precinct. I will not waste time in showing the other methods resorted to in order to bring down the vote of the contestant to a point from which, if you deduct the vote of Darlington Court House, the seat will be given to the contestant. I address myself at once to the single question involved in this case. After purging the poll, as has been done, after resorting to such means as I have mentioned to bring down the vote of the contestee, the question then turns, as I am willing to concede, upon the vote at Darlington Court House. What was the vote there? As has been said, it gave the contestee some 1,100 majority. The contestant asked to have it thrown out, not on account of fraud, for no fraud was charged against it.

One word as to the charge in regard to tissue ballots. They were used only in Georgetown County, and the authorities of South Carolina threw out every box in that county but one, because there were tissue ballots.

Now, as to the Darlington poll, what is the proof? The proof is that there was not a single gun fired or exhibited. There was no violence threatened. The colored people who met there in the morning, having been accustomed at election after election to have possession of the polls, were incensed because on this occasion the election was held where the law of South Carolina required in so many words that it should be held—in the court-house, instead of at the market-place, where it had been held before. Under these circumstances the order was given to the negroes by their leader that they should go away, and they did go away; they did not vote, or at least only 117 of them voted. There is no proof that they did not vote elsewhere, or at least that most of them did not vote elsewhere. The contestant presents the names of 240 persons who he claimed did not vote there.

Mr. RANNEY. Will the gentleman state how far they would have to go to vote elsewhere?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. They left in the morning; most of them by 8 o'clock, all of them between that and 2 o'clock. They had only eight or ten miles to go in order to vote elsewhere.

But we examined two hundred and forty names, and out of that number only one hundred and eighty and odd say they did not vote elsewhere. Seventy-five of those men do not say that they voted elsewhere. They say they intended to vote at Darlington court-house. The proof is that if they had remained there they could have voted; that the poll was cleared; and that from 2 o'clock to 6 o'clock in the day the proof is after the white people had voted, who did have possession of the polls and did crowd the place in the morning, that then they could all have voted. There is not a word of proof showing that any one had a pistol or knife. There is nothing of the sort in the testimony. I read it all through, and there is nothing of the sort in the case. The white people had possession of the poll to vote, and when they got through voting the poll was opened for the colored people.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Where do you find the law which provides that the white people shall vote first to the exclusion of the colored people?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. The law is that whoever gets to the poll first votes first. The question has been asked why heretofore only a few white people voted there. It was because the colored people held the poll at former elections, and the white people could not vote there and had to go elsewhere. This time they got there first and voted there and did not have to go elsewhere. This is proved by Mr. Lee's own testimony. Most of his own witnesses, colored voters, left about 8 o'clock. Some remained until 10 and some until 12.

Now, is this sufficient to vitiate a poll? If there were arms there, none were exhibited. Suppose it were true. I do not know any were carried, but suppose they were as a precautionary measure, still none were exhibited at the polls, and there was no purpose of intimidation. If you throw out this poll on that ground, you might throw out any poll in the whole Congressional district.

Having said this much, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to leave the case to the House.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to yield to me to make a conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. CALKINS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the Clerk to read the report which I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

FRANK HISCOCK,
BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH,
J. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. It appears by the report which has been submitted that every amendment of the Senate to the appropriation bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, is open. Such, however, is not the case, except so far as formal action is concerned in making a report to the House. I have no doubt we can agree.

But there are some four or five provisions in the sundry civil appropriation bill placed there by the House to which the Senate disagree, or rather which the Senate insist shall be stricken from the bill.

One of these is legislation on the bill in reference to the application of pensions of inmates of soldiers' homes to their support. I believe, sir, that is the only provision which the Senate insist should go out of the bill which was not put there by an amendment offered by a committee of the House. Two other propositions in the bill the Senate insist should go out, the one which provides for the sale of a portion of the Brooklyn navy-yard, and another which provides for the sale of the Chelsea Hospital property. These provisions it is insisted shall not be enacted into law. There is an additional provision which was placed in the bill proposed by the Military Committee, to turn over all of the military reservations to the Interior Department for sale. This provision in the House bill is also objected to on the part of the Senate.

There is a still more important provision in the bill, the one which repeals the pre-emption laws and to some extent amends the homestead laws. These provisions of the House bill are also objected to by the Senate. By Senate amendments they were stricken from the bill; and, so far as those provisions are concerned, I may be pardoned in saying that the Senate refuses to consider the propriety of the House provisions with reference to them. They refuse to consider whether they are right or wrong. They refuse to consider them even by amendments. They refuse to submit amendments with reference to them, denying the right of the House to place any legislation in any appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Do they refuse to consider them on their merits?

Mr. HISCOCK. And their non-concurrence, Mr. Speaker, is just upon that account, and upon none other. I omitted to mention still another provision of the House bill that was stricken out by a Senate amendment, and that was the ratification of the Sioux treaty by the House.

The gentleman from Massachusetts inquired of me whether they refuse to consider these provisions upon their merits. They do. We have offered to receive from them amendments perfecting them. They decline to offer amendments perfecting these provisions, and they say that they shall go out of the bill. They say it earnestly, Mr. Speaker, and I do not know, sir, but what they will refuse concurrence with this House in these provisions, even if allowed to amend them at their will, to the extent of defeating the bill.

I am not prepared to advise the House that such will be their course, but I am prepared to advise the House that they are determined in their opposition to the provisions; not because the legislation is bad, not because it is vicious, but simply because they are placed in a general appropriation bill.

I, sir, must add in this connection that some legislation placed upon this bill by the House, equally pronounced, they have amended by submitting alterations or amendments on their part, and I refer now to that provision placed in the bill by the House with reference to the Yellowstone Park reservation. They have made no point of order against that legislation; but they have considered it open to amendment, and have united with us in perfecting that provision of the bill. They have also placed in the bill another provision in reference to the Choctaw Indians, which I believe to be affirmative legislation equally as pronounced, equally as distinct as legislation as these provisions to which they object.

Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered by the House that all of these provisions, with the exception of the one that I have referred to—turning the pensions of soldiers in the homes into the homes for their support—were placed upon the bill as reported to this House by the Committee on Appropriations by amendments offered by committees having charge of these subjects distinctly.

Mr. ATKINS. Let me ask the gentleman if the appropriations for the military posts have been stricken out?

Mr. HISCOCK. They have been; but that item, I will say, has not been absolutely stricken from the bill. To some extent negotiations are now pending with reference to that. It was stricken from the bill originally by a Senate amendment; but they have not refused absolutely to perfect legislation of some kind or to take steps toward legislation with reference to the military posts.

The provisions that I have referred to, having been placed in the bill by amendments offered to the bill as reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations, by committees of this House having charge of the subject-matter, the conference committee on the part of the House have felt it to be their duty to report a disagreement upon all of the Senate amendments to the bill, which report we have presented here, and I now ask action upon it.

I move that the House concur in the report of the committee of conference; that it insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as the conferees on the part of the House the gentleman from New York, Mr. HISCOCK, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BLACKBURN.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate having expired in the contested-election case, and the previous question having been ordered, the Clerk will report the resolution on which a vote is to be taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. Before that, Mr. Speaker, as I have not been able in the few moments allowed to present this case to the House as it deserves, I ask permission to print with my remarks some additional facts.

There was no objection. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SMALLS. Permit me to ask, Mr. Speaker, that we be allowed the same privilege with reference to the pending case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. [See Appendix.]

The question is on agreeing to the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Samuel Lee have leave to withdraw his papers, and this case is dismissed without prejudice.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to substitute the resolutions of the minority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. That motion can not now be entertained, as the previous question is operating.

Mr. MACKEY. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACKEY. The previous question was voted down.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was voted up. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALKINS. There is evidently an error here, which we can probably remedy in a moment.

The SPEAKER. In what respect does the gentleman claim there was an error?

Mr. CALKINS. There are two sets of resolutions reported from the committee, but the vote has been ordered on the majority resolution. Should not the vote be properly taken first upon the resolution submitted by the minority? That is the custom.

The SPEAKER. That would be the case when they were offered as a substitute, but they have not been presented.

Mr. CALKINS. I understand that they were offered.

The SPEAKER. At what time?

Mr. CALKINS. The minority resolutions were presented at the time the case was called up, but I believe were not read.

The SPEAKER. They were presented and printed with the report of the committee, as is the custom; but they have not been presented to the House to be voted upon under the demand for the previous question.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. CALKINS. There is no disposition on either side to get into a jangle about this, and I think we can straighten it in a moment.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair is allowed to put the motion to reconsider there will be no difficulty.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not think that is necessary; delay may be caused by calling for tellers, &c. The usual course is to let the vote come first on the minority resolutions.

The SPEAKER. That is so; because it is usual to offer them before calling the previous question.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions of the minority may be offered now.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolutions which are proposed as a substitute for the report of the majority.

The Clerk read as follows:

I. Resolved, That John S. Richardson was not elected as a Representative to the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States from the first Congressional district of South Carolina, and is not entitled to occupy a seat in this House as such.

II. Resolved, That Samuel Lee was duly elected as a Representative from the first Congressional district of South Carolina to the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States, and is entitled to his seat as such.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government;

A bill (H. R. 5653) for the relief of Kirk W. Noyes;

A bill (H. R. 5661) to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7226) to punish larceny from the person in the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution and bills of the House of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 277) providing for a new mixed commission, in accordance with the treaty of April 25, 1866, with the United States of Venezuela.

A bill (H. R. 5300) to amend chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large relating to contracts under the War Department; and

A bill (H. R. 7240) for the relief of William H. Donohoe.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions offered as a substitute for the resolution reported by the majority of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY and Mr. HORR called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Are we to vote on both resolutions at once, or can they be divided?

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on both. They might have been divided; but the division was not called for in time. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 114, not voting 53; as follows:

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, with Mr. HOOKER.

Mr. MOORE with Mr. SIMONTON.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. BLACK.

Mr. NORCROSS with Mr. WILLIAMS of Alabama.

Mr. JACOBS with Mr. HEWITT of New York, on this vote.

Mr. KASSON with Mr. CABELL, on this vote.

Mr. NORCROSS. I withdraw my vote, being paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama.

Mr. VAN HORN. I ask that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Several members objected.

The names of members voting were read.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. PETTIBONE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions as amended by the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, and Mr. ATHERTON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 6, not voting 157; as follows:

Mr. CANNON with Mr. ATKINS.

Mr. NEAL with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. MOORE with Mr. SIMONTON.

Mr. NORCROSS with Mr. WILLIAMS of Alabama.

Mr. HALL with Mr. HERBERT.

Mr. MOORE. I desire to say that I was paired with Mr. SIMONTON, but with the right to vote to make a quorum, and I have voted.

Mr. SPAULDING. I am paired with Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, but I have voted to make a quorum.

Mr. KASSON. I am paired, but I have voted to make a quorum.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. ATHERTON and Mr. BRAGG made the point that no quorum voted.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move a call of the House.

Mr. ATHERTON. You can have it.

The motion for a call of the House was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Black,	Davis, Lowndes H.	Mosgrove,	Russell,

Mr. TUCKER. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. CABELL, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. MCKENZIE. My colleague, Mr. PHISTER, is detained from the House to-night on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of the roll shows 255 members answering to their names; more than a quorum.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ATHERTON. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 6.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not require a quorum to decide that motion. The ayes have it, and further proceedings under the call are dispensed with.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (S. R. 143) authorizing the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer relative to the maps, &c., for the census reports;

A bill (S. 2433) to amend sections 6 and 7 of the act providing for the publication of the Revised Statutes and the laws of the United States, approved June 20, 1876;

Joint resolution (S. R. 64) authorizing the sale of the Congressional Directory and the current numbers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD;

Joint resolution (S. R. 95) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department;

Joint resolution (S. R. 139) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 5300) to amend chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, relating to contracts under the War Department; and

A bill (H. R. 7240) for the relief of William H. Donohoe.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair takes occasion to lay before the House the request of the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. HOBLITZELL, to be excused from attendance for the remainder of to-night's session on account of sickness. If there be no objection leave of absence will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. ARMFIELD. I ask that my colleague, Mr. VANCE, be excused from further attendance this evening on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from New York, Mr. ROBINSON, makes the same request, which, if there be no objection, will be granted.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 832) for the relief of Marzel Altman;

A bill (H. R. 3243) for the relief of Ernest F. Unland;

A bill (H. R. 6236) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 6683) to authorize the construction of bridges over the Ogeechee, Oconee, Ocmulgee, Flint, and Chattahoochee Rivers, in the State of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. 7289) to confer upon the senior associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in the absence or inability of the chief-justice of said court, the powers and duties now conferred upon said chief-justice, relative to the extradition of fugitives from justice;

A bill (H. R. 6930) to levy an assessment of the real estate in the District of Columbia in the year 1883, and every third year thereafter, for purposes of taxation; and

A bill (H. R. 3220) to ratify the issuance of duplicate checks in certain cases by the superintendent of the mint of the United States at San Francisco.

Mr. NORCROSS. Mr. Speaker, has a quorum voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. NORCROSS. Then I would like to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is too late, unless he answered upon the roll-call.

Mr. NORCROSS. I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WILLIAMS], reserving the right to vote when necessary to make a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That statement will go into the RECORD, but the gentleman can not vote now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague from Illinois, Mr. SMITH, is ill this evening, and in order to enable him to leave the House, I have consented to vote. I cast my vote for that reason.

The roll-call being concluded,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this vote there are—yeas 114, nays 8.

Mr. ATHERTON. No quorum.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Belford,	Ford,	McKinley,	Russell,
Black,	Geddes,	McLane, Robt. M.	Shelley,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mosgrove,	Sherwin,
Bland,	Gunter,	Moulton,	Singleton, Jas. W.

Burrows, Jos. H.	Heilman,	Oates,	Smith, Dietrich C.
Butterworth,	Herndon,	Paul,	Taylor, Ezra B.
Cabell,	Hewitt, Abram S.	Phelps,	Thomas,
Camp,	Hoblitzell,	Phister,	Thompson, Wm. G.
Campbell,	Hooker,	Prescott,	Vance,
Clardy,	Jones, James K.	Reagan,	Van Aernam,
Cornell,	Jorgensen,	Rice, John B.	Wait,
Covington,	Kelley,	Rice, Wm. W.	Webber,
Cox, Samuel S.	Ketcham,	Richardson, J. S.	Wellborn,
Davis, Lowndes H.	Ladd,	Robertson,	Williams, Thomas
Deuster,	McClure,	Robeson,	Wise, Morgan R.
Dugro,	McCook,	Robinson, Wm. E.	Wood, Benjamin.
Ermentrout,	McKenzie,	Ross.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. OATES, is sick in bed, and has been for the last two days. My colleague, Mr. HERNDON, is extremely sick, and Mr. SHELLEY is by his bedside nursing him. My colleauge, Mr. WILLIAMS, is also sick.

Mr. BLISS. My colleague, Mr. ROBINSON, was compelled to leave the House on account of sickness.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. DUGRO, of New York, left the House, being sick, and desires to be excused from further attendance this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The roll-call discloses the presence of 219 members. More than a quorum.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the proposition reported from the Committee on Elections as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. RANDALL. Say two hours.

Mr. CANNON. I think we had better not take a recess, as it is entirely probable in the course of an hour that we can then take a recess with safety until morning.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. CANNON. Wait half an hour longer; perhaps we can then take a recess.

Mr. BRAGG. Why not move to take a recess, then, for a half hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his motion?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 98.

So the House refused to take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the House take a recess for one hour.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 6, not voting 163; as follows:

YEAS—122.

Mr. RAY with Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. RAY reserving the right to vote to make a quorum.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. COBB.

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. HENDERSON reserving the right to vote to make a quorum.

By unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ATHERTON. No quorum.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move that there be a call of the House.

The question was taken.

Mr. ATHERTON. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 40.

Mr. ATHERTON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is not required on this vote.

Mr. ATHERTON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ATHERTON and Mr. PETTIBONE were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 17.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. ATHERTON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 46, not voting 130; as follows:

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, with Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois.

Mr. HENDERSON. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. JOYCE. Being paired, I withdraw my vote if there is a quorum on this roll-call.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

The names of members voting were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts). On this vote the yeas are 115, the nays are 46. The motion is agreed to, and a call of the House is ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order that the roll-call discloses a quorum present. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order can not be sustained.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 301) for the relief of Stephen P. Yeomans and Andrew Leech.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 6018) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes relating to the recovery of damages for infringement of patents.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, for the printing of 5,500 additional copies of the proceedings of the court of inquiry to investigate the loss of the steamer Jeanette, in the Artic seas.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House has been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Black,	Ford,	Matson,	Ross,
Blackburn,	Geddes,	McClure,	Russell,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	McCoid,	Scales,
Bland,	Godshalk,	McCook,	Scranton,

Ellis,	Mackey,	Robinson, Jas. S.	Wise, George D.
Farwell, Chas. B.	Marsh,	Robinson, Wm. E.	Wood, Benjamin.
Flower,	Mason,	Rosecrans,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the call of the roll 180 members have responded to their names—more than a quorum.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 277) providing for a new mixed commission in accordance with the treaty of April 25, 1866, with the United States of Venezuela;

A bill (H. R. 832) for the relief of Marzel Altmann.

A bill (H. R. 3220) to ratify the issuance of duplicate checks in certain cases by the superintendent of the mint of the United States at San Francisco:

A bill (H. R. 3243) for the relief of Ernest F. Unland;
A bill (H. R. 6236) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia; and
A bill (H. R. 7289) to confer upon the senior associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in the absence or inability of the chief-justice of said court, the powers and duties now conferred upon said chief-justice, relative to the extradition of fugitives from justice.

ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the roll-call 180 members have responded to their names—more than a quorum.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to postpone the further consideration of the pending election case for four hours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that would not be in order after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. WHITE. I hope we will go on with this case.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KASSON. Was the motion made to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered? My impression is it was not.

Mr. PETTIBONE. My recollection is that the motion to reconsider was made and laid upon the table.

Mr. MURCH. Would it be in order to move to take a recess at the present time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would entertain that motion.

Mr. MURCH. I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock this day.

Mr. MURCH. I withdraw that motion for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of the roll.

Mr. KASSON. I again submit the inquiry whether the motion to reconsider was made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed it was not made.

Mr. KASSON. Then I make the motion to reconsider.

Mr. DEZENDORF. And I move to lay that motion on the table. I give notice that you shall not pass anything between now and 12 o'clock to-morrow unless we have a decision on this question. [Cries on Democratic side of "All right!" "Go ahead!"]

Mr. MURCH. I renew my motion for a recess.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No question of order can be entertained until the House is in order.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] can be recognized to make that motion if the record shows that he voted on the wrong side? I call for the record of the gentleman in order to ascertain on which side he voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there was no roll-call on the question, and therefore there is no presumption one way or the other.

Mr. MACKEY. I desire to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACKEY. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to clause 8 of Rule XVI.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose?

Mr. MACKEY. To show that this motion to reconsider can not be entertained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand how that is applicable. That clause relates to a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. MACKEY. By no means. I refer to the amended rule. This is the clause:

> Pending a motion to suspend the rules, or on any question of consideration which may arise on a case involving the constitutional right to a seat, and pending the motion for the previous question, or after it shall have been ordered on any such case, the Speaker may entertain one motion to adjourn; but after the result thereon is announced, he shall not entertain any other motion till the vote is taken on the pending question; and pending the consideration of such case only a motion to adjourn or to take a recess (but not both in succession) shall be in order, and such motions shall not be repeated without further intervening consideration of the case for at least one hour.

Now my point of order is that pending the consideration of this case the Chair can entertain only a motion to adjourn or a motion to take a recess.

Mr. MURCH. Then I make the motion that the House now take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. KASSON. It is always in order to move to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has made the motion that the vote by which the previous question was ordered upon the pending subject shall be reconsidered, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEZENDORF] has moved to lay that motion on the table. The Chair thinks that both of these motions are in order, notwithstanding the eighth clause of Rule XVI. The Chair understands that the point of order of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MACKEY] is answered so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to inquire of the Chair if the calling of the roll can be interrupted by the motion to reconsider? The Speaker had directed the Clerk to call the roll, and the Clerk had called the first name on the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inquire; if that is so, the Chair misapprehended it.

Mr. PETTIBONE. The first name was called.

Mr. MURCH. That point is too late; I insist upon my motion to take a recess.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The Clerk will know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks there is a misapprehension. He is informed that a name was called.

Mr. PETTIBONE. We all heard it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But no answer was made, and there is no record of the fact. The Chair must be guided by the statement of the Clerk.

Mr. MURCH. I insist on my motion for a recess.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to call attention of the House to Rule XVIII, and I ask that it may be read by the Clerk.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Read it yourself.

Mr. PAGE. I will read it; it is as follows:

> When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report, a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, or to take a recess, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any member may call it up for consideration: Provided, That such motion, if made during the last six days of a session, shall be disposed of when made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know what the point of the gentleman is.

Mr. PAGE. My point of order is that the motion to reconsider is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so holds, and has so ruled.

Mr. PAGE. I did not so understand the Chair.

Mr. DEZENDORF. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. MACKEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACKEY. Was not a motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered once made already this evening?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that that motion was not made. The gentleman will undoubtedly recollect that by unanimous consent the previous question was considered as ordered. It was not made in fact, but was an arrangement by unanimous consent.

Mr. MURCH, I insist upon my motion for a recess until 9 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the motion to reconsider is first in order; this being the last day of the session.

Mr. POUND. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POUND. I understand the Chair to say that the previous question was ordered by unanimous consent. Is that so?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was so ordered.

Mr. POUND. Then a motion to reconsider is not in order, and has never been entertained under such circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair entertains the motion.

Mr. POUND. Unanimous consent is tantamount to a suspension of the rules, and a motion to reconsider a suspension of the rules has never been entertained.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Unanimous consent is conclusive evidence that everybody voted in favor of the motion; and therefore it is not competent to move to reconsider it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair having disposed of the various points of order, will put the question. The motion is to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered and to lay that motion on the table. The question will be upon laying upon the table the motion to reconsider.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ATHERTON. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 24.

Mr. SPARKS and Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, tellers will be ordered, and the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. DEZENDORF, of Virginia, and Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal taxation, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

ELECTION CASE—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 101, noes 47.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

During the roll-call a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 7061) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, to encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and to amend the laws relating to the shipment and discharge of seamen.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate to the shipping bill and ask a committee of conference.

Mr. DEZENDORF. I object. There is no business in order except proceeding with the unfinished business.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

The call of the roll was resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hundred and sixty-four members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a question of high privilege and submit the report of the committee of conference on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 9, 10, 11, 13, 21, 22, 27, 31, 41, 42, and 50.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17½, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 43, 44, 48, 49, 51 and 52; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment insert the following:

"And the salaries due all District employés for current services shall be paid in full, notwithstanding suspensions heretofore made in the accounts of the commissioners of the District by the accounting officers of the Treasury."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,319.43;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"To pay D. F. Murphy, Official Reporter of the Senate, for extra services and for clerk-hire paid out by him, $1,000, for the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert as a new paragraph after said amendment the following:

"To pay Charles Carter for cleaning extra room of Committee on Appropriations, $60."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert as a new paragraph after said amendment the following:

"To pay W. B. Green for clerical work in completing the records of the Committee on Accounts, a sum equal to one month's pay, $180."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "second" and insert "seventh;" and the Senate agree to the same.

FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
WM. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the conference report was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the deficiency appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the conference report:

The amount appropriated by the bill as agreed upon is $2,813,187.80, being $527,853.69 more than was contained in the bill as it passed the House.

FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to say that all the increases in this bill are audited accounts from the officers of the Treasury and a certain set of accounts; not large in amount, under a decision of the Supreme Court for repayment of balances on property sold for taxes. There is also an appropriation of $150,000 to settle the title, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, to the soldiers' cemetery at Arlington. With this statement I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the conference report was adopted.

Mr. ROBESON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 301) for the relief of Stephen P. Yeomans and Andrew Leech; and

A bill (H. R. 6930) to levy an assessment of the real estate in the District of Columbia in the year 1883, and every third year thereafter, for purposes of taxation.

EMMA H. COLLINS.

On motion of Mr. URNER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Emma H. Collins.

JEROME E. PAMPEL.

On motion of Mr. URNER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Jerome E. Pampel.

JAMES H. BONE.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to James H. Bone to withdraw a paper filed by him as evidence with the Committee on War Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPER.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the Committee on Elections a paper designated "A notice to take evidence at Pleasant Hill," upon his depositing a certified copy of said paper.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CONVERSE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the rest of this night's session, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. WHITE. Regular order.

Mr. PAGE. I ask by unanimous consent that the bill to remove burdens from American shipping be taken up, the Senate amendments non-concurred in, and a conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. PAGE. I do not think gentlemen will object to take up the shipping bill when it is understood I only ask for non-concurrence and a committee of conference.

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

Mr. PAGE. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. WHITE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the election case.

Mr. DEZENDORF. If the election case does not lose any of its rights I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PETTIBONE. But only on that understanding.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to that, as the regular business is to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the shipping bill, and to non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 5.

Mr. SPARKS. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. PAGE and Mr. SPARKS.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to make a single statement in regard to this bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 3.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw the motion, as I find there is no quorum present.

Mr. TUCKER rose.

Mr. WHITE. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the contested-election case.

Mr. BRAGG. Can that motion be withdrawn except by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moved to suspend the rules and has now withdrawn it.

Mr. KASSON. I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6018) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the recovery of damages for infringement of patents. It is known as the bill to relieve the farmers from vexatious patent suits. It passed the House at the last session and is now returned with Senate amendments which are not satisfactory.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

Mr. KASSON. I move to suspend the rules. It will not interfere with the election case but for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the contested-election case.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 23.

Mr. KASSON. Is it not in order to submit a motion on my bill to relieve the farmer from vexatious patent suits?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the election case.

Mr. McCOOK. I move we take a recess until 9 o'clock, and I insist on my motion being put.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the House take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. DEZENDORF. We hold our place on the election case.

Mr. BRAGG. Hold on to everything you have got.

Mr. DEZENDORF. Do I understand the Chair to say we still retain our rights?

The SPEAKER. You lose no rights.

Mr. BRAGG. I tell you that man must have his money for service which he has never rendered.

Mr. McCOOK. I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is on the resolution as amended in the contested-election case.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order that is not the question. The question as I understand it was on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered, or rather it was on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEZENDORF], to lay that motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the motion.

The SPEAKER. That is the pending motion.

Mr. KASSON. I renew my request to take up House bill 6018 to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the recovery of damages for the infringement of patent.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I object to that bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is it?

Mr. KASSON. I will state what it is.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that unanimous consent be given to the gentleman from Iowa for the purpose he has indicated, provided it does not prejudice the contested-election case now under consideration. When his case is disposed of will the election case be then the first thing in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not able to hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE. That is because the Chair does not keep order.

Mr. KASSON. It does not lose any of its rights.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEZENDORF], to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered, and on that motion the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 6, not voting 199; as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WELLBORN with Mr. DEERING.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. BARBOUR.

Mr. WAIT with Mr. COVINGTON.

Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois.

Mr. RYAN with Mr. ATKINS.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, with Mr. VANCE.

By unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BRAGG and Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What business is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question has been ordered in the contested-election case.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is it debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BRAGG. Is not the question before the House a call of the House?

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that motion is in order.

Mr. BRAGG. The point has been made that no quorum voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum in the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to know whether the rule authorizes the Chair to judge that there is a quorum present when the roll-call shows that a quorum is not present?

The SPEAKER. It is determined under the rule by a count.

Mr. BRAGG. Is there any better count than the record of the vote?

The SPEAKER. There is a great deal better than the record on this vote. The Chair will state in response to the gentleman's point that the previous question has been ordered. After the previous question is ordered, unless it is ascertained upon actual count by the Speaker that there is no quorum present the motion for a call of the House is not in order.

Mr. BRAGG. I am very sorry that the Speaker overrules the judgment of the late occupant of the chair, who did entertain the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman who occupied the chair did exactly right. The point was not called to his attention.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to lay on the table the whole subject in regard to this election case?

The SPEAKER. There is a pending motion to lay on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are some matters of public business that we must transact before to-day at 12 o'clock.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I understand that there is no quorum present on the last vote. I call for tellers on that question.

Mr. ELLIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, or rather I desire to renew the inquiry made by the gentleman from Illinois, and ask if a motion to lay this contested-election case upon the table is not in order?

The SPEAKER. A motion is already pending to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered, which motion is in order.

Mr. ELLIS. If the motion I suggest is in order, to lay the whole subject upon the table, I move that the contested-election case and all proceedings had therein be laid upon the table.

Mr. PEELLE. The motion to lay upon the table is already pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, this is to lay that on the table too.

Mr. WHITE. Before that question is decided I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. SPARKS. I move to amend by inserting "10 o'clock."

The SPEAKER. A motion to take a recess would be in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question recurring upon the motion of Mr. WASHBURN, it was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it

Mr. SPRINGER. Under our rules the hour fixed for adjournment now is 11 o'clock, and unless we vacate that rule the session of this House will close at 11 o'clock to-day, or to-morrow, that being the end of our legislative day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois, and overrules it.

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to submit a motion to suspend the rules and take up a bill relating to foreign patents.

The SPEAKER. The motion can not now be entertained.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6683) to authorize the construction of bridges over the Ogeechee, Oconee, Ocmulgee, Flint, and Chattahoochee Rivers, in the State of Georgia.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendments, bills of the House of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. 1226) to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, relating to yachts;

A bill (H. R. 4218) for the relief of Robert L. McConnaughey;

A bill (H. R. 3837) for the relief of William D. Martin;

A bill (H. R. 151) for the relief of David S. Booth, M. D.;

A bill (H. R. 6308) for the relief of C. H. Miller;

A bill (H. R. 7462) to create three additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota;

A bill (H. R. 6889) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa F. Stone;

A bill (H. R. 4999) for the relief of E. S. Montell, executrix of the estate of James E. Montell;

A bill (H. R. 4926) for the relief of Charles Kortzenborn;

A bill (H. R. 814) making Saint Vincent, in the State of Minnesota, a port of entry in lieu of Pembina, in the Territory of Dakota;

A bill (H. R. 3850) for the relief of Joseph Westcott & Son;

A bill (H. R. 3842) to pay Charles W. Button costs of advertising property levied on by the collector of the United States internal revenue for the fifth district of the State of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. 3267) granting a pension to Clara Wible;

A bill (H. R. 2294) granting a pension to John Glenn;

A bill (H. R. 1926) to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes so as not to exclude retired Army officers from holding offices in the Territories;

Joint resolution (H. R. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General; and

A bill (H. R. 7148) to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within five miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within five miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments House bills of the following titles, in which amendments the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 6928) to regulate licenses in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 660) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. SKINNER. I rise to a question of order. When the roll-call discloses no quorum, are any motions in order except a motion to adjourn and a motion for a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. Some matter may come in of higher privilege.

JOHN BAILEY.

Mr. BISBEE. I rise to present a privileged report. I submit a report from the special committee raised to investigate the conduct of John Bailey, an officer of the House.

The SPEAKER. The report is privileged. Under the resolution appointing the committee it was authorized to report at any time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Can that report be received while the previous question is pending?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida submits a report from the special committee in relation to charges against John Bailey, an officer of the House. The report will be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. BISBEE. I ask to have the resolution reported by the committee read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the charges contained in the said resolution against John Bailey as an officer of this House are not proven, and do not furnish sufficient grounds for the conclusion that said Bailey is guilty of any improper conduct, and that your committee be discharged from the further consideration of the case.

RICHARD CROWLEY.
WILLIAM ALDRICH.
H. BISBEE, Jr.
E. L. MARTIN.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point of order that the House having been found without a quorum, nothing is in order but a motion to adjourn, a motion for a recess, or a motion for a call of the House, and that this report is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Under a resolution of the House the report is in order at any time.

The report was ordered to be printed, and to lie on the table.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I ask permission to file the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman got them ready?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be received and will be printed with the report of the majority.

Mr. KLOTZ. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on the subject of that report.

Mr. BISBEE and others objected.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLOTZ] be permitted to make his remarks now.

Mr. BISBEE. I do not object to that. I only object to remarks on this subject being printed which are not delivered in the House.

Several members objected.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered in the contested-election case. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 79, nays 4, not voting 208; as follows:

Mr. PETTIBONE. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 79 and the nays are 4.

Mr. BRAGG and Mr. SPARKS. No quorum.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I understand the call of the roll showed that there was no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It showed that no quorum voted.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Ah!

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to that side of the House——

Several members objected, and called for the regular order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This is the regular order. I want to appeal to that side of the House to stop this filibustering proceeding. I want to make a motion to go to the Speaker's table with a view to taking up the bonded bill.

Mr. WHITE. You certainly would not make a motion to take up the whisky bonded bill on the Sabbath day.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I never knew you to be so concerned about the Sabbath day before. What I want is to get rid of this business and dispose of it. I therefore beg my friends on the other side——

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not to filibuster.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes; so that we may go to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the reading of Rule XVIII.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WHITE. I make a point of order under Rule XVIII, which is as follows:

When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report, a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, or to take a recess, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and therefore any member may call it up for consideration: Provided, That such motion, if made during the last six days of a session, shall be disposed of when made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WHITE. My point of order is that the gentleman from Iowa having made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered, and this being within the last six days of the session, that motion must be settled now, and the gentleman from Ohio is not entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order against that which is not before the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask for a vote to be taken on the pending question, so that we may go to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to submit a proposition to this House to see if we can not come to some understanding with reference to the pending subject. I suggest that my colleague on the Committee on Elections [Mr. PETTIBONE] give notice that at a certain hour of to-day he will call up the contested-election case again for further consideration.

Mr. WHITE. I object to any such agreement, and call for the regular order.

Mr. CALKINS. It is not an agreement at all.

Mr. WHITE. No; and never will be.

Mr. CALKINS. It is a matter in the power of the gentleman in charge of the case. It is known to this House that there are many bills on the Speaker's table——

Mr. WHITE. Yes, and we do not want to go to the Speaker's table.

Mr. CALKINS. Which the Senate has passed and which this House ought to pass.

Mr. WHITE. What are they?

Mr. CALKINS. I do not ask that any rights be waived with reference to the pending subject. I only suggest to the gentleman in charge of it to give notice that at a certain time he will again call up the election case and proceed with its consideration, no right being waived by the gentleman. The question is whether that gentleman will consent to fix an hour at which he will again insist upon the consideration of this election case, and in the mean time allow the House to proceed to the consideration of bills which should be passed by this House.

Mr. RANDALL. I object, and call for the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will present it.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to submit the report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The statement accompanying the report will be read.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the sundry civil appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the conference report:

The bill as agreed upon in the conference appropriates $24,206,147.47, being $659,200 less than as it was passed by the Senate and $1,683,210.59 less than the current appropriations.

FRANK HISCOCK,
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now trust that instead of reading the report, which will furnish no information to the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will state what has been the result of the conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is that accepted in lieu of the reading of the report?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is no necessity for reading that report.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well. This bill, as it passed the House, carried $23,119,232.50; as it passed the Senate it carried $24,565,347.47, and as we have agreed upon the bill it carries $23,906,147.47. The amount yielded by the Senate is $659,200.

Of items which have heretofore been included in other appropriation bills this bill carries about $500,000, I believe. Therefore the amount in this bill which has usually been included in bills of this character is about $23,406,147.47.

In regard to the real points of difference between the House and the Senate, I regret to say that we have yielded them all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, dear!

Mr. HISCOCK. I refer to the points of difference stated when I presented the disagreeing conference report, and not to points of difference involving only amounts of money. The same principle exists with regard to them all. As I stated to the House when I presented the disagreeing report, the Senate conferees insisted that all the provisions in disagreement were of the character of affirmative legislation, and ought not to be upon a general appropriation bill, and insisted that it should be eliminated.

Your conferees unanimously came to the conclusion from that position the Senate would not recede. We were confronted with the alternative of yielding all the points on the part of the House, or having the bill fail, and we yielded.

I regret as much, I believe, as any member of this House the surrender; I especially regret the surrender of certain of them. It was insisted, especially with reference to the provision of the bill repealing the preemption laws, that there was no time afforded the Senate for the discussion and examination of so grave a question. What that suggestion was, made perhaps for the purpose of soothing our feelings while the Senate refused to concur with us upon the broader principle, I have stated. The Senate conferees planted themselves upon the doctrine that legislation would not be tolerated by the Senate upon a general appropriation bill.

This was the position of Senators on both sides of the Senate Chamber, neither side being more willing than the other to make concessions in this respect.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether the bill as now agreed upon by the conferees does not contain a Senate amendment which is to be regarded as general legislation—as much so as any of the five or six propositions which have been struck out?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not?

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose the gentleman refers to the provision in regard to the Cherokee Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there not a provision in regard to the Yellowstone Park?

Mr. HISCOCK. There is. If that is the one the gentleman refers to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I refer to both.

Mr. HISCOCK. A provision in regard to Yellowstone Park was included in the bill as it passed the House, a provision of affirmative legislation. For some reason—gentlemen, of course, can surmise as correctly as myself what that reason was—for some reason the point was not made against that legislative provision either in the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate or in the Senate. It was not stricken from the bill; but they proceeded to consider and amend. It was hardly proper for us to ask to strike our legislation from the bill. We all believe legislation on that subject desirable.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before my friend takes his seat will he not permit, for the information of the House, the reading of the three Senate amendments agreed to by this conference committee—one in regard to the sale of vessels, one in regard to the Yellowstone Park, and one authorizing the adjustment of the Cherokee Indian claim?

Mr. HISCOCK. The provision in regard to the sale of vessels was not in this bill, but in the deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask that the other two may be now read.

Mr. HISCOCK. With reference to the Cherokee Indian provision it is doubtful whether as formulated by the Senate it is affirmative legislation. It appropriates a certain sum, a part of the sum which it is claimed is due from the United States to that tribe, and provides that the title to certain lands shall be conveyed to the United States in trust for certain Indian tribes.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that was put on by the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is in the form of a provision for carrying out treaty stipulations.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a purely legislative measure.

Mr. HISCOCK. Of course the argument made on the part of the Senate was that the condition imposed upon the payment of the money was a proper condition, and not one of affirmative legislation.

I am not going to argue the question whether the Senate was right in this. I have had occasion heretofore to examine the subject. The sundry civil bill for the current year, as it passed the House at the last session, was amended in the Senate in respect to the Cherokee Indians. I was dissatisfied with the form of the provision proposed, and had too little time to examine the question; and the Senate amendment was disagreed to then. The conferees were not satisfied with its form as presented in this bill, as it came from the Senate without amendments. We were not, however, insisting there should be no legislation in the bill, and we perfected the Senate amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. What became of the Sioux ratification?

Mr. HISCOCK. The Sioux ratification is stricken from the bill, and a provision is inserted appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of procuring the assent, I believe, of two-thirds of the adult males of that tribe to the treaty the House proposed to ratify.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much is appropriated?

Mr. HISCOCK. Ten thousand dollars. It was claimed on the part of the Senate that the old treaty, which the late treaty modified and changed, contained an express provision that future treaties between the tribe and the United States should only be entered into with the consent of two-thirds of the adult males of the tribe. The want of such assent was one of the objections made to our legislation, and the bill was amended so as to provide for procuring such assent.

Mr. VALENTINE. Do you provide for a ratification of the treaty?

Mr. HISCOCK. We do not. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLISS. I desire to ask my colleague [Mr. HISCOCK], the chairman of the conference committee, in what respect the amendment which provided for the sale of certain lands in the city of Brooklyn adjoining the navy-yard differs from the amendment which was attached to the deficiency bill providing for the sale of a certain number of vessels.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, there is the slightest difference in the world between them.

Mr. BLISS. If that is the case, then I hope that this report will not be concurred in.

Mr. NEAL. I hope it will.

Mr. BLISS. I am opposed to the Senate making any rule which deals differently with substantially the same propositions.

Mr. HISCOCK. In my judgment there is no substantial difference between the provisions. A proposition with reference to the sale of ships was upon the deficiency bill, and I do not think that it escaped the observation of the Senate. [Laughter.] Certainly no point was made against it. The point was made against the sale of a part of the Brooklyn navy-yard and against the sale of the Chelsea Hospital. In regard to the latter there certainly were members of the Senate, I suppose, who were very friendly to that provision, yet they strenuously insisted upon this point against affirmative legislation.

I submit to the House a statement exhibiting the appropriations at this session, and contrasted with those of the first session of this Congress and with the appropriations of the Forty-sixth Congress for the fiscal year 1882.

The aggregate of the appropriations at this session is $229,327,511.36, as against $295,510,639.86 by the first session of this Congress, and as against $219,367,983.38 appropriated by the last session of the Forty-sixth Congress. You will bear in mind, however, that in last year's appropriations were $24,000,000 in round numbers to be charged to the previous year, rendered necessary by the fact that the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress failed to make the necessary appropriations for the fiscal year 1882, for the payment of pensions and for branches of the service where the expenditure is not discretionary but regulated by law.

Deduct that amount from last year's appropriations, and we are below them in round numbers $41,000,000; $14,000,000 of this difference is in the pension appropriations; $18,738,000 in the appropriations for rivers and harbors; showing our appropriations for the expenses of the Government and miscellaneous purposes for the next fiscal year to be about $9,000,000 less than for the current year.

The appropriation for pensions for 1882 was $66,000,000 only. For the next fiscal year we have appropriated $86,000,000. Adding the difference, $20,000,000, to the appropriations for the fiscal year 1882, exclusive of rivers and harbors, $11,441,300, the aggregate is $227,926,683.38, as against our appropriations for the next fiscal year of $229,327,511.36. We have been compelled to provide for a two years' growth of the country, and we have appropriated over $2,000,000 for the increase of the Navy.

Our deficiency bill this year carries only $2,813,187.83; about $500,000 of that only is for the current year, the balance to pay audited claims and judgments against the United States.

*Appropriated. †Includes deficiencies provided for.

I now move the adoption of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from New York will allow those amendments to be read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Division.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from New York did yield to the gentleman from Indiana, but the Chair did not hear him.

Mr. HISCOCK. I did yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE. I desire but one minute. In eight hours, Mr. Speaker, this Congress will adjourn sine die. Upon my motion an amendment very important to me and, I believe, to the people of the United States was incorporated in this bill. It has been struck out by the conference committee. I do not now propose that the House shall refuse to concur in this report, but I desire in behalf of my people to protest against the action, particularly of the Senate conferees, in taxing the people of the United States to support a class of pensioners in the soldiers' homes and at the same time to pay them pensions.

I protest, also, against the conclusion which has been reached by which, under the present law, if the occupant of a home should die while in that soldiers' home, the balance of his pension shall go to his widow or personal representatives, while if he should happen to die when he is absent from the home on furlough, it is retained by the officers of the home and covered into the treasury of the home. It is inequitable, it is unjust, it is an outrage; and while I shall not oppose a concurrence in the report of the conference committee, because of the lateness of the hour, I feel it to be my duty to enter my solemn protest against that action. If I thought by non-concurrence a different result would be reached, I would ask the House to refuse to concur.

Mr. HISCOCK. A single word, which bears somewhat on what has been said by the gentleman from Indiana in behalf of the conferees on the part of the House. If we believed that non-concurrence in reference to that provision, and non-concurrence in reference to the provision repealing the pre-emption laws and non-concurrence in reference to one or two other provisions in this bill, would result in their enacting them into law, we would not have brought in this report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire on behalf of the conferees of the House to say this: That the criticism of the gentleman from Indiana does not apply to those gentlemen selected by the House to settle the disputed points on this bill. I am very sure there was no effort spared by the representatives of the House to bring about the result contemplated by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. The chairman of this committee of conference on the part of the House, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, has stated fairly it was only after the conferees sent from this wing of the Capitol had become thoroughly satisfied it was impossible for them to carry out the wish of the House in this regard they ever consented to make a report yielding the views expressed by the House and held by themselves.

There are many things in this bill I am very sure this House does not desire to enact into law; that the conferees sent there by the House did not desire to make law; that did not receive my approval nor that of a single conferee that you have appointed. They come back and bring you a report which they say to you is the best they can get, and submit it for you to determine whether under the circumstances you will insist on a further conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, while possibly if the bill fails it might not produce an extra session, because it would be in the power of Congress to pass a joint resolution continuing the law for the current year, yet that would inconvenience the Government, for it is very necessary the appropriations should be made on another basis or varied as to certain branches of the service. And we were therefore presented with the alternative of an extra session or the continuance of the law for the present year.

It is not unlikely if an extra session was the alternative of the failure of this bill the Senate would have receded from its position, but I doubt not that branch of Congress was quite as well informed as ourselves, and appreciated the fact that at the last moment the joint resolution I have referred to could be passed. It of course would be free from the obnoxious legislation, and therefore what would be gained by insisting the bill under consideration should carry it? We can not force it upon the Senate.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 26, 31, 38, 40, 43, 56, 57, 58, 67, 73, 74, 77, 83, 84, 88, 89, 90, 91, 99, 102, 112, 116, 119, and 135.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, 27, 28, 30, 32, 35, 39, 41, 42, 48, 49, 51, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 70, 71, 72, 75, 76, 78, 81, 85, 86, 87, 93, 94, 95, 96, 100, 101, 103, 105, 106, 108, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, and 134, and agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 2 and 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$1,500" insert "$1,800;" and in lieu of "$2,500" insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$630,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and strike out in line 6, page 10 of the bill, the word "ten" and insert "seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from is disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and in line 8, page 10 of the bill, strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and in line 10, page 10 of the bill, strike out "1,000" and insert "700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and strike out after the word "dollars," in line 26, page 21 of the bill, down to and including line 4, page 22; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"FOR THE NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

"For compensation and personal expenses of members of the board, $10,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert "for the enlargement and construction of such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $200,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out of said amendment the words "for West India reports, $4,000," and in lieu of "$12,000" insert "$7,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$42,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 16, page 53 of the bill, after the word "law," insert "and exclusive of officers detailed for Arctic Sea service;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of "forty-five" insert "twenty-five," and after the word "mules," in line 14, page 34 of the bill, insert the words "and six horses;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$4,500" insert "$3,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert:

"For the purpose of procuring the assent of the Sioux Indians as provided by article 12 of the treaty between the United States and the different bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians made and concluded April 29, 1868, to agreement made with said Sioux Indians transmitted to the Senate February 3, 1883, by the President, with such modification of said agreement as will fully secure to them a title to the land remaining in the several reservations set apart to them by said agreement, and to the Santee Sioux the proceeds of that portion of their separate reservation not allotted in severalty, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "and," insert the words "not exceeding;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 132 and 133: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 132 and 133, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendments insert:

"To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, borne on the annual and session rolls, on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month's extra pay at the rate of compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

"That a joint commission consisting of three Senators, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and three members-elect of the Forty-eighth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall during the recess of Congress consider the question of the salaries and compensation of the officers and employés of the Senate and House, respectively; and also the number of such employés necessary for the official transaction of the business of the two Houses, and shall report to the two Houses on the second Monday of December next their conclusions with reference to the whole subject, and shall recommend legislation respecting the same, if in their judgment any legislation is necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

FRANK HISCOCK,
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the demand for the previous question on the report of the conference committee.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 8.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that is no quorum. Owing to the lateness of the hour, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel justifiable perhaps in insisting upon the point of order that no quorum is present, although I must be permitted to say that it has very seldom occurred within my experience of the conduct of business in this House where the reading of a paper, which is also a very short one, and which was necessary to be read for the information of the House, whose reading would occupy but a moment, was refused, while ten, fifteen, or twenty minutes of discussion was allowed. That has been unexampled in my experience here.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understood the gentleman to ask for a discussion in lieu of the reading of the statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I asked that the two legislative clauses should be read for the information of the House, so that the fact might appear on the record in connection with the proceedings of the House on this bill, and with reference to the matter of how entirely inexcusable the Senate was in their demand that the House should recede from its position with reference to legislation, while they themselves were legislating in a manner equally objectionable, as far as the question of applying legislation to appropriation bills is concerned, upon the same bill. It was to show this fact conclusively that I desired to have these items read.

I withdraw the point of order.

So (no further count being demanded) the report of the conference committee was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PREPARATION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE DIES, PLATES, STAMPS, ETC.

Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 367) making appropriations for the alteration of internal-revenue dies, plates, and stamps, and for providing blanks for rebate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the alteration of dies, plates, and stamps, and such other expenses as are incident in preparing for the collection of the taxes on tobacco, snuff, cigars, and cigarettes and special taxes at the reduced rates provided in the act of the present session reducing internal-revenue taxation, and for the preparation of the proper blanks for claims for the rebate provided for in said act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any provision there for additional force?

Mr. HISCOCK. No. The joint resolution explains itself fully, and so I will ask the House to vote upon it at once.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock.

Mr. PEELLE. I raise the point of order upon that. The only business in order is the consideration of the contested-election case.

The SPEAKER. What point of order does the gentleman raise?

Mr. PEELLE. I raise the point of order that a motion to take a recess has been voted down once since the consideration of this election case began.

The SPEAKER. How long ago has it been?

Mr. PEELLE. It is true that other business has intervened——

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will modify my motion that we take a recess for five hours.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. ROBESON. I suggest that it be limited to four hours.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, there is very important business upon the Speaker's table to be attended to, and as we have very few hours of this session remaining I hope the House will not agree to take a recess.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the motion to take a recess for five hours.

The SPEAKER. That will be until half-past 9 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by making it 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; the House divided, and there were—ayes 67, noes 55.

Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, Mr. BLACKBURN, and others. No quorum.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The only business in order is the appointment of tellers.

Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 53.

Mr. WILLIS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will keep their places.

Mr. BROWNE. Would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to pass over the pending business temporarily to take up the pension cases which have been reported and are now on the Private Calendar and dispose of them at once? I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. WHITE. I object. The only business before the House is the contested-election case. I do not want to waive any rights in that case.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose that there is no objection to other gentlemen taking the places of the tellers for a short time?

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair thinks the tellers might be relieved if tired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Massachusetts, and Mr. THOMPSON of Kentucky took the places of the tellers.

Mr. BISBEE. I ask unanimous consent to submit a proposition.

Mr. MORSE. Oh, no!

Mr. ROBESON. Would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to suspend for the present the pending order and proceed to business under a suspension of the rules?

Mr. BRAGG and Mr. WHITE objected.

Mr. ROBESON. It could not do any harm.

Mr. BISBEE. I hope the House will listen to my proposition. Will the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw his privileged question for a moment? Then we can take up the bonded-extension bill for consideration.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask that the tellers make their report so that if a quorum is not present there may be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The tellers have reported ayes 69, noes 53.

Mr. WILLIS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present on a count.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Will it be in order to make a few remarks on the general political situation?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent only.

Mr. BISBEE. I move that the gentleman have leave to print.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that my colleague [Mr. KLOTZ] be allowed to print some remarks in the RECORD.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. 7148) to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within five miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within five miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is pending.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not hear any objection to the request I made that my colleague [Mr. KLOTZ] have leave to print some remarks.

Several members objected.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the Speaker to have decided there is a quorum present by count.

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If that is so, then the motion I desire to make is in order. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the contested-election case. The previous question has been ordered, and a motion is pending to lay upon the table the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to reconsider the vote ordering the previous question. The regular order is the call of the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that we take a recess for five hours.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. PAGE. Four hours then.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object to taking a recess for any time. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. I am a teller, and I wish to know how long I have to stay here.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to make a proposition to the House. All of the cases on the Private Calendar relating to pensions except two or three have been reached and disposed of. On Friday night of this week the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions had the right to have these cases called up. But other business was very pressing and the pension business was allowed to go by. I ask unanimous consent that we take up these cases that are left and dispose of them.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to state that there are on the Speaker's table a number of House bills with Senate amendments. In the case of some of these bills the amendments are very unimportant, but unless they are considered the bills would fail. The Chair has been requested to ask unanimous consent that such of these bills be taken up and considered as there is no objection to.

Mr. RANDALL. I object, unless my colleague has the right to print. That is a courtesy which has never been refused before.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I object also. Let business proceed in its regular order.

Mr. WHITE. We will never consent to pass the whisky bill on Sunday.

Mr. HOOKER. I make the point of order that if we go to the Speaker's table, we shall take up the business there in its order.

The SPEAKER. There is no question pending as to that. The regular order is called for. The Clerk will call the roll on the pending question, which is to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered in the election case.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 71, no 1, not voting 219; as follows:

YEAS—71.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. 1745) to authorize the President to restore Tenedore Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army and to place him on the retired-list of Army officers.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7462) to create three additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOUSE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLOTZ] have leave to address the House on the general question.

Several members objected.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask unanimous consent that at 11 o'clock we take a vote on the bonded-extension bill without discussion.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. YOUNG. I also ask that following that we take a vote on this election without discussion.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG] to propose to swap off a colored Representative for whisky?

Mr. YOUNG. I do. [Great laughter.]

Mr. WHITE. On the Lord's day?

Mr. YOUNG. I would rather have a colored Representative here than a crank. Why should my friend from Pennsylvania object to the proposition that at 11 o'clock to-day we take a vote on the bonded-extension bill without discussion and after that take a vote on the contested-election case? We can in that way decide two questions; and that will permit us to take a recess now. If that is objected to, then we will have to stay here, Mr. Speaker, until your hammer falls.

Mr. WHITE. Whisky may go up after this case is over, perhaps, but not now.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I ask for the present consideration of House bill No. 7469.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I object.

Mr. PRESCOTT. It does not appropriate any money.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I object to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRESCOTT. It is all right; it only provides that a poor woman may have her claim examined by the War Department.

FRENCH SPOLIATION BILL.

Mr. WALKER. I have been appealed to by gentlemen on both sides of the House and have been instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to ask to take from the Speaker's table a Senate bill in which gentlemen here are interested, or many of their constituents are. It does not take a dollar from the Treasury. It is known as the French spoliation claims bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. WALKER. It is Senate bill 1465.

Mr. VALENTINE. The bill I want to take up is No. 1492.

Mr. WALKER. The purpose of the bill is——

Mr. BRAGG. I have made objection to the bill, and that objection has not been withdrawn, and debate is out of order. The regular order is that the House shall proceed with the contested-election case, which is a question of the highest privilege, and I must insist that our colored friends shall have their rights.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objected under a misapprehension of the character of the bill. He has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. BRAGG. If the purpose of the bill is to relieve the House from it and to get it out into some other place, I will not object.

Mr. WALKER. That is the only purpose of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the bill be read.

Mr. WHITE. I reserve all points of order upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. There is an understanding that the election case comes up immediately after this.

Mr. MORSE. There is no understanding at all. The only thing is unanimous consent to consider this bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to 31st day of July, 1801.

Be it enacted, &c., That such citizens of the United States, or their legal representatives, as had valid claims to indemnity upon the French Government arising out of illegal captures, detentions, seizures, condemnations, and confiscations prior to the ratification of the convention between the United States and the French Republic concluded on the 30th day of September, 1800, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 31st day of July following, may apply by petition to the Court of Claims within two years from the passage of this act, as hereinafter provided: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to such claims as were embraced in the convention between the United States and the French Republic concluded on the 30th day of April, 1803; nor to such claims growing out of the acts of France as were allowed and paid, in whole or in part, under the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 22d day of February, 1819; nor to such claims as were allowed, in whole or in part, under the provisions of the treaty between the United States and France concluded on the 4th day of July, 1831.

SEC. 2. That the court is hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations, not contravening the laws of the land or the provisions of this act, for executing the provisions hereof.

SEC. 3. That the court shall examine and determine the validity and amount of all the claims included within the description above mentioned, together with their present ownership, and, if by assignee, the date of the assignment, with the consideration paid therefor: Provided, That in the course of their proceedings they shall receive all suitable testimony on oath or affirmation, and all other proper evidence, historic and documentary, concerning the same; and they shall report all such conclusions of fact and law as in their judgment may affect the liability of the United States therefor.

SEC. 4. That the court shall cause notice of all petitions presented under this act to be served on the Attorney-General of the United States, who shall be authorized, by himself or his assistant, to examine witnesses, to cause testimony to be taken, to have access to all testimony taken under this act, and to be heard by the court. He shall resist all claims presented under this act by all proper legal defenses.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to procure, as soon as possible after the passage of this act, through the American minister at Paris or otherwise, all such evidence and documents relating to the claims above mentioned as can be obtained from abroad; which, together with the like evidence and documents on file in the Department of State, or which may be filed in the Department, may be used before the court by the claimants interested therein, or by the United States, but the same shall not be removed from the files of the court; and after the hearings are closed, the record of the proceedings of the court and the documents produced before them shall be deposited in the Department of State.

SEC. 6. That on the first Monday of December in each year the court shall report to Congress for final action the facts found by it and its conclusions in all cases which it has disposed of and not previously reported. Such finding and report of the court shall be taken to be merely advisory as to the law and facts found, and shall not conclude either the claimants or Congress. And nothing in this act shall be considered as committing the United States to the payment of any of such claims.

SEC. 7. That there shall be in each case a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, which appeal may be granted on the same terms as are usual in appeals from the Court of Claims.

Mr. WALKER. There is probably not a gentleman on this floor——

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I renew the objection.

Mr. HOUSE. Do not do that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Regular order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object to any French spoliation claim.

Mr. WALKER. Allow me to make a brief statement. If gentlemen will give me their attention for a single moment I think I can convince them that the bill ought to pass.

There is probably not one among the members of this House who does not number among his constituents one or more who are interested in this bill. For eighty years they have been pleading to Congress, and Congress has responded by forty-three reports in their favor.

All the bills which have heretofore been reported have looked to the creation of a commission; and appropriated a specific sum, from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000, to meet these claims. Twice both Houses have passed a bill and sent it to the Executive, and in each case it was vetoed. The first time it was vetoed practically because we had not enough money to meet the claims of this kind. The second time it was vetoed because it was considered that there was a war existing between France and the United States at the time, which would render these claims invalid as claims upon the United States.

I will state that the purpose is simply to send these people to the Court of Claims. The action of the court is to be merely advisory. Whatever the court may do is to be reported to Congress, and must have the final action of Congress. This bill can not in any way commit the Government.

Mr. WILLIS. So I understand that Congress must assent to the decision of the court before anything can be paid?

Mr. WALKER. Unquestionably; and there is a specific provision that Congress is not committed to the decision of the court.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is understood that no rights are waived in regard to this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is too much money involved in this bill to permit it to be taken up and passed in this way.

Mr. WALKER. Let me say to my friend that there is not a dollar of appropriation involved. The bill does not commit the Government to an expenditure of one cent.

Mr. WILSON. This is as honest a measure as ever was reported to the House.

Mr. WALKER. The bill was passed in the Senate without a division. It was unanimously reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs in this House. It is the least that we can do to grant these people a hearing. For eighty years they have been knocking at these doors; and the matter has been reported upon favorably again and again.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CALKINS. Do I understand that objection is made? [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BUCHANAN] objects.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. BUCHANAN). Withdraw the objection.

Mr. CALKINS. If we can have order, I desire to make a statement to the House.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Georgia withdraws his objection to the bill. I ask for a vote. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CALKINS. If the gentleman from Georgia withdraws his objection to the French spoliation bill, I desire that it shall be first considered before I make my statement.

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order!

Mr. WILSON. This is the regular order. The bill has been read.

Mr. CALKINS. Does my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] object to the French spoliation bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. For what purpose is my colleague [Mr. CALKINS] recognized?

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to make a statement to the House as soon as the French spoliation bill is out of the way.

Mr. RANDALL. The French spoliation bill has not been entered upon.

The SPEAKER. Certainly not.

Mr. HOLMAN. The regular order has been called for.

Mr. CALKINS. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to object to this bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I never will agree to pass a bill with the House in its present condition.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. No bill was ever better considered in both Houses than this.

Mr. HOUSE. If objection is made to this bill I desire to know who objects.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, may I rise to a parliamentary inquiry? Who objects to the present consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It has just been stated.

Mr. WALKER. I ask who objects.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] called for the regular order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Since making my objection I have been informed that this bill passed the Senate unanimously. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise for the purpose of unhinging, if I can, the lock in which the House has found itself. I desire to make a statement which I believe will be satisfactory to all. Both sides of this Chamber recognize the fact that there are many bills which can be called up and considered by the House in regular order, and which ought to be so considered, to many of which there is no objection. For instance, my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] desires to call up the amendments of the Senate to the shipping bill, a measure of vital interest to the country. Other gentlemen have in their charge pension bills. Now, I desire to make a proposition to the House upon which, in my judgment, all sides will unite. It is that the present dead-lock on the election case shall be postponed, say, until 8 or 9 o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. I object. Regular order.

Mr. HATCH. The election case can not be postponed by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman hear me a moment?

Mr. HATCH. It is not necessary for the gentleman to go any further than his proposition to postpone the case. It can never be done with my consent.

Mr. CALKINS. Of course if the feeling of this House is that no further public business shall be transacted my statement is at an end. But if the feeling on both sides of the Chamber is that public business should go forward in an orderly manner, I hope that an honorable agreement may be arrived at between the two sides of the House. I ask gentlemen on both sides to agree to something which is reasonable, so that the public business may be proceeded with.

Mr. RANDALL. The public business is about through.

Mr. CALKINS. I admit that, but there are a great many of these bills which can be taken up and one objection will save all rights. There can be no hasty legislation in the present temper of the House. Any one of us can stop it, but if the business on the table is ready to be presented to the House there can be no objection to taking it up. Why not let it come up? I do not want any business passed which is deleterious to the country, but I simply submit whether we can not agree now in common fairness and in common honesty.

A MEMBER. And in common decency.

Mr. CALKINS. And in common decency, as my friend says, to postpone the dead-lock on the election case until 9 o'clock this morning.

A MEMBER. Ten o'clock.

Mr. CALKINS. Well, 10 o'clock, when that case shall be taken up without further obstruction, and during that time other business may be considered. Is there anything, Mr. Speaker, objectionable to any member on the floor in that?

Mr. HATCH. As the gentleman has occupied about five minutes in his statement and explanation, can not we have one minute on this side? When you talk about common fairness and common honesty and common decency we on this side believe there is less fairness and less honesty and less decency in this election case; and if you gentlemen on that side——

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I call the gentleman to order, and ask that his words be taken down. [Great laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. You must take the responsibility of it.

Mr. REED. I think we ought to have the regular order.

Mr. CALKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, if a majority of this House wishes to decide that question, ought it not in common honesty to be permitted to do so? Suppose the majority shall be reversed——

Mr. ERMENTROUT. It has been already reversed by the flat of the people.

Mr. CALKINS. Suppose the majority was reversed and my friends on the other side determined a certain thing should be done, I ask my friend whether he would not change his tactics and believe, the majority having been changed, it ought to be permitted to decide questions as they arise?

Mr. HATCH. If you go to the record in the Forty-sixth Congress you will find that you did the same thing day in and day out.

Mr. CALKINS. In election cases? Never.

Mr. HATCH. In cases more important than this.

Mr. CALKINS. Never in an election case.

Mr. HATCH. More important by far than this election case.

Mr. CALKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] for a question.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I call the gentleman to order. This proceeding is all out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must come to order.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I object to these interlocutory remarks between the two sides of the House.

Mr. CALKINS. I have yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky for a question.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has yielded to me for a question. If I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, it is that this election case shall be postponed until 10 o'clock. Furthermore the consideration of this case shall then be proceeded with without further obstruction.

Mr. CALKINS. And during the time other bills shall be taken up.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. And in the mean time that other bills shall be taken up.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to it.

Mr. MANNING. Does the gentleman mean by there being no further obstruction that we are then to take a vote in this case.

Mr. CALKINS. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I hope our side will understand this. It will afford the opportunity to press a great many important bills in which we are all deeply interested. We are not trading off the rights of our constituents. We should accomplish nothing if we hang on as we have been. While agreeing to the gentleman's proposition we will be able in the mean time to take up and act on a great many important bills.

Mr. MANNING. Let the gentleman from Kentucky appeal to the other side of the House for such an understanding.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I appeal to my own side, because they have sense enough to appreciate we are not now accomplishing anything.

Mr. CALKINS. My friend from Kentucky will yield to me. The other side of the House will bear me out in the fact that I have voted all the way through to sustain the report of the majority in this case. I voted constantly and expect constantly to vote that the contestee is entitled to his seat, but I am unwilling if I can prevent it to see the House prevented from taking up the other business, and I think we will be able to take up the business on the Speaker's table if this matter shall be postponed until 10 o'clock, and then that we shall have a vote without further obstruction on this election case.

Mr. MONEY. Then I understand the gentleman proposes to take up this case at 10 o'clock just as it is now?

Mr. CALKINS. I hope we will be able to make some arrangement that will obviate the present difficulty.

Mr. MONEY. And you expect us to yield on this side. If it is proposed to take a recess, and this matter is then to be called up in exactly the same condition that it is now, I shall have no objection; but it must be in the same condition that it is at this moment, and none other.

Mr. CALKINS. Of course if the other side is united in that conclusion, that they will not vote to make a quorum, undoubtedly that is the end of the matter, and there is no opportunity for a conference between us, because there is nothing to be agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. We can agree to non-concur.

Mr. HATCH. I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that he is asking us to cast our votes in order to make a quorum in reference to this election case?

Mr. CALKINS. No; all that I ask you to do is to vote your sentiments upon the case.

Mr. HATCH. We are doing that now. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I understand my friends on this side are unwilling that anything whatever shall be done, but insist upon occupying the same position that they now hold.

Mr. HATCH. I have demanded the regular order.

Mr. SIMONTON. The gentleman from Indiana proposes to postpone this election case until 10 o'clock to-day. This is Sunday morning. Let me ask him if he would not be willing to postpone it, say for a week longer, until next Sunday?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I sincerely hope our friends on this side will agree to this proposition.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. No, we will not agree to it; it is not a reasonable proposition.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. There are some men that do not see reason in anything.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. That is generally the observation of gentlemen who want to have their own way without reference to the sentiments or opinions of anybody else.

Mr. HATCH. I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. CALKINS. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. CALKINS. I asked unanimous consent, and have been endeavoring to get at an understanding with the other side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not seem to be successful in his efforts.

Mr. CALKINS. Of course an objection necessarily ends the thing, and no agreement can be arrived at. But it does not put an end to the effort, nor does it hide the fact that if we should be assured that enough gentlemen on the other side would vote their sentiments upon that question, the election case, when it comes up, it would be sufficient to make a quorum, and we would then have an opportunity of reaching and disposing of matters of public importance which are now upon the Speaker's table. I recognize, of course, the fact that we can not make any agreement where objection is made, but if enough gentlemen on the other side would pledge themselves to stand by and vote to make a quorum, then there would be no difficulty about a conclusion.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. There are many bills here upon the Speaker's table which demand our attention. But in response to the request of my friend from Indiana let me ask him if we consent to take a vote on the election case, if he will not precede it by giving us a vote, those of us on this side who desire to get a vote upon it, on the bonded spirits bill? [Cries of "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Gentlemen must take their seats, otherwise the Sergeant-at-Arms will see to it that order is maintained in the Hall.

Mr. HATCH. I have called the regular order, Mr. Speaker, and I insist upon the demand.

Mr. CALKINS. Of course having by unanimous consent obtained the floor to make this statement, I can not be taken off it until I get through.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for and the Chair will be compelled to recognize the demand. The regular order is the motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. CALKINS. Allow me a moment longer. If I can not obtain unanimous consent there is still hope that we may be able to come to some arrangement about this matter.

Mr. NEAL. Regular order.

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to a question of order. I want to know when the regular order is called and a gentleman is speaking in violation of the rules if he is to be allowed to go on and on in the face of the demand for the regular order?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Of course he is. That is what these rules were made for. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman from Illinois has no right to take me off my feet in that manner.

Mr. THOMAS. After the regular order has been called the gentleman has no right to the floor.

Mr. CALKINS. I deny that you can take me off my feet by calling the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen are entirely out of order.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask my friends on both sides of the House to permit me to make a brief statement. Of course I know it is out of order and can be made only by unanimous consent.

It is now 6 o'clock in the morning. We are pursuing public business in the face of the country. We are making a record for history. This Congress, and every individual member here present, must remember that what we are doing now is being done in the face of the country. I wish to make no criticisms upon the actions or the motives of anybody; but I think it will be for the interest of good legislation, that it will be for the common good of this country, that we now take a recess for three hours. I ask unanimous consent then in the interest of good government, in order to avoid the necessity of remaining here when it will be difficult, if not impossible, to secure the presence of a quorum when every member is fatigued and no business can be safely transacted, to avoid anything that may arise in the shape of personal controversy, to avoid difficulty in the transaction of the public business, and the putting of ourselves thereby in a false attitude before the country—I ask unanimous consent that we now take a recess for three hours and that the differences now existing remain exactly as they are until we reassemble.

It will give gentlemen time to reflect. The Senate has taken a recess. It will give every man time to cool. Then let us come back in three hours and try to do our duty according to our convictions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I object. I desire to suggest——

The SPEAKER. Objection being made the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 67, nays 6, not voting 218; as follows:

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 67 and the nays are 6.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that Rule XVII be read.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen can not have rules read unless there is some reason for it.

Mr. HOUSE. It is perfectly apparent we are doing nothing, and worse than nothing. Let us agree to take a recess.

Mr. ROBESON. I move that the House take a recess until half past 9.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 65, noes 14.

Mr. KLOTZ. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered (only 10 members voting therefor).

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes a. m., Sunday, March 4) the House took a recess until half past 9 o'clock.

MORNING SESSION.

The recess having expired the House reassembled at 9 30 o'clock a. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement to the House for two minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the condition that that shall make no change in the status of the pending question.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] will state what his purpose is.

NEWBURGH CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I will state my purpose and then will make my request known to the House.

Congress at its last session passed a joint resolution appropriating $25,000 to pay for a monument and centennial celebration at Newburgh, New York, Washington's Headquarters. The terms of that resolution were such as to appropriate $10,000 for the monument and $15,000 for the other incidents connected with the celebration. The committee in charge of the work and also the Secretary of War desire to have that joint resolution so amended as to permit them to use the $25,000 in the erection of the monument, leaving to the State of New York and the citizens of Newburgh the expenditures incident to the celebration. It is a more simple and a more satisfactory method, and puts the national contribution where it would be lasting and more permanent. It is to make that slight change in this resolution that I ask the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is it a Senate resolution on which the gentleman desires action?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It is. It passed the Senate. The Secretary of War is anxious it should be so arranged, and I do not know any reason why it should not be.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time a Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S. R. 138) concerning the erection of a memorial column at Washington's Headquarters, at Newburgh, New York.

Resolved, &c., That sections 2 and 3 of the joint resolution of Congress approved July 1, 1882, authorizing the Secretary of War to erect at Washington's Headquarters, in the city of Newburgh, New York, a memorial column, and to aid in defraying the expenses of the centennial celebration to be held at that city in the year 1883, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows: "That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in the erection of a suitable monument or column on the grounds belonging to the State of New York, and known as Washington's Headquarters, with such inscriptions and emblems as may properly commemorate the historical events which occurred at Newburgh and vicinity during the war of the Revolution: Provided, That the design for said monument or column, with the inscriptions and emblems to be placed thereon, shall be subject to the approval and adoption of the joint select committee directed to be appointed by the joint resolution to which this is an amendment: And provided further, That no part of the said sum of $25,000 shall be used in defraying the expenses of said centennial celebration."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration at this time of the joint resolution which has just been read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] will explain again the purpose of this joint resolution; repeat briefly his statement in regard to the action of the State of New York touching the other expenses contemplated by the original joint resolution of Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. The State of New York has appropriated, I think, $15,000, and the citizens of Newburgh and the council of Newburgh have appropriated another sum, perhaps ten or fifteen thousand dollars, which amounts they expect will be sufficient to pay for certain outside property and the ordinary expenditures of the celebration.

The terms of the appropriation made by Congress limited the expenditures for the memorial column to $10,000, and the remainder, $15,000, was to be expended for general expenditures. The committee thought that it would be more satisfactory to the public, after the Yorktown celebration, that the Government should have nothing to do with the ordinary expenses, such as brass bands, ice-cream, and all that, but that all the money appropriated by the Government should be expended upon the memorial column, and the citizens of New York think so too.

Mr. HOLMAN. That seems to be a very proper measure.

There bing no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 565.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is that these requests for unanimous consent are to be understood as not interfering at all with the condition of the pending business before the House.

The SPEAKER. Certainly not. The Chair would like to submit a proposition to the House, which has been requested by gentlemen on both sides of the House. It is that House bills with Senate amendments, of which there are a great number, may be taken up subject to objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Subject to one objection?

The SPEAKER. To one objection, if that is desired.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object to that arrangement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the Senate has done the same thing with Senate bills with House amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say that I will not object to that arrangement, for it is fair enough, perhaps, but I hope it will be coupled with the understanding that inasmuch as nearly all of these bills are of a private character, some opportunity will be given to bring forward also in the same manner bills of a more general character which may be regarded as of considerable importance.

The SPEAKER. The proposition suggested by the Chair was only to include House bills with Senate amendments, upon the Speaker's table, or which had been reported from committees of the House.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I will withdraw my objection for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the proposed arrangement.

SILAS Q. HOWE.

Mr. TUCKER. I now ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill which I indicated a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 565) for the relief of Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co., of Patriot, Indiana, the sum of $19,385; the same being the amount due them for taxes paid the 16th of March, A. D. 1867, on distilled spirits which had already paid the tax required by law; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object to that bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I desire to state that this bill was reported favorably to the Senate from the Committee on Finance and passed by the Senate.

Mr. MANNING. I desire to state that General BROWNE, from Indiana; who was district attorney at the time and prosecuted in the Federal court the persons proposed to be relieved by this bill, would state, if he were present, that he had become convinced that the assessment was erroneous and there was improper seizure thereon, and that the parties should be relieved.

Mr. TUCKER. I desire to state that the Committee on Ways and Means of this House reported the bill unanimously. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I can not withdraw my objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. 7327) to establish certain post-routes.

A. SCHUYLER SUTTON.

The SPEAKER. The agreement made a few moments ago was that House bills returned from the Senate with amendments should be taken up at this time subject to one objection. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5771) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton," approved June 4, 1872.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton," approved June 4, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of A. Schuyler Sutton, late acting lieutenant-colonel of the Ninety-fifth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, at the rate of $40 per month, from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment of the Senate was, in line 11 of the bill, to strike out the words "the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "March 4, 1883;" so that it would read "at the rate of $40 per month from and after March 4, 1883."

Mr. BRAGG. Before that bill is acted upon, I would like to know if it shows what the disability is for which $40 a month is to be given?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I will object to this bill and to all of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of that fact, I call for the regular order.

PAY OF HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. PEELLE. I desire to offer a resolution which has been handed to me at the suggestion of the Clerk, directing that officer immediately upon the adjournment to pay to the employés of the House borne on the annual roll their salary for the month of March.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a single remark. Mr. Speaker, we can not overlook the fact that this is Sunday. On such days, in the past history of this country, measures which were indispensable for the administration of the Government have been considered; but within my recollection there has been, in respect to the common credit of the country, no disposition to go into general legislation upon the Sabbath day.

The SPEAKER. The resolution sent to the desk by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PEELLE] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed immediately after the adjournment to issue to the employés of the House borne on the annual roll, their respective salaries for the month of March.

There being no objection the resolution was considered and adopted.

JOHN P. MALONEY.

Mr. MARTIN. I have a resolution similar in character to that just adopted. I think when it has been read there will be no objection to it. It provides simply for paying to the messenger of the official reporters the salary which he earned before he was sworn into office. It would no doubt have been inserted in the deficiency appropriation bill if that bill had not been passed under a suspension of the rules. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay to John P. Maloney, messenger of the Official Reporters, the sum of $38 out of the contingent fund of the House.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

EDUCATION REPORT FOR 1881.

Mr. VAN HORN. I ask that the resolution of the Senate in reference to printing the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881 be taken from the Speaker's table, that the amendments of the House be insisted upon, and that the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. VAN HORN, Mr. ANDERSON, and Mr. RANDALL as the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must interpose my objection to any other legislation to-day than such as is absolutely necessary to carry on the Government. I think this decent respect to the common credit of the country has always been recognized in our legislation.

REPORT ON FORESTRY.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, last evening I objected to and made a point of order upon the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota to a bill then before us, that amendment providing for printing the forestry report. I then stated that I would report from the Committee on Printing, with the amendments of the committee, the resolution sent to us on that subject. In pursuance of the promise I then made I now report that resolution, with the amendments of the committee, and will allow the matter to rest with the House.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Forestry, transmitted to the House in May last by the Commissioner of Agriculture; 13,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the Commissioner of Forestry.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were read, as follows:

Strike out "twenty" and insert "eight;" strike out "thirteen" and insert "five;" strike out "five" and insert "two;" strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to provide for 8,000 copies in the aggregate, 5,000 for the House of Representatives, 2,000 for the Senate, and 1,000 for the Commissioner of Forestry.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF TAX AND TARIFF ACT.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have another resolution on the subject of printing.

The SPEAKER. Is it privileged?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 15,000 extra copies of the pamphlet edition of the "act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883; that the Doorkeeper be directed to forward, in separate wrappers, the quota of each Representative and Delegate to his address at the earliest date practicable.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLACKBURN). The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that this is the regular order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Is not this subject to objection? If so, I object. This is not a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the resolution is privileged; it was not read subject to objection. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. When the House took a recess we then had a motion to reconsider and a motion to lay that motion to reconsider upon the table, upon which the House was dividing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the rule the committee making this report has the right to report at any time, and reports a privileged resolution, which it is now in the pleasure of the House to adopt or reject.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 16.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VOTE OF THANKS TO SPEAKER.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of this House are hereby tendered to the Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER, the Speaker, for the ability and courtesy with which he has presided over the deliberations of the House during the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to know, Mr. Speaker, whether one objection will prevent the consideration of that resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a matter of privilege, and one objection will not suffice to prevent its consideration.

Mr. McMILLIN. Under what rule? [Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. RANDALL. Under the rule of propriety.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes seem to have it by the——

Mr. BLANCHARD. I demand a divison. [Cries of "Oh!"]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 8.

So the resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I now demand the regular order of business.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me for one moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill H. R. 7327, which is the post-route bill, in order that the amendments of the Senate may be concurred in.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I demand the regular order of business against everything.

Mr. WHITE. This is an important public measure, and I trust the gentleman from Kentucky will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will consent to pass my bill. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask recognition, then, Mr. Speaker, to suspend the rules and concur in the amendments of the Senate to the post-route bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order against that motion. The House was operating under the previous question on the election case. By general consent that election case was waived for the purpose of taking up House bills with Senate amendments to be considered under the rule of unanimous consent, one objection preventing consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. The present occupant of the chair was not advised of the motion which was pending at the time the recess was taken by the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill being of public concern ought to pass by common consent, and I would ask the Chair whether it will in any way interfere with the business pending before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, in answer to the gentleman, it will not affect the status of that bill in any way.

Mr. HOLMAN. Or anything else before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not in the slightest degree.

Mr. BRAGG. I only made the point of order, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of having it understood that it should not interfere in any way with the matter existing before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. CANNON. Does the Chair hold it is not in order to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the contrary the Chair has held it is in order to suspend the rules.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments to the post-route bill.

Mr. ELLIS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. The Chair will be glad to hear gentlemen, but he can not hear more than one at a time.

Mr. ELLIS. I trust the Chair will not recognize any gentleman claiming attention who is out of his seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and gentlemen will resume their seats in order that the business of the House may proceed.

Mr. VAN HORN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make some adverse reports from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman while a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill is pending.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Is it in order to move a suspension of the rules when there is a motion pending to reconsider and lay upon the table the vote ordering the previous question on the contested-election case?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would say in response to the gentleman from Kentucky that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to suspend all rules; and under the rules of the House that motion is to be entertained during the last six days of a session.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I make the point of order that that is not absolutely binding upon the Speaker. The rules provide that the Speaker may entertain the motion, not that he shall entertain it. It is discretionary with the Speaker. The rule says that during the last six days of the session the Chair may entertain motions to suspend the rules. But the language is only directory, and he can not, pending a motion to reconsider and lay upon the table, when there is a privileged question pending and that motion is made in reference to it, he can not set that aside and entertain any other motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not disagree with the conclusions reached by the gentleman from Kentucky. But the Chair will state that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to take up and consider the post-route bill, the title of which has been reported to the House, was entertained by the Chair before any point of order was made by the gentleman from Kentucky or any other gentleman.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have been standing in my place here demanding the regular order from the very first moment of the reassembling of this House after the recess until now. I have never omitted a single occasion to demand the regular order when anything was attempted to be brought before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair admits that the gentleman from Kentucky demanded the regular order. But the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was submitted to the House, when, as the Chair understands it, there was no objection until the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] rose in his place and made the point of order that by an understanding which obtained in the House before the recess the motion could not probably be entertained if that point of order was pressed against it. The Chair will state also that it was in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the present occupant of the chair stated that he was not advised of the condition of this bill and the motion pending when the House took a recess. The Chair hardly feels under the circumstances that it would be dealing fairly with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, after having received and entertained his motion to suspend the rules for the purpose indicated, to entertain the point of order made now. The Chair thinks it is too late.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I insist that if this course is to be determined upon there should be some regularity about these recognitions, and the House should be permitted to know what motions the Chair will entertain. If it is held in order to move a suspension of the rules and pass this bill on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, notwithstanding the situation of the House upon the election case, it must be in order to move to suspend the rules for any other purpose. But if that be the understanding of the House, and it be recognized that such motions may be made and entertained by the Chair, I will withdraw my objection; that is to say, if we exclude this election case and take up the general business pending before the House, I shall be content. That is all I ask. You can bring in all the measures you want if you will do that. But I insist that the first thing to be done is to get rid of this election case in some manner. I do not care how you dispose of it, but get it out of the way, so that we can get to the consideration of the public business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I make the point of order that the Chair is fully informed of the fact that there is no quorum present, and hence that it requires unanimous consent in the absence of a quorum, of which fact, I have said, the Chair is sufficiently informed, to do any business whatever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no official information of that fact.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. The Chair must have official information of the fact, because the effort has been made time and again within the last six hours to discover the presence of a quorum in the House without success.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no such information; on the contrary, on a vote taken immediately preceding the recess the Chair has official information that there was a quorum.

Mr. ROBESON. The Chair is not informed of the absence of a quorum. Indeed the House at the hour that it took a recess this morning, by a vote which required a quorum, the last detailed vote taken, found itself with a quorum.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. The regular order, then, which has been demanded, is the further consideration of the election case.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me state, Mr. Speaker, that I made the point of order against the bill called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the motion to suspend the rules. The Speaker declared that the point of order was well taken. Upon the suggestion of the Chair then that this bill if acted upon would not change the relations of the election case, the business before the House, I withdrew the point of order with that understanding. After that the bill was received by the Speaker and the motion entertained; and the point of order subsequently to that I hold comes too late, not having been renewed at the time that I withdrew it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair agrees entirely with the conclusions of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and has already in substance so stated.

The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendments to the bill the title of which has been reported by the Clerk.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General;

A bill (H. R. 151) for the relief of David S. Booth, doctor of medicine;

A bill (H. R. 814) making Saint Vincent, in the State of Minnesota, a port of entry in lieu of Pembina, in the Territory of Dakota;

A bill (H. R. 1226) to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, relating to yachts;

A bill (H. R. 1926) to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes so as not to exclude retired Army officers from holding civil office in the Territories;

A bill (H. R. 2294) granting a pension to John Glenn;

A bill (H. R. 3837) for the relief of William D. Martin;

A bill (H. R. 3850) for the relief of Joseph Wescott & Son;

A bill (H. R. 3267) granting a pension to Clara Wible;

A bill (H. R. 3842) to pay Charles W. Button the costs of advertising property levied on by the collector of United States internal revenue in the fifth district of the State of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. 4218) for the relief of Robert L. McConnaughey;

A bill (H. R. 4926) for the relief of Charles Kortzenborn;

A bill (H. R. 4999) for the relief of E. S. Montell, executrix of the estate of James E. Montell;

A bill (H. R. 6308) for the relief of C. H. Miller; and
A bill (H. R. 6889) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa F. Stone.

REPORT ON EDUCATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as a conferee on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution relating to printing the educational report Mr. SHERWIN, of Illinois, in place of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, who asks to be excused.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of order. I call for the regular order, and I insist the regular order, under Rule XVIII, is the contested-election case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withhold his call for the regular order.

Mr. WHITE. For what purpose?

Mr. HASKELL. For a resolution about to be introduced.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I demand the regular order, and shall not withdraw the demand.

CORRECTION OF CLERICAL ERROR IN ENROLLMENT.

Mr. BINGHAM. I send to the desk a privileged resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and they are hereby, authorized to correct a clerical error in the bill of the House (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters, by inserting after the word "two" the word "hundred," under the third class, where the gross receipts do not exceed $2,700.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there will no public interest suffer by a delay in making that correction. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order. It is a privileged matter to correct a clerical error in enrollment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think this is in itself a privileged motion. The bill itself should never have passed the House.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the RECORD will show that I called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD may show that. This is a matter pertaining to the business of the House and has always been treated as privileged.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the parliamentary inquiry whether this is a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER. It has been always so held and that has been the practice.

The question was taken, and on a viva voce vote the Speaker stated that the "ayes" evidently had it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division. There is no privilege in this, and never has been.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 118, noes 5.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the question of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 144, noes 3.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE. I rise to ask unanimous consent to introduce and put on its passage a joint resolution providing for the appointment of an assistant Journal clerk of this House.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Do not object.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to move that the House take a recess for such time as may be deemed proper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first submit the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE]. He asks unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time a joint resolution for the purpose he has indicated.

Mr. SKINNER. I object.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KNOTT addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of this House for twelve years. During that time I have never trespassed upon its courtesy. I have never refused a courtesy to any gentleman with whom I have been associated. In an hour and a half I close my Congressional career forever. Under these circumstances I appeal to the courtesy and magnanimity of the gentlemen around me to allow me to have taken from the Speaker's table a bill in which my constituents and the people of my State are profoundly interested.

Mr. WHITE. What is that bill?

Mr. KNOTT. I will tell the gentleman if he will wait. In order that we may have the poor privilege of voting upon an amendment to that bill proposed by the Senate, I appeal to the courtesy and magnanimity of this House to allow us to have taken from the Speaker's table the House bill No 5656, the bonded-spirits bill.

Mr. WHITE. The whisky bill? Never, on Sunday! I call for the regular order.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope under such circumstances the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] will be granted, and that he may have the privilege of allowing the House to vote upon the amendment to which he refers.

Mr. ALDRICH. I, too, hope the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] will be granted.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be patient. There is no danger of the bill being taken up under objection.

Mr. KNOTT. I move to suspend the rules in order to take up the bill I have indicated, so that we may have a fair vote.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I object.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the regular order. [After a pause.] Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears the call of the gentleman.

ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I ask again for the regular order, in order that we may dispose of the pending election case of Lee against Richardson.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEZENDORF] to lay upon the table the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered on the contested-election case. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the motion to lay on the table. It relates to a case involving the right of a member to his seat in this House, and is one of high constitutional privilege. Otherwise the Chair would feel bound to recognize members to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. TUCKER. Is it in order, notwithstanding the pending of this election case, to move to suspend the rules and take up a bill?

The SPEAKER. As against a matter of high constitutional privilege, the Chair is in doubt. The Chair, however, does not see any difficulty in disposing of the pending case if the House desires to get it out of the way.

Mr. TUCKER. Then I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the Senate bill which I indicated a few moments ago.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I object.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the regular order. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia is not in order under Rule XVIII.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7327) to establish certain post-routes.

ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote ordering the previous question.

Mr. TUCKER. I was about to submit a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain that motion.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it in order to move to lay this election case on the table? If so, then I move to suspend the rules and lay the case on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain that motion, because it relates to the pending question of privilege.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It will require a two-thirds vote to carry the motion in the form in which it is put?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and lay on the table the pending election case and all propositions connected with it.

Mr. WILLIS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. My point of order is that when the House took a recess this morning there was no quorum here. After we had been here for hours there was no quorum in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WHITE. My point of order is that under those circumstances the Speaker has no right to entertain a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. WHITE. Then the Speaker takes the responsibility.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules relates to the pending case before the House.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Even if we had a quorum here, are there not five roll-calls which may be had between this and the determination of the contested-election case, which would take two hundred minutes, even if there was a quorum?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry; it is a question of fact.

Mr. CANNON. Well, is not that the fact?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 36, nays 130, not voting 125; as follows:

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. RICE of Massachusetts.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MESSAGES FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 367) making appropriations for the alteration of internal-revenue dies, plates, and stamps, and for providing blanks for rebate.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CHALMERS, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House to correct a clerical error in the bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. 138) concerning the erection of a memorial column at Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, New York.

ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the roll on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEZENDORF], to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered upon the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 2, not voting 161; as follows:

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move a call of the House.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 367) making appropriations for the alteration of internal-revenue dies, plates, and stamps, and for providing blanks for rebate; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House for printing the report of the Commissioner of Forestry.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the resolution of the Senate for printing the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881.

DEATH OF HON. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

Mr. REESE. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the Georgia delegation, I desire, upon information just received of the death of our governor, Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, and my predecessor in this Congress, to offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has just learned with the deepest sorrow of the death of Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, governor of the State of Georgia, and so long a useful, faithful, and distinguished member of this House; and that this House herewith expresses its heartfelt sympathy with the people not only of Georgia but the people of the whole country in the loss of a statesman and patriot.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

EDUCATION REPORT FOR 1881.

Mr. VAN HORN. I submit a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the resolution to print 32,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives numbered 1 and 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the proposed amendment the word "twelve."

R. T. VAN HORN,
SAM. J. RANDALL,
J. C. SHERWIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOS. R. HAWLEY,
H. W. BLAIR,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the case of Lee against Richardson. [See Appendix.]

Mr. GROUT, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the bill (S. 1465) relative to French spoliation claims. [See Appendix.]

Mr. KLOTZ. I ask permission to print in the RECORD some remarks on the investigation of the Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. HAZELTON. That is objected to, because it would be the most unfair thing in the world.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and leave to print is refused.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 6682) to fix the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois.

UNITED STATES TELEGRAPH SERVICE.

Mr. BINGHAM, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back the bill (H. R. 7542) to authorize the appointment of a commission to examine into the telegraph service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to suspend the rules——

Mr. PETTIBONE. I call for the regular order.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three members of the House be appointed, to join a similar committee on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses of Congress are ready to adjourn if he has no further communication to make to them.

The resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER appointed as members of such committee on the part of the House Mr. HISCOCK, Mr. ROBESON, and Mr. ATKINS.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. SIMONTON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That all documents and books ordered by the present Congress to be published which are actually furnished prior to the first Monday of December next shall be allotted as heretofore to the members of the present Congress and transmitted as fast as printed, unless otherwise ordered by the members thereof.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SIMONTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. KLOTZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KLOTZ. On the 6th day of January of this year I made certain charges against one of the employés of this House. I charged that that employé was connected with the Washington Gaslight Company, and that he had been using his official position in this House for the purpose of defeating all legislation adverse or inimical to that company. After I had made that statement the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MURCH], without consulting me with reference to the matter, offered a series of resolutions embodying what I had stated and asking for a committee of investigation. The resolution was adopted, and on the following day another resolution was also passed. The committee was then appointed and the investigation commenced. Shortly afterward, at a meeting of that investigating committee——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he does not perceive wherein he presents a question of personal privilege.

Mr. KLOTZ. I am coming to that; I will state it in a moment. I say that after that investigation had commenced the gentleman from Maine withdrew from the support of the resolutions he had presented and left me to fight it out myself. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman submit his question of privilege?

Mr. KLOTZ. I am proceeding now to state what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman presents a question of personal privilege.

Mr. KLOTZ. I am just coming to the point, if the Chair will bear with me for a moment. What I wish to say is that this withdrawal, and the subsequent action of the committee, places me in a false position at home with my people, and the assumption might go out among them that in this matter I had been guilty of some wrong. After having made the charges I did, and after the resolution appointing the committee of investigation was adopted, I deemed it incumbent upon me that I should sustain the charges or else it would have been assumed at my home that I had made them without proper consideration or information on my part, and therefore I was, under the circumstances, necessitated to employ an attorney at my own expense and a clerk and to follow up that investigation for three or four weeks. That investigation was finally concluded after bringing testimony from different parts and hearing the various officers and employés of the House who were supposed to have any information upon the subject.

Finally the investigation was concluded and the committee agreed upon a report. That was some two or three weeks ago, but that report, Mr. Speaker, was only submitted to the House this morning. The House did not read the report. The views of the minority were submitted at the same time, and the House did not read them. I had no opportunity myself to examine the committee's report. The House as yet knows nothing of its contents.

And when I asked the House a short time ago either to permit me to make a brief statement of my connection with this investigation upon the floor, as a matter of justice to myself, or in the event that objection was made to that to permit me to print a statement of the case, I was denied the privilege. That objection, Mr. Speaker, coming from the committee that investigated the charges, I may be permitted to say, comes from them with very ill grace when they gave me no opportunity of seeing the report. Now, the question of personal privilege which I submit is that this, under the circumstances, since it tends to place me in a false position, I think gives me a right either to make a brief statement or to print some facts which will vindicate myself from having made unjust accusations and charges in connection with the subject. As the session is now about concluded, I simply ask leave to print a statement as a matter of justice to myself.

Mr. HAZELTON. I object to any leave to print in connection with the matter.

Mr. KLOTZ. Have I not the right under the circumstances? I claim it as a matter of privilege that I be permitted to print a statement in this connection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Chair thinks the gentleman does not present a question of privilege.

Mr. MURCH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a very brief statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only recognize the gentleman by unanimous consent.

Mr. MURCH. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to make a remark.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Regular order.

Mr. MURCH. The gentleman from Pennsylvania in his question of personal privilege has made an allusion to me as withdrawing from the investigation of the charges submitted against one of the employés of the House. Now, I wish to set myself right before the House.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I object.

Mr. HAZELTON. There is no attack upon the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MURCH. I construe it as an attack upon me.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I do not yield. I move a call of the House.

A MEMBER. Print what you want to say.

Mr. MURCH. I do not want to print.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. ERRETT. I object.

Mr. MURCH. Then I ask the privilege of printing, since objection is made to hearing my statement.

Mr. HAZELTON. I object, unless we know exactly what it is the gentleman desires to insert. I object to striking any man without his having a chance to strike back. This is an attack on John Bailey which will give him no opportunity whatever to reply.

REPORT ON INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report on industrial education furnished by the Commissioner of Education to the Senate, in compliance with the resolution of December 15, 1882, there be printed 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner of Education.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

Amend by striking out so that it will read "2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner of Education."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJUSTMENT OF SALARIES OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires at this time to announce the appointment of Mr. HISCOCK, Mr. BLACKBURN, and Mr. FORNEY as members of the joint commission authorized in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the next fiscal year to consider the question of the salaries and compensation of the employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, and also as to the number of such employés necessary for the official transaction of the business of the two Houses.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. CHAPMAN to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers for the relief of Charles N. Mullan.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with adverse recommendations a bill and sundry petitions as follows; and the same were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 5357) for the relief of Norah Walsh;

The petition of Mrs. Nora Walsh, of Mississippi;

The petition of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt;

The petition of G. R. Brandon;

The petition of Pleasant H. Thompson;

The petition of the trustees of the Indiana Methodist church, of Norfolk County, Virginia; and

The petition of Joseph J. Farrow, of Heyward County, Tennessee.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, by unanimous consent, reported back with adverse recommendations the following bills and petitions; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Helen A. Newlin;

A bill (H. R. 2978) for the relief of Jackson Briscoe;

A bill (H. R. 3341) for the relief of George F. Brott;

The petition of Edward B. Smith;

The petition of Elizabeth M. Patterson; and

A bill (H. R. 5358) for the relief of Alfred Smith.

REPORTS TO BE FILED WITH THE CLERK.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state a number of members have indicated they had reports which they desired to submit. If there be no objection these reports may be filed with the Clerk and be entered upon the Journal as though they had been presented formally in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the period of the presentation of such reports be limited to three days.

The SPEAKER. It being understood that they shall be presented within three days. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

RELIEF OF VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4676) for the relief of certain volunteer officers of the Army for services actually performed during the rebellion, for the purpose of moving concurrence in the Senate amendment thereto. This bill gives relief to as deserving, if not the most deserving, class of our soldiers of the late war; men who were prevented from muster through no fault or neglect on their part, most frequently because of being sick in hospital or prisoners of war.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not know that there is any objection to the bill mentioned by the gentleman from Indiana. But gentlemen on the Republican side must remember that the first and only business now in order is the contested-election case of Lee vs. Richardson, which they forced upon the House in the expiring hours of this Congress, and got their "foot in it." [Laughter].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

Several members objected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. BAYARD had been appointed a committee on the part of the Senate to join such committee as might be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that Congress having finished its business is now ready to close its session by adjournment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I call for the regular order which is a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called. The question is on laying on the table the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to reconsider the vote ordering the previous question in the contested-election case.

Mr. ATHERTON. The pending question, I suggest, is a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has correctly stated the question.

EDWARD ELLIS.

On motion of Mr. HOUK, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Edward Ellis; and the same were referred to the Quartermaster-General for investigation.

SECOR & CO., ETC.

Mr. SKINNER. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill (H. R. 4044) for the relief of Secor & Co., Perine, Secor & Co., and Zeno Secor, with the accompanying papers, there having been no adverse report thereon.

I desire to state that I introduced this bill at the first session of this Congress, under a total misapprehension of its contents or nature, at the request of a personal friend who desired to discuss it before the proper committee. I disclaim in full any purpose to urge its consideration, and have refused to advance it in any way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER]?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 6682) to fix the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SHERWIN, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the claim of A. C. Fassett, there being no adverse report thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McLEAN, of Missouri. I desire to call up for present consideration a Senate bill——

Mr. PETTIBONE. I object. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Call the roll.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. McLEAN]. He asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration a bill, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2504) to amend the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, and others objected.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 660) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney, for the purpose of moving concurrence in a verbal amendment made by the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. I object.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I hope the gentleman will not object until he hears the amendment read.

Mr. BERRY. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Read the bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the Senate may be read.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I object.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, asked and obtained consent to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of H. W. Hippen.

PHEBE C. DOXSIE.

Mr. LACEY. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table for passage at this time Senate bill No. 43, granting a pension to Phebe C. Doxsie.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this bill at one time was lost between the two Houses and failed to pass for that reason. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, and others objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill is not before the House.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HOUK asked consent to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of J. D. Hale, and that the same be referred to the Quartermaster-General and Third Auditor; no adverse report.

Mr. BERRY. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon granting leave to withdraw the papers indicated.

The question was taken, and leave was granted accordingly.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. KASSON. I report back from the Committee on Civil Service Reform Senate bill No. 2288 to prevent officers or employés of the United States from collecting moneys from other officers or employés of the United States, and to prevent officers and employés of the United States from paying moneys to other officers or employés of the United States for political objects. I will state that the provisions of this bill are incorporated into existing law; and therefore I move that the bill be laid upon the table.

The bill was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

TENEDORE TEN EYCK.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 1745 to authorize the President to restore Tenedore Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army and place him on the retired-list of Army officers.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill is not before the House.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. RYAN asked and obtained consent to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of W. H. Wilson.

MARTHA J. COSTON.

Mr. WARD. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar and pass Senate bill No. 706, for the relief of Martha J. Coston.

Mr. BERRY and others objected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill is not before the House.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I call for the regular order, the case of Lee vs. Richardson.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. WELLBORN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and pass at this time Senate bill No. 2299.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, which was:

A bill (S. 2299) to fix and render certain the terms of the United States circuit and district courts in the eastern and northern districts of Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection; and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. WELLBORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I now move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

PHEBE C. DOXSIE.

Mr. LACEY. I now ask consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 43, granting a pension to Phebe C. Doxsie.

Mr. BERRY. I object.

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF SANDUSKY.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table and pass at this time Senate bill No. 2445, to amend section 2603 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fixing the boundary of the northern district of Sandusky.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask consent to take up Senate bill No. 1075. It passed the Senate unanimously.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I object.

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, don't. [Laughter].

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HISCOCK. The committee appointed on the part of the House to wait upon the President of the United States, in conjunction with the committee appointed on behalf of the Senate, have performed that duty and report that the President has requested them to inform the two Houses of Congress that he has no further communication to make to them.

VALEDICTORY OF THE SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen, the time has come when our official relations as Representatives in the Forty-seventh Congress are to be dissolved. In a moment more this House of Representatives will be known only in history. Its acts will stand, many of them, it is believed, through the future history of the Republic.

On the opening day of this Congress I ventured the suggestion and the expressions of a hope that it should be marked "as peculiarly a business Congress."

It has successfully grappled with more of the vital, material, and moral questions of the country than its predecessors. Many of these have been settled wisely and well by appropriate legislation. It would be quite impossible at this time to enumerate the many important laws which have been enacted to foster and promote the substantial interests of the whole country.

This Congress enacted into a law the first 3 per cent. funding bill known to this country, and under it a considerable portion of the Government debt has been refunded at lower rates than ever before.

It did not hesitate to take hold of the question of polygamy, and it is believed it has struck the first effective blow in the direction of destroying that greatest remaining public crime of the age.

Laws have been passed to protect the immigrant on his way across the sea and upon his arrival in the ports of this country.

Laws have also been passed to extend the charters of the banking institutions so that financial disorder can not take place which would otherwise have come at the expiration of old bank charters.

Many public acts will be found relating to the Indian policy and the land policy of this country which will prove to be wise.

The post-office laws have been so changed as to reduce letter postage from 3 to 2 cents, the lowest rate ever known in the United States.

No legislation of this Congress will be found upon the statute-books revolutionary in character or which will oppress any section or individual in the land. All legislation has been in the direction of relief.

Pension laws have been enacted which are deemed wise, and liberal appropriations have been made to pay the deserving and unfortunate pensioner.

Internal-revenue taxes have been taken off and the tariff laws have been revised.

Sectionalism has been unknown in the enactment of laws.

In the main a fraternal spirit has prevailed among the members from all portions of the Union. What has been said in the heat of debate and under excitement and sometimes with provocation is not to be regarded in determining the genuine feeling of concord existing between members. The high office I have filled through the sessions of this Congress has enabled me to judge better of the true spirit of the members that compose it than I could otherwise have done.

It is common to say that the House of Representatives is a very turbulent and disorderly body of men. This is true more in appearance than in reality. Those who look on and do not participate see more apparent confusion than exists in reality. The disorder that often appears upon the floor of the House grows out of an earnest, active spirit possessed by members coming from all sections of the United States, and indicates in a high degree their strong individuality and their great zeal in trying to secure recognition in the prompt discharge of their duty. No more conscientious body of men than compose this House of Representatives, in my opinion, ever met. Partisan zeal has in some instances led to fierce word-contests on the floor, but when the occasion which gave rise to it passed by party spirit went with it.

I am very thankful for the considerate manner in which I have been treated by the House in its collective capacity. I am also very thankful to each individual member of this body for his personal treatment of me. I shall lay down the gavel and the high office you clothed me with, filled with good feeling toward each member of this House. I have been at times impatient and sometimes severe with members, but I have never purposely harshly treated any member. I have become warmly attached to and possessed of a high admiration not only for the high character of this House as a parliamentary body, but for all its individual members. I heartily thank the House for its vote of thanks.

The duties of a Speaker are of the most delicate and critical kind. His decisions are in the main made without time for deliberation, and are often very far-reaching and controlling in the legislation of the country on important matters, and they call out the severest criticism. The rules of this House which leave to the Speaker the onerous duty and delicate task of recognizing individuals to present their matters for legislation render the office in that respect an exceedingly unpleasant one. No member should have the legislation he desires depend upon the individual recognition of the Speaker, and no Speaker should be compelled to decide between members having matters of possibly equal importance or of equal right to his recognition.

I suggest here that the time will soon come when another mode will have to be adopted which will relieve both the Speaker and individual members from this exceedingly embarrassing if not dangerous power.

During my administration in the chair very many important questions have been decided by me, and I do not flatter myself that I have in the hurry of these decisions made no mistakes. But I do take great pride in being able to say that no parliamentary decision of mine has been overruled by the judgment of this almost evenly politically balanced House, although many appeals have been taken.

I congratulate each member of this House upon what has been accomplished by him in the discharge of the important duties of a Representative, and with the sincerest hope that all may return safely to their homes, and wishing each a successful and happy future during life, I now exercise my last official duty as presiding officer of this House by declaring the term of this House under the Constitution of the United States at an end, and that it shall stand adjourned sine die. [Hearty and continued applause.]

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory relative to the military reservation of Fort Keogh—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
